twilight, are owing. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.
2. Cheerfulness; merriment; levity.
LIGNA'LOES. n. f. [lignum aloes, Latin.] Aloes wood.
The vallies spread forth as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lignales which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the water. Nun. xxiv. 6.
- LIGNEOUS. adj. [ligneus, Latin; ligneux, French.] Made of wood; wooden; resembling wood.
It should be tried with shoots of vines, and roots of red roses; for it may be they, being of a more lignous nature, will incorporate with the tree itself. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Ten thousand seeds of the plant harts-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn: now the covers, and the true body of each seed, the parenchymous and lignous part of both, and the fibres of those parts, multiplied one by another, afford a hundred thousand millions of formed atoms, but how many more we cannot define. Grew's Cosmol.
- LIGNUMVITÆ. n. f. [Lar.] Guaiacum; a very hard wood.
It hath pinnated leaves; the flower consists of several petals, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose; the point of the flower, which arises from the center of the calyx, becomes a fleshy, roundish, stony fruit, or the stony seeds are surrounded with a thin pulp. Miller.
- LIGURE. n. f. A precious stone.
The third row a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst. Exod.
- LIKE. adj. [lic, Saxon; lijk, Dutch.]
1. Resembling; having resemblance. Ezek. xxxi. 2.
Whom art thou like in thy greatness?
His son, or one of his illustrious name,
How like the former, and almost the same. Dryd. Æn.
As the earth was designed for the being of men, why might not all other planets be created for the like uses, each for their own inhabitants. Bentley's Sermons.
This plan, as laid down by him, looks like an universal art than a distinct logic. Baker's Reflect. on Learning.
2. Equal; of the same quantity.
More clergymen were impoverished by the late war, than ever in the like space before. Sprat's Sermons.
3. [For likely.] Probable; credible.
The trials were made, and it is like that the experiment would have been effectual. Bacon's Natural History.
4. Likely; in a state that gives probable expectations. 'This is, I think, an improper, though frequent, use.
If the duke continues these favours towards you, you are like to be much advanced. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.
He is like to die for hunger, for there is no more bread.
Jer. xxxviii. 9.
The yearly value thereof is already increased double of that it was within these few years, and is like daily to rise higher, till it amount to the price of our land in England. Davies.
Hopton resolved to visit Waller's quarters, that he might judge whether he were like to pursue his purpose. Clarendon.
Many were not easy to be governed, nor like to conform themselves to strict rules. Clarendon, b. viii.
If his rules of reason be not better suited to the Mind than his rules for health are fitted to our bodies, he is not like to be much followed. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
- LIKE. n. f. [This substantive is seldom more than the adjective used elliptically; the like for the like thing, or like person.]
1. Some person or thing resembling another.
He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again. Shakspeare. Hamlet.
Every like is not the same, O Cæsar. Shakspeare. Jul. Cæsar.
Though there have been greater fleets for number, yet for the bulk of the ships never the like. Bacon's War with Spain.
Albeit an eagle did bear away a lamb in her talons, yet a raven endeavouring to do the like was held entangled. Hayward.
One offers, and in offering makes a stay;
Another forward sets, and doth no more;
A third the like. Daniel's Civil War.
- By conversation with his like to help,
Or solace his defects. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.
Two likes may be mistaken. L'Estrange's Fab.
She'd study to reform the men,
Or add some grains of folly more,
To women than they had before;
This might their mutual fancy strike,
Since ev'ry being loves its like. Swift.
2. Near approach; a state like to another state. A sense common, but not just.
Report being carried secretly from one to another in my ship, had like to have been my utter overthrow. Raleigh.
- LIKE. adv.
1. In the same manner; in the same manner as.
The joyous nymphs, and lightfoot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet;
Now hearing them so heavily lament,
Like heavily lamenting from them went. Spenser.

LIK

- Like* as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. Psal. ciii. 13.
Are we proud and passionate, malicious and revengeful?
Is this to be like-minded with Christ, who was meek and lowly? Tillotson's Sermons.
- What will be my confusion; when he sees me Neglected, and forsaken like himself. Philips's Dist. Mother.
They roar'd like lions caught in toils, and rag'd:
The man knew what they were, who heretofore
Had seen the like lie murder'd on the shore. Waller.
2. In such a manner as befits.
Be strong, and quit yourselves like men. 1 Sam. iv. 9.
3. Likely; probably. A popular use not analogical.
I like the work well, ere it be demanded, Shakspeare.
As like enough it will, I'd have it copied. Shakspeare.
- TO LIKE. v. a. [lican, Saxon; liken, Dutch.]
1. To chuse with some degree of preference.
As nothing can be so reasonably spoken as to content all men, so this speech was not of them all liked. Kneller.
He gave such an account as made it appear that he liked the design. Clarendon, b. viii.
We like our present circumstances well, and dream of no change. Aitken's Sermons.
2. To approve; to view with approbation, not fondness.
He stayed behind to bring the shepherds with whom he meant to confer to breed the better Zelamane's liking, which he only regarded. Sidney, b. i.
Though they did not like the evil he did, yet they liked him that did the evil. Sidney, b. ii.
He grew content to mark their speeches, then to marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company. Sidney.
He proceeded from looking to liking, and from liking to loving. Sidney.
- For several virtues
I have lik'd several women; never any
With so full soul. Shakspeare's Tempest.
I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye;
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakspeare.
Scarce any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself. South's Sermons.
- Beasts can like, but not distinguish too,
Nor their own liking by reflection know. Dryden.
3. To please; to be agreeable to. Now disused.
Well hoped he, ere long that hardy guest,
If ever covetous hand, or lustful eye,
Or lips he laid on thing that lik'd him best,
Should be his prey. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Say, my fair brother now, if this device
Do like you, or may you to like entice. Hubbard's Tale.
This desire being recommended to her majesty, it lik'd her to include the same within one entire leaf. Bacon.
He shall dwell where it liketh him best. Deut. xxiii. 16.
There let them learn, as likes them, to despise
God and Messiah. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
- TO LIKE. v. n.
1. To be pleased with, with of before the thing approved.
Obsolete.
Of any thing more than of God they could not by any means like, as long as whatsoever they knew besides God, they apprehended it not in itself without dependancy upon God. Hooker, b. i.
The young soldiers did with such cheerfulness like of this resolution, that they thought two days a long delay. Kneller.
It is true, there are limits to be set betwixt the boldness and rashness of a poet; but he must understand those limits who pretends to judge, as well as he who undertakes to write; and he who has no liking to the whole, ought in reason to be excluded from censuring of the parts. Dryden.
2. To chuse; to lift; to be pleased.
The man likes not to take his brother's wife. Deut. xxv. 7.
He that has the prison doors set open is perfectly at liberty, because he may either go or stay, as he best likes. Locke.
- LIKELIHOOD. n. f. [from likely.]
- LIKELINESS. n. f. [from likely.]
1. Appearance; shew. Obsolete.
What of his heart perceive you in his face,
By any likelihood he shew'd to-day?
That with no man here he is offended. Shakspeare.
2. Resemblance; likeness. Obsolete.
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
Like to the senators of antique Rome,
Go forth and fetch their conquering Cæsar in.
As by a low, but loving likelihood,
Were now the general of our gracious empress,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
How many would the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him. Shakspeare's Henry V.
There is no likelihood between pure light and black darkness, or between righteousness and reprobation. Raleigh.
3. Probability; verisimilitude; appearance of truth.
As it noteth one such to have been in that age, so had there

LIK

there been moe, it would by likelihood as well have noted many.
 Many of likelihood informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe nor misdoubt.
Hooker, b. ii.
Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.
 It never yet did hurt,
 To lay down likelihood, and forms of hope. Shakespeare.
 As there is no likelihood that the place could be so altered, so is there no probability that these rivers were turned out of their courses. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 Where things are least to be put to the venture, as the eternal interests of the other world ought to be; there every, even the least, probability, or likelihood of danger, should be provided against. South's Sermons.
 There are predictions of our Saviour recorded by the Evangelists, which were not completed till after their deaths, and had no likelihood of being to when they were pronounced by our blessed Saviour. Addison on the Christian Religion.
 Thus, in all likelihood, would it be with a libertine, who should have a visit from the other world: the first horror it raised would go off, as new diversions come on. Atterbury.
LYKELY, adj. [from like.]
 1. Such as may be liked; such as may please. Obsolete.
 These young companions make themselves believe they love at the first looking of a likely beauty. Sidney.
 Sir John, they are your likely men; I would have you served with the best. Shakespeare, Henry IV. p. ii.
 2. Probable; such as may in reason be thought or believed; such as may be thought more reasonably than the contrary. Shakespeare, Henry IV. p. ii.
LYKELY, adv. Probably; as may reasonably be thought.
 While man was innocent, he was likely ignorant of nothing that imported him to know. Glanville's Scip.
 To LYKEN, v. a. [from like.] To represent as having resemblance; to compare.
 The prince broke your head for likening him to a finging man of Windfor. Shakespeare, Henry IV. p. ii.
 For who, though with the tongue
 Of angels, can relate? or to what things
 Liken on earth conspicuous, that may lift
 Human imagination to such height
 Of God-like power? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
LYKENESS, n. f. [from like.]
 1. Resemblance; similitude.
 They all do live, and moved are
 To multiply the likeness of their kind. Spenser.
 A translator is to make his author appear as charming as he can, provided he maintains his character, and makes him not unlike himself. Translation is a kind of drawing after the life, where there is a double sort of likeness, a good one and a bad one. Dryden.
 In such cases there will be found a better likeness, and a worse; and the better is constantly to be chosen. Dryden.
 2. Form; appearance.
 Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain. Shak.
 It is safer to stand upon our guard against an enemy in the likeness of a friend, than to embrace any man for a friend in the likeness of an enemy. L'Estrange.
 3. One who resembles another.
 Poor Cupid, sobbing, scarce could speak,
 Indeed mamma, I did not know ye:
 Alas! how easy my mistake?
 I took you for your likeness Cloe. Prior.
LYKEWISE, adv. [like and wise.] In like manner; also; moreover; too.
 Jesus said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell me, I likewise will tell you by what authority I do these things. Mat. xxi. 24.
 So was it in the decay of the Roman empire, and likewise in the empire of Almaine, after Charles the Great, every bird taking a feather. Bacon's Essays.
 Spirit of vitriol poured to pure unmixed serum, coagulates it as if it had been boiled. Spirit of sea-salt makes a perfect coagulation of the serum likewise, but with some different phenomena. Arbutnot on Aliments.
LYKING, adj. [Perhaps because plumpness is agreeable to the sight.] Plump; in a state of plumpness.
 I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink; for why should he see your faces worse liking, than the children which are of your fort. Dan. i. 10.
LYKING, n. f. [from like.]
 1. Good state of body; plumpness.
 I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 Their young ones are in good liking; they grow up with corn. Job xxxix. 4.
 Cappadocian slaves were famous for their lustriness; and, being in good liking, were set on a stall when exposed to sale, to shew the good habit of their body. Dryden's Notes to Pers.
 2. State of trial.

LIM

The royal foul, that, like the lab'ring moon,
 By charms of art was hurried down;
 Forc'd with regret to leave her native sphere,
 Came but awhile on liking here. Dryden.
 3. Inclination.
 Why do you longer feed on loathed light,
 Or liking find to gaze on earthly mold. Fairy Queen.
LYLACH, n. f. [lilas, lilas, French.] A tree.
 The white thorn is in leaf, and the lilach tree. Bacon.
LYLIED, adj. [from lily.] Embellished with lilies.
 Nymphs and shepherds dance no more
 By fandy Lodon's lilted banks. Milton.
LYLY, n. f. [lilium, Latin.]
 The lily hath a bulbous root, consisting of several fleshy scales adhering to an axis; the stalk is greatly furnished with leaves; the flower is composed of six leaves, and is shaped somewhat like a bell: in some species the petals are greatly reflexed, but in others but little; from the centre of the flower rises the pointal, which becomes an oblong fruit, commonly triangular, divided into three cells, and full of compressed seeds, which are bordered, lying upon each other in a double row. There are thirty-two species of this plant, including white lilies, orange lilies, red lilies, and martagons of various sorts. Miller.
 Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands
 Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
 And make the silken strings delight to kiss them;
 He would not then have touch'd them for his life. Shakespeare.
 Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom where no pity!
 No friends! no hope! no kindred weep for me!
 Almost no grave allow'd me! like the lily,
 That once was mistress of the field, and flourish'd,
 I'll hang my head, and perish. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
 Arnus, a river of Italy, is drawn like an old man, by his right side a lion, holding forth in his right paw a red lily, or flower-de-luce. Peacham on Drawing.
 Take but the humblest lily of the field;
 And if our pride will to our reason yield;
 It must by sure comparison be shown,
 That on the regal seat great David's son,
 Array'd in all his robes, and types of pow'r, Shines with less glory than that simple flow'r. Prior.
 Go, gentle gales, and bear my sighs along:
 For her the feather'd quires forget their song,
 For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.
LYLY-DAFFODIL, n. f. [lilio-narcissus.] A foreign flower.
LYLY-HYACINTH, n. f. [lilio-hyacinthus.]
 It hath a lily flower, composed of six leaves, shaped like the flower of hyacinth, whose pointal becomes a globular pointed fruit, three-cornered, and divided into three cells, in which are contained many seeds, almost round: the roots are scaly, and shaped like those of the lily. There are three species of this plant; one with a blue flower, another white, and a third red. Miller.
LYLY of the Valley, or May lily, n. f. [lilium convallium.]
 The flower consists of one leaf, is shaped like a bell, and divided at the top into six segments; the ovary becomes a soft globular fruit, containing several round seeds. It is very common in shady woods.
Lily of the valley has a strong root that runs into the ground. Mortimer's Husbandry.
LYLYLYVERED, adj. [lily and liver.] Whitelivered; cowardly.
 A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats; a bafe, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited, hundred pound, filthy worsted-stocking knave; a lilylivered, action-taking knave. Shakespeare's King Lear.
LYMATURE, n. f. [limatura, Lat.] Filings of any metal; the particles rubbed off by a file.
LYMB, n. f. [lim, Saxon and Scottish; lomb, Danish.]
 1. A member; a jointed or articulated part of animals.
 A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
 And large proportion of his strong knit limbs. Shakespeare.
 O! that I had her here, to tear her limb meal. Shakespeare.
 Now am I come each limb to survey;
 If thy appearance answer loud report. Milton's Agonistes.
 2. [Limbe, French; limbus, Latin.] An edge; a border. A philosophical word.
 By farther moving the prism about, the colours again emerged out of the whiteness, the violet and the blue at its inward limb, and at its outward limb the red and yellow. Newton's Opticks.
 To LIMB, v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To supply with limbs.
 As they please,
 They limb themselves, and colour, shape, and size
 Assume, as likes them best, condense, or rare. Milton.
 2. To tear asunder; to dismember.
LYMBECK, n. f. [corrupted by popular pronunciation from alembick.] A still.
 Her cheeks, on which this streaming nectar fell,
 Still'd through the limbeck of her diamond eyes. Fairfax.

LIM

All others from all things draw all that's good, Life, soul, form, spirit, where they being have;
 I, by love's limbeck. Donne.
 Fires of Spain, and the line,
 Whose countries limbeck to our bodies be,
 Canst thou for gain bear? Donne.
 Call up, unbound,
 In various shapes, old Proteus from the sea,
 Drain'd through a limbeck to his naked form. Milton.
 The earth, by secret conveyances, lets in the sea, and sends it back fresh, her bowels serving for a limbeck. Howell.
 He first survey'd the charge with careful eyes,
 Yct judg'd, like vapours that from limbeck rise,
 It would in richer showers descend again. Dryden.
 The warm limbeck draws
 Salubrious waters from the nocent brood. Philips.
LYMBED, adj. [from limb.] Formed with regard to limbs.
 A steer of five years age, large limb'd, and fed,
 To Jove's high altars Agamemnon led. Pope's Iliad.
LYMBER, adj. Flexible; easily bent; pliant; lithe.
 You put me off with limber vows. Shakespeare.
 I wonder how, among these jealousies of court and state,
 Edward Atheling could submit, being then the apparent and indubitate heir of the Saxon line: but he had tried, and found him a prince of limber virtues; so as though he might have some place in his caution, yet he reckoned him beneath his fear. Watson.
 At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
 Insect, or worm: to those way'd their limber fans
 For wings; and smallest lineaments exact
 In all the liveries deck'd of Summer's pride. Milton.
 She durst never stand at the bay, having nothing but her long soft limber ears to defend her. More on Atheism.
 The muscles were strong on both sides of the aspera arteria, but on the under side, opposite to that of the oesophagus, very limber. Ray on Creation.

LYMBERNES, n. f. [from limber.] Flexibility; pliancy.
LYMBO, n. f. [lō quod sit limbus inferorum. Du Cange.]
 1. A region bordering upon hell, in which there is neither pleasure nor pain. Popularly hell.
 No, he is in tartar limbo, worse than hell,
 A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,
 One whose hard hand is button'd up with steel. Shakespeare.
 Oh what a sympathy of woe is this!
 As far from help as limbo is from bliss. Shakespeare.
 All these up-whirl'd aloft
 Fly o'er the backside of the world far off,
 Into a limbo large, and broad, since call'd
 The paradise of fools. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
 2. Any place of misery and restraint.
 For he no sooner was at large,
 But Trulla straight brought on the charge;
 And in the self-same limbo put
 The knight and squire, where he was shut. Hudibras.
 Friar, thou art come off thyself, but poor I am left in limbo. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
LIME, n. f. [lim, zelýman, Saxon, to glue.]
 1. A viscous substance drawn over twigs, which catches and entangles the wings of birds that light upon it.
 Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net or lime,
 The pitfall, nor the gin. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 You must lay lime, to tangle her desires,
 By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
 Should be full fraught with serviceable vows. Shakespeare.
 Monster, come put some lime upon your fingers, and away with the rest. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 Jollier of this state
 Than are new-benefic'd ministers, he throws,
 Like nets or lime twigs, whoso'er he goes,
 His title of barrister on every wench. Donne.
 A poor thrush was taken with a bush of lime twigs. L'Estrange's Fables.
 Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,
 And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround. Dryden.
 Or court a wife, spread out his wily parts
 Like nets, or lime twigs, for rich widows hearts. Pope.
 2. Matter of which mortar is made: so called because used in cement.
 There are so many species of lime stone, that we are to understand by it in general any stone that, upon a proper degree of heat, becomes a white calx, which will make a great conbustion and noise on being thrown into water, falling into a loose white powder at the bottom. The lime we have in London is usually made of chalk, which is weaker than that made of stone. Hill's Materia Medica.
 They were now, like sand without lime, ill bound together, especially as many as were English, who were at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful to their side. Bacon's Henry VII.

LIM

As when a lofty pile is rais'd,
 We never hear the workmen prais'd,
 Who bring the lime, or place the stones,
 But all admire Inigo Jones. Swift.
Lim is commonly made of chalk, or of any sort of stone that is not sandy, or very cold; as freestone, &c. Mortimer.
LIME tree, or LINDEN, n. f.
 [Lims, Saxon.] The linden tree.
 The flower consists of several leaves, placed orbicularly, in the form of a rose, having a long narrow leaf growing to the footstalk of each cluster of flowers, from whose cup rises the pointal, which becomes tecticated, of one capsule, containing an oblong seed. The timber is used by carvers and turners. These trees continue found many years, and grow to a considerable bulk. Sir Thomas Brown mentions one, in Norfolk, sixteen yards in circuit. Millar.
 Go, gentle gales! and bear my sighs along.
 For her the limes their pleasing shades deny,
 For her the limes hang their heads, and die. Pope.
 4. A species of lemon. [lime, French.]
 Bear me, Pomona! to thy citron groves;
 To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
 With the deep orange glowing through the green,
 Their lighter glories blend. Thomson's Summer.
 To LIME, v. a. [from lime.]
 1. To entangle; to ensnare.
 Oh bosome, black as death!
 Oh limed foul, that, struggling to be free,
 Art more engaged. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 Example, that so terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot, for all that, dissuade succellion; but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them. Shakespeare.
 The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
 With trembling wings misdoubeth ev'ry bush;
 And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
 Have now the fatal object in my eye,
 Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
 2. To smear with lime.
 Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
 And place a quire of such enticing birds,
 That she will light to listen to their lays. Shakespeare.
 Those twigs in time will come to be limed, and then you are all lost if you do but touch them. L'Estrange.
 3. To cement.
 I will not ruin my father's house,
 Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
 And set up Lancaster. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
 4. To manure ground with lime.
 The reason why they did so was, because of the encouragement which that abatement of interest gave to landlords and tenants, to improve by draining, marling, and liming. Chilid.
 All sorts of pease love limed or marled land. Mortimer.
LYMEKILN, n. f. [lime and kiln.] Kiln where stones are burnt to lime.

 A list the cobbler's temples ties, Swift.
 To keep the hair out of his eyes.
 5. A border.
 They thought it better to let them stand as a list, or marginal border, unto the Old Testament.
To LIST. v. n. [lystan, Saxon.] To chuse; to desire; to be disposed; to incline.
 Let other men think of your devices as they list, in my judgment they be mere fanesies.
 Unto them that add to the word of God what them listeth, and make God's will submit unto their will, and break God's commandments for their own traditions' sake, unto them it seemeth not good.
 They imagine, that laws which permit them not to do as they would, will endure them to speak as they list. Hooker.
 To fight in field, or to defend this wall,
 Point what you list, I nought refuse at all. Fairy Queen.
 Now by my mother's son, and that's myself,
 It shall be moon, or star, or what I list. Shakespeare.

LIS

Kings, lords of times, and of occasions, may Take their advantage when, and how, they list. Daniel.
 When they list, into the womb
 That bred them, they return; and howl, and gnaw
 My bowels, their repast. Milton's Paradise Lost.
To LIST. v. a. [from list, a roll.]
 1. To enlist; to enrol or register.

 Of ever listless loit'ers, that attend
 No cause, no trust. Pope.
 I was listless and desponding. Gulliver.
 2. Careless; heedless.
 The sick for air before the portal gasp,
 Or idle in their empty hives remain,
 Benum'd with cold, and listless of their gain. Dryden.
LI'STLESSLY. adv. [from listless.] Without thought; without attention.
 To know this perfectly, watch him at play, and see whether he be stirring and active, or whether he lazily and listlessly dreams away his time. Locke on Education.
LI'STLESSNESS. n. f. [from listless.] Inattention; want of desire.
 It may be the palate of the soul is indisposed by listlessness or sorrow.
LIT. the preterite of light; whether to light signifies to happen, or to set on fire, or guide with light.
 Believe thyself, thy eyes,
 That first inflam'd, and lit me to thy love,
 Those stars, that still must guide me to my joy. Southey.
 I lit my pipe with the paper. Addison's Spectator.
LITANY. n. f. [litania; litania, French.] A form of supplicatory prayer.

 Recollect your sins that you have done that week, and all your life-time; and recite humbly and devoutly some penitential litanies. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
LIT'ERAL. adj. [literal, French; litera, Latin.]
 1. According to the primitive meaning, not figurative.
 Through all the writings of the ancient fathers, we see that the words, which were, do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use, and are as so many notes of remembrance unto us, that what they did signify in the letter, is accomplished in the truth. Hooker, b. iv.
 A foundation, being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to an house, or other building, nor figurative, but what is founded in that, and deduced from thence. Hammond.
 2. Following the letter, or exact words.
 The fittest for public audience are such as, following a middle course between the rigour of literal translations and the liberty of paraphrases, do with greater shortness and plainness deliver the meaning. Hooker, b. v.
 3. Consisting of letters; as, the literal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the cyphers.
LIT'ERAL. n. f. Primitive or literal meaning.
 How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions unto the people, and what absurd conceits they will swallow in their literals, an example we have in our profession. Brown's Vulg. Errors, b. iv.
LIT'ERALLY. adv. [from literal.]
 1. According to the primitive import of words; not figuratively.
 That a man and his wife are one flesh, I can comprehend the meaning of; yet literally taken, it is a thing impossible. Swift.
 2. With close adherence to words.
 Endeavouring to turn his Nisus and Euryalus as close as I was able, I have performed that episode too literally; that giving more scope to Mezentius and Lausus, that version, which has more of the majesty of Virgil, has less of his conciseness. Dryden.
 So wild and ungovernable a poet cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain. Dryden.
LIT'ERALLY. n. f. [from literal.] Original meaning.
 Not attaining the true deuterocopy and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superconsonances, coherences, figures, or tropologies, and are not sometimes persuaded by fire beyond their literalities. Brown.
LIT'ERATI. n. f. [Italian.] The learned.
 I shall consult some literati on the project sent me for the discovery of the longitude. Spektor, No. 581.

 This kingdom hath been famous for good literature; and if preferment attend deservers, there will not want supplies. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
 When men of learning are acted by a knowledge of the world of its usefulness, they give a reputation to literature, and convince the world of its usefulness. Addison's Freeholder, No. 377.
LIT'ERATURE. n. f. [litharge, French; lithargyrum, Latin.]
Litharge is properly lead vitrified, either alone or with a mixture of copper. This recement is of two kinds, litharge of gold, and litharge of silver. It is collected from the furnaces where silver is separated from lead, or from those where gold and silver are purified by means of that metal. The litharge sold in the shops is produced in the copper works, where lead has been used to purify that metal, or to separate silver from it. It is used in ointments and plaisters, and is drying, abtergent, and slightly attriictive. Hill's Mat. Med.
 I have seen some parcels of glass adhering to the test or cupel as well as the gold or litharge. Boyle.
 If the lead be blown off from the silver by the bellows, it will, in great part, be collected in the form of a darkish powder; which, because it is blown off from silver, they call litharge of silver. Boyle.
LITHE. adj. [lith, Saxon.] Limber; flexible; pliant; easily bent.
 Th' unwieldy elephant,
 To make them mirth, us'd all his might, and wretch'd
 His lithe proboscis. Milton's Paradise Lost.
LIT'HESS. n. f. [from lithe.] Limberness; flexibility.
LIT'HER. adj. [from lithe.] Soft; pliant.
 Thou antick, death,
 Two Talbots winged through the lither sky,
 In thy despatch shall 'scape mortality. Shakespeare.
 [Lyden, Saxon.] Bad; sorry; corrupt. It is in the work of Robert of Gloucester written luther.
LITHOGRAPHY. n. f. [lithos; and γραφω.] The art or practice of engraving upon stones.
LITHOMANCY. n. f. [lithos; and μανία.] Prediction by stones.
 As strange must be the lithomancy, or divination, from this stone, whereby Helenus the prophet foretold the destruction of Troy. Brown's Vulg. Errors, b. ii.
LITHONTRIPTICK. adj. [lithos; and τριπτεω; lithontripique, French.] Any medicine proper to dissolve the stone in the kidneys or bladder.
LITHOTOMIST. n. f. [lithos; and τομή.] A chirurgeon who extracts the stone by opening the bladder.
LITHOTOMY. n. f. [lithos; and τομή.] The art or practice of cutting for the stone.
LITIGANT. n. f. [litigant, Latin; litigant, French.] One engaged in a suit of law.
 The cast litigant sits not down with one cross verdict, but recommences his suit. Deacy of Piety.
 The litigants tear one another to pieces for the benefit of some third interest. L'Estrange's Fables.
LITIGANT. adj. Engaged in a juridical contest.
 Judicial acts are those writings and matters which relate to judicial proceedings, and are sped in open court at the instance of one or both of the parties litigant. Ayliffe's Parerg.
To LITIGATE. v. a. [litigo, Latin.] To contest in law; to debate by judicial process.
To LITIGATE. v. n. To manage a suit; to carry on a cause.
 The appellant, after the interposition of an appeal, still litigates in the same cause. Ayliffe's Parergon.
LITIGATION. n. f. [litigatio, Latin; from litigate.] Judicial contest; suit of law.
 Never one clergyman had experience of both litigations, that hath not confessed, he had rather have three suits in Westminster-hall, than one in the arches. Clarendon.
LITIGIOUS. adj. [litigiosus, French.]
 1. Inclined to law-suits; quarrelsome; wrangling.
 Soldiers find wars, and lawyers find out still Litigious men, who quarrels move. Donne.
 His great application to the law, had not infected his temper with any thing positive or litigious. Addison.
 2. Disputable; controvertible.
 In litigious and controverted causes, the will of God is to have them to do whatsoever the sentence of judicial and final decision shall determine. Hooker.
 No fences parted fields, nor marks, nor bounds, Distinguish'd acres of litigious grounds. Dryden's Georg.
LITIGIOUSLY. adv. [from litigious.] Wranglingly.
LITIGIOUSNESS. n. f. [from litigious.] A wrangling disposition.
LIT'TER. n. f. [littere, French.]
 1. A kind of vehicular bed; a carriage capable of containing a bed hung between two horses.
 To my litter strait;
 Weakness posseth me. Shakespeare's King John.
 He was carried in a rich chariot litterwise, with two horses at each end. Bacon's New Atlantis.
 The drowsy frightened steeds,
 That draw the litter of close curtain'd sleep. Milton.
 Here modest matrons in soft litters driv'n,
 In solemn pomp appear. Dryden's Æn.
Litters thick besiege the donor's gate,
 And begging lords and teeming ladies wait
 The promis'd dote. Dryden's Juvenal.
 2. The straw laid under animals, or on plants.
 To crouch in litter of your stable planks. Shakespeare.
 Take off the litter from your kernel beds. Evelyn.
 Their litter is not tois'd by fows unclean. Dryd. Virg.
 3. A brood of young.

15 O

I do

I do here walk before thee like a fow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Reflect upon that numerous litter of strange, senseless opinions, that crawl about the world. South's Sermon.
A wolf came to a fow, and very kindly offered to take care of her litter. L'Estrange's Fables.

Full many a year his hateful head had been
For tribute paid, nor since in Cambria seen:
The last of all the litter 'scap'd by chance,
And from Geneva first infected France. Dryden.

Any number of things thrown fluttishly about.
Strophon, who found the room was void,
Stole in, and took a strict survey
Of all the litter as it lay. Swift.

A birth of animals.
Fruitful as the fow that carry'd
The thirty pigs at one large litter farrow'd. Dryd. Juu.
To LITTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bring forth: used of beasts, or of human beings in abhorrence or contempt.

Then was this island,
Save for the son that she did litter here,
A freckled whelp, hag-born, not honour'd with A human shape. Shakespeare's Tempest.

My father named me Auctolicus, being littered under Mercury, who, as I am, was likewise a snapper up of unconsidered trifles. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The whelps of bears are, at first littering, without all form or fashion. Hakewill on Providence.
We might conceive that dogs were created blind, because we observe they were littered so with us. Brown.

2. To cover with things negligently, or fluttishly scattered about.

They found
The room with volumes litter'd round. Swift.

3. To cover with straw.
He found a stall where oxen stood,
But for his ease well litter'd was the floor. Dryden.

4. To supply cattle with bedding.

LITTER. adj. [comp. less, superlat. least; leitels, Gothick; lytel, Saxon.]

1. Small in quantity.
The coast of Dan went out too little for them. Josh. xix.

2. Not great; small; diminutive; of small bulk.
He fought to see Jesus, but could not for the press, because he was little of stature. Luke xix. 3.
His son, being then very little, I considered only as wax, to be moulded as one pleases. Locke.

3. Of small dignity, power, or importance.
When thou wast little in thine own light, wast thou not made the head of the tribes. 1 Sam. xv. 17.
All that is past ought to seem little to thee, because it is so in itself. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

4. Not much; not many.
Some; not none.
I leave him to reconcile these contradictions, which may plentifully be found in him, by any one who will but read with a little attention. Locke.

LITTLE. n. f.

1. A small space.
Much was in little writ; and all convey'd
With cautious care, for fear to be betray'd. Dryden.

2. A small part; a small proportion.
He that despiseth little things, shall perish by little and little. Ecclesi.

The poor remnant of human seed which remained in their mountains, peopled their country again slowly, by little and little. Bacon's New Atlantis.

By freeing the precipitated matter from the rest by filtration, and diligently grinding the white precipitate with water, the mercury will little by little be gathered into drops. Boyle.

I gave thee thy master's house, and the house of Israel and Judah; and if that had been too little, I would have given such and such things. 2 Sam. xii. 8.

They have much of the poetry of Mæcenas, but little of his liberality. Dryden's Preface to All for Love.

Nor grudge I thee the much that Grecians give,
Nor murmuring take the little I receive. Dryden's Homer.
There are many expressions, which carrying with them no clear ideas, are like to remove but little of my ignorance. Locke.

3. A slight affair.
As if 'twere little from their town to chafe,
I through the seas pursued their exil'd race. Dryden's Æn.
I view with anger and disdain,
How little gives thee joy or pain:
A print, a bronze, a flow'r, a root. Prior.

4. Not much.
Those they are fitted for, and little else. Cheyne.

LITTLE. adv.

1. In a small degree.
The received definition of names should be changed as little as possible. Watts's Logick.

2. In a small quantity.
In some degree, but not great.

3. Where there is too great a thinness in the fluids, subacid substances are proper, though they are a little astringent. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. Not much.
The tongue of the just is as choice silver; the heart of the wicked is little worth. Prov. x. 20.
Finding him little studious, she chose rather to endue him with conversative qualities of youth; as, dancing and fencing. Wotton.

That poem was infamously bad; this parallel is little better. Dryden's Disfranchisement.

Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons were very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers. Swift.

LITTLENESS. n. f. [from little.]

1. Smallness of bulk.
All trying, by a love of littleness,
To make abridgments, and to draw to less;
Even that nothing which at first we were. Donne.

We may suppose a great many degrees of littleness and lightness in these earthy particles, so as many of them might float in the air. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Meanness; want of grandeur.
The English and French, in verse, are forced to raise their language with metaphors, by the pompousness of the whole phrase, to wear off any littleness that appears in the particular parts. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

3. Want of dignity.
The angelick grandeur, by being concealed, does not awaken our poverty, nor mortify our littleness so much, as if it was always displayed. Cotter of Eves.

LITTOREAL. v. a. [littoris, Latin.] Belonging to the shore.

LITURGY. n. f. [λειτουργία, liturgia, Fr.] Form of prayers; formulary of public devotions.

We dare not admit any such form of liturgy, as either appointeth no scripture at all, or very little to be read in the church. Hooker, b. v.

The blessed of mortal wights began to be importuned, so that a great part of divine liturgy was addressed solely to her. Hawell.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful liturgy and means of impetration in this world. Taylor.

To LIVE. v. n. [lypan, lyrgan, Saxon.]

1. To be in a state of animation; to be not dead.
She shall be
A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Is't night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb,
When living day should kiss it? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To have the living, and revenge the dead,
Against one warrior's arms all Troy they led. Dryden.

2. To pass life in any certain manner with regard to habits; good or ill, happiness or misery.
O death, how bitter is the remembrance of thee to a man that liveth at rest. Ecclesi. xli. 1.
Dr. Parker, in his sermon before them, touched them so near for their living, that they went near to touch him for his life. Hayward.

The condition required of us is a conjuncture of all gospel graces rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not willfully lived and died in. Hammond.

A late prelate, of a remarkable zeal for the church, were religions to be tried by lives, would have lived down the pope, and the whole consistory. Atterbury.

If we act by several broken views, we shall live and die in misery. Addison's Spectator, N. 162.

If we are firmly resolved to live up to the dictates of reason, without any regard to wealth and reputation, we may go through life with steadiness and pleasure. Addison.

3. To continue in life.
Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, and pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Shakespeare.

See the minutes how they run;
How many makes the hour full complete,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year. Shakespeare.

How many years a mortal man may live.
The way to live long must be, to use our bodies so as is most agreeable to the rules of temperance. Ray on Creation.

4. To live emphatically; to be in a state of happiness.
What greater curse could envious fortune give,
Than just to die when I began to live. Dryden.

5. To

5. To be exempt from death, temporal or spiritual.
My statutes and judgments, if a man do, he shall live in them. Lev. xviii. 5.
He died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him. 1 Thes. v. 10.

6. To remain undestroyed.
It was a miraculous providence that could make a vessel, so ill manned, live upon sea; that kept it from being dashed against the hills, or overwhelmed in the deeps. Burnet.

Mark how the shifting winds from west arise,
And what collected night involves the skies!
Nor can our shaken vessels live at sea,
Much less against the tempest force their way. Dryden.

7. To continue; not to be lost.
Mens civil manners live in brags, their virtues
We write in water. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Sounds which address the ear are lost and die
In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye Lives long upon the mind; the faithful light Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

The tomb with many arms and trophies grace
There high in air memorial of my name
Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

8. To converse; to cohabit.
The shepherd swains shall dance and sing,
For thy delight each May morning.
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me, and be my love. Shakespeare.

9. To feed.
Those animals that live upon other animals have their flesh more alkalescent than those that live upon vegetables. Arbut.

10. To maintain one's self.
A most notorious thief; lived all his life-time of spoils and robberies. Spenser.

They which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple. 1 Cor. ix. 13.
His treasure and goods were all seized upon, and a small portion thereof appointed for his poor wife to live upon. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

The number of soldiers can never be great in proportion to that of people, no more than the number of those that are idle in a country, to that of those who live by labour. Temple.

He had been most of his time in good service, and had something to live on now he was old. Temple.

11. To be in a state of motion or vegetation.
In a spacious cave of living stone,
The tyrant Æolus, from his airy throne,
With pow'r imperial curbs the struggling winds. Dryden.

Cool groves and living lakes
Give after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dryden.

12. To be unextinguished.
Pure oil and incense on the fire they throw:
These gifts the greedy flames to dust devour,
Then on the living coals red wine they pour. Dryden.

LIVE. adj. [from live.]

1. Quick; not dead.
If one man's ox hurt another that he die, they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money. Exod. xxi. 35.

2. Active; not extinguished.
A louder sound was produced by the impetuous eruptions of the halituous flames of the saltpetre upon casting of a live coal upon it. Boyle.

LIVELESS. adv. [from live.] Wanting life; rather lifeless.
Description cannot suit itself in words,
To demonstrate the life of such a battle,
In life so liveless as it shews itself. Shakespeare's Henry V.

LIVELIHOOD. n. f. [It appears to me corrupted from livelode.]
Support of life; maintenance; means of living.
Ah! luckless babe! born under cruel star,
And in dead parents' baleful arms bred;
Full little weneest thou what sorrows are,

That rebellion drove the lady from thence, to find a livelihoood out of her own estate. Clarendon, b. viii.

He brings disgrace upon his character, to submit to the picking up of a livelihoood in that strolling way of canting and begging. L'Estrange.

It is their profession and livelihoood to get their living by those practices, for which they deserve to forfeit their lives. Saunders's Sermons.

They have been as often banished out of most other places; which must very much disperse a people, and oblige them to seek a livelihoood where they can find it. Addison's Spect.

Trade employs multitudes of hands, and furnishes the poorest of our fellow subjects with the opportunities of gaining an honest livelihoood: the skilful or industrious find their account in it. Addison's Freeholder, N. 42.

LIVELINESS. n. f. [from live.]

1. Appearance of life.
That liveliness which the freedom of the pencil makes appear, may seem the living hand of nature. Dryden's Dryfref.

2. Vivacity; sprightliness.
Extravagant young fellows, that have liveliness and spirit, come sometimes to be set right, and so make able and great men; but tame and low spirits very seldom attain to any thing. Locke on Education.

LIVELODE. n. f. [live and lade, from lead; the means of leading life.] Maintenance; support; livelihood.
She gave like blessing to each creature,
As well of worldly livelode as of life. Hubbard.

That there might be no difference nor strife. Hubbard.

LIVELONG. adj. [live and long.] Tedious; long in passing.
Many a time, and oft,
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
Your infants in your arms; and there have fate
The livelong day, with patient expectation
To see great Pompey pass. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The obscur'd bird clamour'd the livelong night. Shakespeare.
Young and old come forth to play,
On a sun-shine holiday,
Till the livelong day-light fail. Milton.

Seek for pleasure to destroy
The sorrows of this livelong night.
How could she fit the livelong day,
Yet never ask us once to play? Swift.

2. Lasting; durable.
Thou, in our wonder and astonishment,
Hast built thyself a livelong monument. Milton.

LIVELY. adj. [live and like.]

1. Brisk; vigorous; vivacious.
But wherefore comes old Manoa in such haste,
With youthful steps? much livelier than ere while
He seems; supposing here to find his son,
Or of him bringing to us some glad news? Milton's Ag.

2. Gay; airy.
Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. Representing life.
Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it in poetry or painting must produce a much greater. Dryden's Disfranchisement.

4. Strong; energetic.
His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be brightened and stirred up by a particular exercise of those virtues specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South's Sermons.

The colours of the prism are manifestly more full, intense and lively, than those of natural bodies. Newton's Opticks.

Imprint upon their minds, by proper arguments and reflections, a lively persuasion of the certainty of a future state. Atterbury's Sermons.

1. Briskly; vigorously.
They brought their men to the slough, who discharging lively almost close to the face of the enemy, did much amaze them. Hayward.

2. With strong resemblance of life.
That part of poetry must needs be best, which describes most lively our actions and passions, our virtues and our vices. Dryden's Pref. to his State of Innocence.

LIVER. n. f. [from live.]

1. One who lives.
Be thy affections undisturb'd and clear,
Guided to what may great or good appear,
And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.

2. One who lives in any particular manner with respect to virtue or vice, happiness or misery.
The end of his descent was to gather a church of holy christian livers over the whole world. Hammond's Fund.

If any loose liver have any goods of his own, the sheriff is to seize thereupon. Spenser on Ireland.

Here are the wants of children, of distracted persons, of sturdy wandering beggars and loose disorderly livers, at one view represented. Atterbury.

3. [From lypere, Saxon.] One of the entrails.
With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come;
And let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shakespeare.

Reason and respect
Make livers pale, and lustihood dejected. Shakespeare.

LIVERCOLOUR. adj. [liver and colour.] Dark red.
The uppermost stratum is of gravel; then clay of various colours, purple, blue, red, livercolour. Woodward.

LIVERGROWN. adj. [liver and grown.] Having a great liver.
I inquired what other casualties was most like the rickets, and found that livergrown was nearest. Graunt.

LIVERWORT. n. f. [liver and wort.] A plant.
That sort of liverwort which is used to cure the bite of mad dogs, grows on commons, and open heaths, where the grass is shot, on declivities, and on the sides of pits. This spreads spreads on the surface of the ground, and, when in perfection, is of an ash colour; but, as it grows old, it alters, and becomes of a dark colour.

LIVERY. n. f. [from liver, French.]

1. The act of giving or taking possession.

You do wrongfully seize Hereford's right,

Call in his letters patents that he hath

By his attorneys general to sue

His livery, and deny his offered homage.

2. Release from wardship.

Had the two houses first sued out their livery, and once effectually redeemed themselves from the wardship of the tumults, I should then suspect my own judgment.

3. The writ by which possession is obtained.

The state of being kept at a certain rate.

What livery is, we by common use in England know well enough, namely, that it is an allowance of horse meat; as they commonly use the word stabling, as to keep horses at livery; the which word, I guess, is derived of livering or delivering forth their nightly food; so in great houses, the livery is said to be served up for all night, that is, their evening allowance for drink: and livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears; so called, I suppose, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure: so it is apparent, that, by the word livery, is there meant horse meat, like as by the coigny is understood man's meat. Some say it is derived of coin, for that they used in their coignies not only to take meat but money; but I rather think it is derived of the Irish, the which is a common use amongst landlords of the Irish to have a common spending upon their tenants, who being commonly but tenants at will, they used to take of them what victuals they list; for of victuals they were wont to make a small reckoning.

4. The cloaths given to servants.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears.

Perhaps they are by so much the more loth to forsake this argument, for that it hath, though nothing else, yet the name of scripture, to give it some kind of countenance more than the pretext of livery coats affordeth.

I think, it is our way,

If we will keep in favour with the king,

To be her men, and wear her livery.

Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery,

That see I by our faces.

Ev'ry lady cloath'd in white,

And crown'd with oak and laurel ev'ry knight,

Are servants to the leaf, by liveries known

Of innocence.

On others int'rest her gay liv'ry flings,

Int'rest that waves on party-colour'd wings;

Turn'd to the sun the casts a thousand dyes,

And as she turns the colours fall or rise.

If your dinner miscarries, you were teized by the footmen coming into the kitchen; and to prove it true, throw a ladle-ful of broth on one or two of their liveries.

5. A particular dress; a garb worn as a token or consequence of any thing.

Of fair Urania, fairer than a green,

Proudly bedeck'd in April's livery.

Mistake me not for my complexion

The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,

To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,

Infect, or worm; those wav'd their limber fans,

For wings, and smallest lineaments exact,

In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride,

With spots of gold and purple, azure, green.

Now came still evening on, and twilight grey

Had in her sober livery all things clad.

LIVERYMAN. n. f. [livery and man.]

1. One who wears a livery; a servant of an inferior kind.

The witnesses made oath, that they had heard some of the liverymen frequently railing at their mistress.

2. [In London.] A freeman of some standing in a company.

LIVES. n. f. [the plural of life.]

So short is life, that every peasant strives,

In a farm house, or field, to have three lives.

LIVID. adj. [lividus, Latin; livide, French.] Discoloured, as with a blow; black and blue.

It was a pestilent fever, not seated in the veins or humours, for that there followed no carbuncles, no purple or livid spots, the mafs of the blood not being tainted.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:

O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss!

They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,

Till they turn'd livid, and corrupt the snow.

LIVIDITY. n. f. [lividus, Latin; livide, French.] Discolouration, as by a blow.

The signs of a tendency to such a state, are darkness or lividity of the countenance.

LIVING. n. f. [from live.]

1. Support; maintenance; fortune upon which one lives.

LOA

The Arcadians fought as in unknown place, having no succour but in their hands; the Helots, as in their own place, fighting for their livings, wives, and children.

All they did cast in of their abundance; but the of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living.

2. Power of continuing life.

There is no living without trusting some body or other, in some cases.

3. Livelihood.

For ourselves we may a living make.

Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living.

Isaac and his wife, now dig for your life,

Or shortly you'll dig for your living.

Actors must represent such things as they are capable to perform, and by which both they and the scribbler may get their living.

3. Benefice of a clergyman.

Some of our ministers having the livings of the country offered unto them, without pains, will, neither for any love of God, nor for all the good they may do, by winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests.

The parson of the parish preaching against adultery, Mrs. Bull told her husband, that they would join to have him turned out of his living for using personal reflections.

LIVINGLY. adv. [from living.] In the living state.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, or fear any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves.

LIVRE. n. f. [French.] The sum by which the French reckon their money, equal nearly to our shilling.

LIXIVIAL. adj. [from lixivium, Latin.]

1. Impregnated with salts like a lixivium.

The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vitiated, were a yellowish colour of the skin, and a lixivial urine.

2. Obtained by lixivium.

Helmont conjectured, that lixivial salts do not pre-exist in their alkalizate form.

LIXIVIATE. adj. [lixivieux, French; from lixivium.] Making a lixivium.

In these the salt and lixivated serosity, with some portion of choler, is divided between the guts and the bladder.

LIXIVIUM. n. f. [Latin.] Lye; water impregnated with salt of whatsoever kind; a liquor which has the power of extraction.

I made a lixivium of fair water and salt of wormwood, and having frozen it with snow and salt, I could not discern any thing more like to wormwood than to several other plants.

LIZARD. n. f. [lizarde, French; lacertus, Latin.] An animal resembling a serpent, with legs added to it.

There are several sorts of lizards; some in Arabia of a cubit long. In America they eat lizards; it is very probable likewise that they were eaten sometimes in Arabia and Judaea, since Moses ranks them among the unclean creatures.

Thou'rt like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,

Mark'd by the definies to be avoided,

As venomous toads, or lizards dreadful stings.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,

Lizard's leg, and owl's wing.

LIZARDITAL. n. f. A plant.

LIZARDSTONE. n. f. [lizard and stone.] A kind of stone.

L.L.D. n. f. [legum doctor.] A doctor of the canon and civil laws.

Lo. interjct. [la, Saxon.] Look; see; behold. It is a word used to recall the attention generally to some object of sight; sometimes to something heard, but not properly; often to something to be understood.

Lo! within a ken our army lies.

Now must the world point at poor Catharine,

And say, lo! there is mad Petrucchio's wife.

Lo! I have a weapon,

A better never did itself sustain

Upon a soldier's thigh.

Thou didst utter,

I am yours for ever.

—Why lo you now, I've spoke to the purpose twice.

For lo! he hung the world's stupenduous birth.

Lo! heav'n and earth combine

To blast our bold design.

LOACH. n. f. [loche, French.]

The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the sharpest streams: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is suitable to that length: he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattels like a barbel: he has two fins at his sides, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots:

his mouth, barbel-like, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gessen, and other learned physicians, commended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and is to be fitted for with a very small worm, at the bottom, for he very seldom or never rises above the gravel.

LOAD. n. f. [plate, Saxon.]

1. A burthen; a freight; lading.

Then on his back he laid the precious load,

And fought his wonted shelter.

2. Any thing that depresses.

How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unless he be very ignorant.

3. As much drink as one can bear.

There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle.

TO LOAD. v. a. [platan, Saxon.]

1. To burden; to freight.

At last, laden with honour's spoils,

Returns the good Andronicus to Rome.

Your carriages were heavy laden; they are a burden to the beast.

2. To encumber; to embarrass.

He that makes no reflexions on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others.

3. To charge a gun.

A mariner having discharged his gun, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire.

4. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.

Thy dreadful vow, laden with death, still sounds in my stunn'd ears.

LOAD. n. f. [more properly lade, as it was anciently written from lexan, Saxon, to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.

The tin lay couched at first in certain strakes amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main load spreadeth out his branches, until they approach the open air.

Their manner of working in the load mines, is to follow the lead as it lieth.

LOADER. n. f. [from load.] He who loads.

LOADSMAN. n. f. [lade and man.] He who leads the way; a pilot.

LOADSTAR. n. f. [more properly as it is in Maundeville, loadstar, from lexan, to lead.] The polestar; the cynosure; the leading or guiding star.

She was the loadstar of my life; she the blessing of mine eyes; she the overthrow of my desires, and yet the recompence of my overthrow.

My Helice, the loadstar of my life.

O happy fair!

Your eyes are loadstars, and your tongue sweet air;

More tunable than lark to shepherd's ear

When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.

That clear majesty

Which standeth fix'd, yet spreads her heavenly worth,

Lodestone to hearts, and loadstar to all eyes.

LOADSTONE. n. f. [properly loadstone or leadingstone. See LOADSTAR.] The magnet; the stone on which the mariners compass needle is touched to give it a direction north and south.

The loadstone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large masses, of a deep iron-grey where fresh broken, and often tinged with a brownish or reddish colour: it is very heavy, and considerably hard, and its great character is that of affecting iron. This ore of iron is found in England, and in most other places where there are mines of that metal.

LOAF. n. f. [from loaf or loaf, Saxon.]

1. A mass of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.

Easy it is

Of a cut loaf to steal a shive, we know.

The bread and bread corn in the town sufficed not for six days: hereupon the soldiers entered into proportion; and, to give example, the lord Clinton limited himself to a loaf a day.

With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more and less parts than a lump of lead of the same bigness.

2. Any mass into which a body is wrought.

Your wine becomes so limpid, that you may bottle it with a piece of loaf sugar in each bottle.

LOAM. n. f. [lin, laam, Saxon; limus, Latin; from limen, a fen, Junius.] Fat, unctuous, tenacious, earth; marl.

The purest treasure

Is spotless reputation; that away,

Men are but gilded loam or painted clay.

Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam; and why of that loam might they not stop a beer barrel?

TO LOAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear with loam, marl, or clay; to clay.

The joist ends, and girders which be in the walls, must be loamed all over, to preserve them from the corroding of the mortar.

LOAMY. adj. [from loam.] Marly.

The mellow earth is the best, between the two extremes of clay and sand, especially if it be not loamy

LOB

- LO'ATHER. n. f. [from loath.] One that loaths.
 LO'ATHFUL. adj. [loath and full.]
 1. Abhorring; hating.
 Which he did with loathful eyes behold.
 He would no more endure. Hubbard's Tale.
 2. Abhorred; hated.
 Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,
 Whose base effect, through cowardly distrust
 Of his weak wings, dare not to heaven flie. Spenser.
 LO'ATHINGLY. adv. [from loathe.] In a fastidious manner.
 LO'ATHLY. adj. [from loath.] Hateful; abhorred; exciting hatred.
 An huge great dragon, horrible in fight,
 Bred in the loathly lakes of Tartary,
 With murd'rous ravin. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakefp.
 Sour-ey'd disdain, and discord shall bestow
 The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
 That you shall hate it. Shakefpere's Tempest.
 LO'ATHLY. adv. [from loath.] Unwillingly; without liking or inclination.
 The upper streams make such haste to have their part of embracing, that the nether, though loathly, must needs give place unto them. Sidney.
 Lothly opposite I stood
 To his unnatural purpose. Shakefpere's King Lear.
 This shews that you from nature loathly stray,
 That suffer not an artificial day. Dante.
 LO'ATHNESS. n. f. [from loath.] Unwillingness.
 The fair foul herself
 Weigh'd between loathness and obedience,
 Which end the beam should bow. Shakefp. Tempest.
 Pray you, look not sad,
 Nor make replies of loathness. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 Should we be taking leave,
 As long a term as yet we have to live,
 The loathness to depart would grow. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
 After they had sat about the fire, there grew a general silence and loathness to speak amongst them; and immediately one of the weakest fell down in a swoon. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 LO'ATHSOME. adj. [from loath.]
 1. Abhorred; detestable.
 The fresh young fly
 Did much disdain to subject his desire
 To loathsomely sloth, or hours in ease to waste. Spenser.
 While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
 To loathsomely sickness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
 If we consider man in such a loathsomely and provoking condition, was it not love enough that he was permitted to enjoy a being. South's Sermons.
 2. Causing satiety or fastidiousness.
 The sweetest honey
 Is loathsomely in its own deliciousness,
 And in the taste confounds the appetite. Shakefpere.
 LO'ATHSOMENESS. n. f. [from loathsomely.] Quality of railing hatred.
 The catacombs must have been full of stench and loathsomeness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches. Addison.
 LOAVES, plural of loaf.
 Democritus, when he lay a dying, caused loaves of new bread to be opened, and he poured a little wine into them; and so kept himself alive with the odour till a feast was past.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 934.
 LOB. n. f.
 1. Any one heavy, clumsy, or sluggish.
 Farewell, thou lob of spirits, I'll be gone,
 Our queen and all her elves come here anon. Shakefp.
 2. Lob's pound; a prison. Probably a prison for idlers, or sturdy beggars.
 Crowdero, whom in irons bound,
 Thou basely threw'st into lob's pound. Hudibras.
 3. A big worm.
 For the trout the dew worm, which some also call the lob worm, and the brandling are the chief. Walton's Angler.
 TO LOB. v. a. To let fall in a slovenly or lazy manner.
 The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
 And their poor jades
 Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips. Shakefp.
 LOBBY. n. f. [lawke, German.] An opening before a room.
 His lobbies fill with tendance,
 Rain sacrificial whisp'rings in his ear,
 Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakefp. Tim. of Athens.
 Before the duke's rising from the table, he stood expecting till he should pass through a kind of lobby between that room and the next, where were divers attending him. Watson.
 Try your back stairs, and let the lobby wait,
 A stratagem in war is no deceit. King's Horace.
 LOSE. n. f. [lobe, French; λοβος.] A division; a distinct part; used commonly for a part of the lungs.

LOC

- Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell
 To that prodigious mass, for their eternal meal. Dryden.
 Air bladders form lobuli, which hang upon the bronchia like bunches of grapes; these lobuli constitute the lobes, and the lobes the lungs. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 LO'BSTER. n. f. [lobst'ep, Saxon.] A crustaceous fish.
 Those that cast their shell, are the lobster, the crab, and craw-fish. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 732.
 It happeneth often that a lobster hath the great claw of one side longer than the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 LO'CAL. adj. [local, French; locus, Latin].
 1. Having the properties of place.
 By ascending, after that the sharpness of death was overcome, he took the very local possession of glory, and that to the use of all that are his, even as himself before had witnessed, I go to prepare a place for you. Hooker, b. v.
 A higher flight the vent'rous goddess tries,
 Leaving material worlds, and local skies. Prior.
 2. Relating to place.
 The circumstance of local nearness in them unto us, might haply enforce in us a duty of greater separation from them than from those other. Hooker, b. iv.
 Where there is only a local circumstance of worship, the same thing would be worshipped, supposing that circumstance changed. Stillington.
 3. Being in a particular place.
 Dream not of their fight,
 As of a duel, or the local wounds
 Of head, or heel. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xiii.
 How is the change of being sometimes here, sometimes there, made by local motion in vacuum, without a change in the body moved? Digby on Bodies.
 LO'CALITY. n. f. [from local.] Existence in place; relation of place, or distance.
 That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, and that they have nothing to do with grosser loca- lity, is generally opinioned. Glarville's Scep.
 LO'CALLY. adj. [from local.] With respect to place.
 Whether things, in their natures so diverse as body and spirit, which almost in nothing communicate, are not essentially divided, though not locally distant, I leave to the readers. Glarville's Scep.
 LO'CA'TION. n. f. [locatio, Latin.] Situation with respect to place; act of placing; state of being placed.
 To say that the world is somewhere, means no more than that it does exist; this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location. Locke.
 LOCH. n. f. A lake. Scottish.
 A lake or loch, that has no fresh water running into it, will turn into a stinking puddle. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.
 LOCK. n. f. [loc, Saxon, in both senses].
 1. An instrument composed of springs and bolts, used to fasten doors or chests.
 No gate so strong, no lock so firm and fast,
 But with that piercing noise flew open quit or braff. F. Qu.
 We have locks to safeguard necessities,
 And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves. Shakefpere.
 As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in locks, in contriving their wards or guards. Moxon.
 2. The part of the gun by which fire is struck.
 A gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges: under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder; a little before the lock, another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder to the further end of the lock. Grew's Musæum.
 3. A hug; a grapple.
 They must be practised in all the locks and gripes of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tugg or grapple, and to close. Milton on Education.
 4. Any inclosure.
 Sergethus, eager with his beak to preß
 Betwixt the rival gally and the rock,
 Shuts up th' unwieldy centaur in the lock. Dryden's En.
 5. A quantity of hair or wool hanging together.
 Well might he perceive the hanging of her hair in locks, some curled, and some forgotten. Sidney.
 A goodly cypress, who bowing her fair head over the water, it seemed she looked into it, and dressed her green locks by that running river. Sidney.
 His grizly locks, long grown and unbound, Disordered hung about his shoulders round. Fairy Qu.
 The bottom was set against a lock of wool, and the found was quite deaded. Bacon.
 They nourish only a lock of hair on the crown of their heads. Sandys's Travels.
 A lock of hair will draw more than a cable rope. Grew.
 Behold the locks that are grown white
 Beneath a helmet in your father's battels. Addison's Cato.
 Two locks graceful hung behind
 In equal curls, and well-conspir'd, to deck
 With shining ringlets her smooth ivory neck. Pope.

LOD

6. A tuft.
 I suppose this letter will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Addison's Spectator.
 TO LOCK. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To shut or fasten with locks.
 The garden, seated on the level floor,
 She left behind, and locking ev'ry door,
 Thought all secure. Dryden.
 2. To shut up or confine, as with locks.
 I am locked in one of them;
 If you do love me, you will find me out. Shakefpere.
 We do lock
 Our former sapple in our strong-barr'd gates. Shakefp.
 Then seek to know those things which make us blest,
 And having found them, lock them in thy breast. Denham.
 The frighted dame
 The log in secret lock'd. Dryden's Ovid.
 If the door to a council be kept by armed men, and all such whose opinions are not liked kept out, the freedom of those within are infringed, and all their acts as void as if they were locked in. Dryden's En.
 One conduces to the poets completing of his work; the other slackens his pace, and locks him up like a knight-errant in an enchanted castle. Dryden's Dedicat. to the En.
 The father of the gods
 Confin'd their fury to those dark abodes,
 And lock'd 'em safe within, oppress'd with mountain loads. Dryden's En.
 If one third of the money in trade were locked up, must not the landholders receive one third less. Locke.
 Always lock up a cat in a closet where you keep your china plates, for fear the mice may steal in and break them. Swift.
 Your wine lock'd up,
 Plain milk will do the feat. Pope's Horace.
 3. To close fast.
 Death blasts his bloom, and locks his frozen eyes. Gay.
 TO LOCK. v. n.
 1. To become fast by a lock.
 For not of wood, nor of enduring brass,
 Doubly disparted it did lock and close,
 That when it locked, none might through it pass. Fa. Qu.
 2. To unite by mutual infection.
 Either they lock into each other, or slip one upon another's surface; as much of their surfaces touches as makes them cohere. Boyle.
 LO'CKER. n. f. [from lock.] Any thing that is closed with a lock; a drawer.
 I made lockers or drawers at the end of the boat. R. Crisp.
 LO'CKET. n. f. [loquet, French.] A small lock; any catch or spring to fasten a necklace, or other ornament.
 Where knights are kept in narrow lists,
 With wooden lockets 'bout their wrists. Hudibras, p. ii.
 LO'CKRAM. n. f. A sort of coarse linen. Hammer.
 The kitchen malkin pins
 Her richest lockram 'bout her reeky neck, Clambring the walls to eye him. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
 LO'CKRON. n. f. A kind of ramunculus.
 LOCOMOTION. n. f. [locus and motus, Lat.] Power of change-ing place.
 All progression, or animal locomotion, is performed by drawing on, or impelling forward, some part which was before at quiet. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 LOCOMOTIVE. adj. [locus and moveo, Lat.] Changing place;
 having the power of removing or changing place.
 I shall consider the motion, or locomotive faculty of animals. Derham's Physico-Theol.
 In the night too oft he kicks,
 Or shows his locomotive tricks. Prior.
 An animal cannot well be defined from any particular, or-ganical part, nor from its locomotive faculty, for some adhere to rocks. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 LO'CUST. n. f. [locustæ, Latin.]
 The Hebrews had several sorts of locusts, which are not known among us: the old historians and modern travellers remark, that locusts are very numerous in Africk, and many places of Asia; that sometimes they fell like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing they meet with.
 Moses describes four sorts of locusts. Since there was a prohibition against using locusts, it is not to be questioned but that these creatures were commonly eaten in Palestine, and the neighbouring countries. Calmet.
 To-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy coast. Exod.
 Air replete with the steams of animals, rotting, has produced pestilential fevers; such have likewise been raised by great quantities of dead locusts. Arbutnot on Air.
 LO'CUST-TREE. n. f.
 The locust-tree hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose calyx arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an unicapular hard pod, including roundish hard seeds, which are surrounded with a fungous stringy substance. Miller.
 LODESTAR. See LOADSTAR.
 LODSTONE. See LOADSTONE.

LOD

- TO LODGE. v. a. [logian, Saxon; loger, French.]
 1. To place in a temporary habitation.
 When he was come to the court of France, the king staid him by the name of the duke of York; lodged him, and accommodated him, in great state. Bacon's Henry VII.
 2. To afford a temporary dwelling; to supply with harbour for a night.
 Ev'ry house was proud to lodge a knight. Dryden.
 3. To place; to plant.
 When on the brink the foaming boar I met,
 And in his side thought to have lodg'd my spear,
 The desp'rate savage rush'd within my force,
 And bore me headlong with him down the rock. Orway.
 He lodg'd an arrow in a tender breast,
 That had so often to his own been prest. Addison's Ovid.
 In viewing again the ideas that are lodged in the memory, the mind is more than passive. Locke.
 4. To fix; to settle.
 By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
 And by whose pow'r I well might lodge a fear
 To be again displac'd. Shakefpere.
 I can give no reason,
 More than a lodg'd hate, and a certain loathing
 I bear Antonio. Shakefpere's Merch. of Venice.
 5. To place in the memory.
 This cunning the king would not understand, though he lodged it, and noted it, in some particulars. Bacon's H. VII.
 6. To harbour or cover.
 The deer is lodg'd, I've track'd her to her covert;
 Rush in at once. Addison's Cato.
 7. To afford place to.
 The memory can lodge a greater store of images, than all the senses can present at one time. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.
 8. To lay flat.
 Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down;
 Though castles topple on their warders heads. Shakefp.
 We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
 Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the Summer corn,
 And make a dearth in this revolting land. Shakefpere.
 TO LODGE. v. n.
 1. To reside; to keep residence.
 Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye,
 And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie. Shakefp.
 Something holy lodges in that breast,
 And with these raptures moves the vocal air
 To testify his hidden residence. Milton.
 And dwells such rage in softest bosom then?
 And lodge such daring souls in little men? Pope.
 2. To take a temporary habitation.
 Why commands the kings,
 That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,
 While he himself keepeth in the cold field?
 I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakefpere's Othello.
 Thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people. 2 Sam. xvii. 8.
 3. To take up residence at night.
 My lords
 And soldiers, stay and lodge by me this night. Shakefp.
 Oh, that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of way-faring men, that I might leave my people. Jer. ix. 4.
 Here thou art but a stranger travelling to thy country; it is therefore a huge folly to be afflicted, because thou hast a less convenient inn to lodge in by the way. Taylor.
 4. To lie flat.
 Long cone wheat they reckon in Oxfordshire best for rank clays; and its straw makes it not subject to lodge, or to be mildewed. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 LODGE. n. f. [logis, French.]
 1. A small house in a park or forest.
 He brake up his court, and retired himself, his wife and children, into a certain forest thereby, which he calleth his desert, wherein he hath built two fine lodges. Sidney.
 I found him as melancholy as a lodge in a warren. Shak.
 He and his lady both are at the lodge,
 Upon the north side of this pleasant chace. Shakefpere.
 Thus at their shady lodge arriv'd, both flood,
 Both turn'd, and under open sky ador'd
 The God that made both sky, air, earth. Milton.
 Whenever I am turn'd out, my lodge descends upon a low-spirited family. Swift.
 2. Any small house; as, the porter's lodge.
 LODGEMENT. n. f. [from lodge; legement, French.]
 1. Accumulation, or collocation in a certain place.
 The curious lodgement and insolation of the auditory nerves. Derham.
 An oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extra-vasated matter. Sharp's Surgery.
 2. Possession of the enemy's work.
 The military pedant is making lodgements, and fighting batt'ls, from one end of the year to the other. Addison.
 LO'DGER.

LOG

LO'DGER. n. f. [from ledge.]

1. One who lives in rooms hired in the house of another. Bafe tyke, call'ft thou me holt? now, I scorn the term; nor shall my Nell keep lodgers. Shakespeare's Henry V. There were in a family, the man and his wife, three children, and three servants or lodgers. Graunt's Bill. Those houses are soonest infected that are crowded with multiplicity of lodgers, and nasty families. Harvey. The gentlewoman begged me to step; for that a lodger she had taken in was run mad. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 83. Sylva was reproached by his fellow lodger, that whilst the fellow lodger paid eight pounds one shilling and fivepence halfpenny for the uppermost story, he paid for the rest twenty-four pounds four shillings and fourpence halfpenny. Arbutnot.
2. One that resides in any place. Look in that breast, most dirty dear; Says, can you find but one such lodger there? Pope.

LO'DGING. n. f. [from ledge.]

1. Temporary habitation; rooms hired in the house of another. I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin, And let him find it. Shakespeare's Othello. Let him change his lodging from one end of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. Bacon. At night he came To his known lodgings, and his country dame. Dryden. He desired his sister to bring her away to the lodgings of his friend. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 155. Wits take lodgings in the fount of Bow. Pope.

2. Place of residence. Fair bosom fraught with virtue's richest treasure, The nest of love, the lodging of delight, The bower of bliss, the paradise of pleasure, The sacred harbour of that heavenly spright. Spenser.

3. Harbour; covert. The hounds were uncoupled; and the flag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.
4. Convenience to sleep on. Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodgings. Ray on Creation.

LOFT. n. f. [loft, Welsh; or from lift.]

1. A floor. There is a traverser placed in a loft above. Bacon.
2. The highest floor. To lull him in his slumber soft, A trickling stream from high rock tumbling down, And ever drizzling rain upon the lofts, Mixt with a murmuring wind. Fairy Queen, b. i.

3. Rooms on high. Passing through the spheres of watchful fire, And hills of snow, and lofts of piled thunder. Milton. A weasel once made shift to slink In at a corn loft, through a chink. Pope.

LOFTILY. adv. [from lofty.]

1. On high; in an elevated place. Proudly; haughtily. They speak wickedly concerning oppression; they speak loftily. Psal. lxxiii. 8.
3. With elevation of language or sentiment; sublimely. By a logic that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom. Clarendon.

LOFTINESS. n. f. [from lofty.]

1. Height; local elevation. Sublimity; elevation of sentiment. Three poets in three distant ages born; The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd, The next in majesty; in both the last. Dryden.

3. Pride; haughtiness. Augustus and Tiberius had loftiness enough in their temper, and affected to make a sovereign figure. Collier.

LOFTY. adj. [from loft, or lift.]

1. High; hovering; elevated in place. See lofty Lebanon his head advance, See nodding forests on the mountains dance. Pope's Messiah.
2. Sublime; elevated in sentiment. He knew Himself to sing and build the lofty rhyme. Milton.

3. Proud; haughty. Man, the tyrant of our sex, I hate, A lowly servant, but a lofty mate. Dryden's Knight's Tale. Lofty and four to them that lov'd him not; But to those men that fought him, sweet as Summer. Shak.

LOG. n. f. [The original of this word is not known. Skinner derives it from loggan, Saxon; to lie; Junius from logge, Dutch, sluggish; perhaps the Latin lignum, is the true original.] A shapeless bulky piece of wood.

1. Would the lightning had Burnt up those logs that thou'rt injoin'd to pile. Shakespeare. The worms with many feet are bred under logs of timber, and many times in gardens, where no logs are. Bacon. Some logs, perhaps, upon the waters swim, An uselefs drift, which rudely cut within,

LOG

And hollow'd first a floating trough became, And cross some riv'let passage did begin. *Dryden.*The frighted dame The log in secret lock'd. Dryden's Ovid.

2. An Hebrew measure, which held a quarter of a cab, and consequently five-sixths of a pint. According to Dr. Arbuthnot it was a liquid measure, the seventy-second part of the bath or ephah, and twelfth part of the hin. Cabnet. A meat offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil. Lev. xiv. 10.

LOGARITHMS. n. f. [logarithme, Fr. logos and arithmos.]

Logarithms, which are the indexes of the ratio's of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier lord Merchiston, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr. Briggs, Savilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of artificial numbers, contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proportion, as the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical one: for instance,

0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
1	2	4	8	16	32	64	128	256	512

Where the numbers above, beginning with (0), and arithmetically proportional, are called logarithms. The addition and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and this saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by dividing the logarithms of any numbers for the square root, and tripling them for the cube, and so on. *Harris.*LOGGATS. n. f. Loggats is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unlawful games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the game which is now called kitlepins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling. *Hammer.*Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with them. *Shakespeare's Hamlet.*LOGGERHEAD. n. f. [logge, Dutch, stupid and head, or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blockhead.] A dolt; a blockhead; a thickskull.Where hast been, Hal? With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or fourcore hogheads. *Shakespeare's Henry IV.*Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other peoples fires. LeStrange.

To fall to loggerheads. } To scuffle; to fight without weapons. } To go to loggerheads. } pons.

A couple of travellers that took up an ass, fell to loggerheads which should be his matter. *LeStrange.*LOGGERHEADED. adj. [from loggerhead.] Dull; stupid; doltish.You loggerheaded and unpolish'd groom, what! no attendance? *Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.*LOGICK. n. f. [logique, French; logica, Latin, from logos.] The art of reasoning.Logick is the art of using reason well in our inquiries after truth, and the communication of it to others. *Watts's Logic.*Talk logic with acquaintance, And practise rhetoric in your common talk. *Shakespeare.*By a logic that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom. *Clarendon.*Here foam'd rebellious logic, gag'd and bound, There stript fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground. *Pope.*LOGICAL. adj. [from logic.]

1. Pertaining to logic; taught in logic. The heretic complained greatly of St. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtilties. Hooker, b. iii.
2. Those who in a logical dispute keep in general terms, would hide a fallacy. Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.

We ought not to value ourselves upon our ability, in giving subtle rules, and finding out logical arguments, since it would be more perfection not to want them. *Baker.*LOGICALLY. adv. [from logical.] According to the laws of logic.How can her old good man With honour take her back again? From hence I logically gather, The woman cannot live with either. *Prior.*LOGICIAN. n. f. [logician, French; logicus, Latin.] A teacher or professor of logic; a man versed in logic.If a man can play the true logician, and have as well judgment as invention, he may do great matters. *Bacon.*If we may believe our logicians, man is distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter. *Addison.*Each staunch polemic stubborn as a rock, Each fierce logician still expelling Locke, Came whip and spur. Dunciad, b. iv. A logician

LOL

A logician might put a case that would serve for an exception. *Swift.*The Arabian physicians were subtle men, and most of them logicians; accordingly they have given method, and shed subtilty upon their author. *Baker.*LOGMAN. n. f. [log and man.] One whose business is to carry logs.Am I this patient logman. *Shakespeare's Tempest.*LOGOMACHY. n. f. [λογμαχία.] A contention in words; a contention about words.Forced terms of art did much puzzle sacred theology with distinctions, cavils, quiddities; and so transformed her to a meer kind of sophistry and logomachy. *Howel.*LOGWOOD. n. f. Logwood is of a very dense and firm texture; it is brought to us in very large and thick blocks or logs, and is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep, strong, red colour. It grows both in the East and West Indies, but no where so plentifully as on the coast of the bay of Campeachy. It has been long known by the dyers, and was but lately introduced in medicine, and is found to be an excellent astringent. *Hill's Mat. Med.*To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water. *Peacham on Drawing.*LO'HOCK. n. f. Lo'hock is an Arabian name for those forms of medicines which are now commonly called Eclegma's, lambatives, or linctus's.Lo'hocks and pectorals were prescribed, and veneration repeated. *Wise's Surgery.*LOIN. n. f. [lhoyn, Welsh.] 1. The back of an animal carved out by the butcher. 2. Loin; the reins.My face I'll grime with filth, Blanket my loins. *Shakespeare's King Lear.*Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb! Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins. *Shakespeare's Rich. III.*High in the love of heav'n! yet from my loins Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the son Of God most high. *Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.*A multitude I like which the populous north Pour'd never from her frozen bins, to pass Rhene, or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons Came like a deluge on the south. *Milton.*LOITER. v. n. [loiteren, Dutch.] To linger; to spend time carelessly; to idle.Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in the countries. *Shakespeare.*You loiter, while the spoils are thrown away. *Dryden.*Mark how he spends his time, whether he unactively loiters it away. *Locke.*If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the mistake; if we have loitered, let us quicken our pace, and make the most of the present opportunity. *Rogers's Sermons.*LOITERER. n. f. [from loiter.] A lingerer; an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without business; one who is sluggish and dilatory.Give gloves to thy reapers a largess to cry, And daily to loiterers have a good eye. *Tusser's Hush.*The poor, by idleness or unthriftiness, are riotous spenders, vagabonds, and loiterers. *Hayward.*Where hast thou been, thou loiterer? Though my eyes clos'd, my arms have still been open'd, To search if thou wert come. *Orway.*Providence would only enter mankind into the useful industry, that we live not like idle loiterers and truants. *Mere.*Ever listless loiterers, that attend No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend. *Pope.*LOLL. v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Perhaps it might be contemptuously derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not necessary to life are unlawful.]To lean idly; to rest lazily against any thing. So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so shakes and pulls me. *Shakespeare's Othello.*He is not lolling on a lewd love bed, But on his knees at meditation. *Shakespeare's Rich. III.*Where lovers us'd to loll and dream, To loll on couches, rich with cytron steeds, And lay your guilty limbs in Tyrian beds, Void of care he lolls supine in state, And leaves his business to be done by fate. *Dryden.*But wanton now, and lolling at our ease, We suffer all the inveterate ills of peace. Dryden.

LON

A lazy, lolling sort

1. Of ever listless loiterers. Dunciad, b. iv.
2. To hang out. Used of the tongue hanging out in weariness or play.

The triple porter of the Stygian seat, With lolling tongue lay fawning at thy feet. *Dryden.*With harmless play amidst the bowls he pass'd, And with his lolling tongue assay'd the taste. *Dryden.*LOLL. v. n. To put out; used of the tongue exerted. All authors to their own defects are blind; Hadst thou but, Janus-like, a face behind, To see the people, when splay mouths they make, To mark their fingers pointed at thy back, Their tongues loll'd out a foot. *Dryden's Persius.*By Strymon's freezing streams he sat alone, Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs, Fierce tigers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues. *Dryden's Virgil.*By the wolf were laid the martial twins; Intrepid on her swelling dugs they hung, The foster-dam loll'd out her fawning tongue. *Dryden.*LOMP. n. f. A kind of roundish fish.LONE. adj. [contracted from alone.]

1. Solitary. Here the lone hour a blank of life displays. Savage.
2. Single; without company. Thus vanish sceptres, coronets and balls, And leave you in lone woods, or empty walls. Pope.

No lone house in Wales, with a mountain and a rookery, is more contemplative than this court. *Pope.*LONELINESS. n. f. [from lone.] Solitude; want of company; disposition to avoid company.The huge and sportful assembly grew to him a tedious loneliness, esteeming nobody found since Daiphantus was lost. *Sidney.*I see The mystery of your loneliness, and find Your salt tears head. *Shakespeare's.*LONELY. adj. [from lone.] Solitary; addicted to solitude. I go alone, Like to a lonely dragon; that his fen Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. *Shakespeare.*That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps With everlasting oil, to give due light To the mistle and lonely traveller. *Milton.*Time has made you dote, and vainly tell Of arms imagin'd, in your lonely cell. *Dryden's Aen.*You lonely thus from the full court retire, Love and the graces follow to your solitude. *Rowe.*LO'NENESS. n. f. [from lone.] Solitude; dislike of company. If of court life you knew the good, You would leave loneness. *Donne.*Her who loves loneness best. *Donne.*LO'NESOME. adj. [from lone.] Solitary; dismal. You either must the earth from rest disturb, Or roll around the heavens the solar orb; Else what a dreadful face will nature wear? How horrid will these lonesome seats appear? *Blackmore.*LONG. adj. [long, French; longus, Latin.]

1. Not short. He talked a long while, even till break of day. Acts xx.
2. Having one of its geometrical dimensions in a greater degree than either of the other. His branches became long because of the waters. Ezek.

We made the trial in a long necked phial left open at the top. *Boyle.*Of any certain measure in length. Women eat their children of a span long. Lam. ii. 20.
Not soon ceasing, or at an end. Man goeth to his long home. Ecd. xii. 5.
Honour thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land. *Exod. xx. 12.*The physician cutteth off a long discase. *Ecd. x. 10.*Dilatory. Death will not be long in coming, and the covenant of the grave is not shewed unto thee. Ecd. xiv. 12.[From the verb, to long.] Longing; desirous; or perhaps, long continued, from the disposition to continue looking at any thing desired.Praying for him, and casting a long look that way, he saw the galley leave the pursuit. *Sidney.*By ev'ry circumstance I know he loves; Yet he but doubts, and pauses, and casts out Many a long look-for succour. Dryden.

7. Reaching to a great distance.
If the way be too long for thee. Deut. xiv. 24.
They are old by reason of the very long journey. Jos. ix.
8. In music and pronunciation.] Protracted; as, a long note;
a long syllable.
Long. adv.
1. To a great length.
The marble brought, erects the spacious dome,
Or forms the pillars long-extended rows
On which the planted grove and penile garden grows.
Prior.
2. Not for a short time.
With mighty barres of long-enduring brags. Fairfax.
When the trumpet foundeth long, they shall come up to the mount.
Exod. xix. 13.
The martial Ancus
Furbish'd the rusty sword again, Dryden.
Refum'd the long-forgotten shield.
One of these advantages, that which Cornelle has laid down, is the making choice of some signal and long-expected day, whereon the action of the play is to depend.
Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.
So stood the pious prince unmov'd, and long Sustain'd the madness of the noisy throng. Dryden's Æn.
The muse resumes her long-forgotten lays, Dryden.
And love, restor'd, his ancient realm surveys.
No man has complained that you have discoursed too long on any subject, for you leave us in an eagerness of learning more. Dryden.
Persia left for you
The realm of Candahar for dow'r I brought,
That long-contended prize for which you fought. Dryden.
It may help to put an end to that long-agitated and unreasonable question, whether man's will be free or no? Locke.
Heav'n restores
To thy fond wish the long-expected shores. Pope's Odyssey.
3. In the comparative, it signifies for more time; and in the superlative, for most time.
When she could not longer hide him, she took for him an ark of bullrushes. Exod. ii. 3.
Eldest parents signifies either the eldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Locke.
4. Not soon.
Not long after there arose against it a tempestuous wind.
Acts xxvii. 14.
5. At a point of duration far distant.
If the world had been eternal, those would have been found in it, and generally spread long ago, and beyond the memory of all ages. Tillotson's Sermons.
Say, that you once were virtuous long ago?
A frugal, hardy people. Philips's Briton.
6. [For along; au long, Fr.] All along; throughout.
Them among
There sat a man of ripe and perfect age,
Who did them meditate all his life long. Fairy Queen.
Some say, that ever gainst that season comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long,
And then they say no spirit walks abroad,
The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike,
No fairy takes, no witch hath power to charm,
No hallow'd and so gracious is the time. Shakep. Hamlet.
He fed me all my life long to this day. Gen. xlviii. 15.
Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Psal.
LONG. v. n. [gelang, a fault, Saxon.] By the fault; by the failure. A word now out of use, but truly English.
Respective and wary men had rather seek quietly their own, and wish that the world may go well, so it be not long of them, than with pains and hazard make themselves advisers for the common good. Hooker, b. v.
Maine, Bloys, Poitiers, and Tours are won away, Long all of Somerset, and his delay. Shakep. Henry VI.
Mistress, all this coil is long of you. Shakep. Henry VI.
If we owe it to him that we know so much, it is perhaps long of his fond adores that we know so little more. Glouc.
To LONG. v. n. [gelangen, German, to ask. Skinner.] To desire earnestly; to wish with eagerness continued, with for or after before the thing desired.
Fresh expectation troubled not the land
With any long'd for change, or better fate. Shakep. Henry VI.
And thine eyes shall look, and sail with longing for them.
Deut. xxviii. 32.
If earst he wished, now he longed fore. Fairfax, b. i.
The great master perceived, that Rhodes was the place the Turkish tyrant longed after. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
If the report be good, it causeth love,
And longing hope, and well assured joy.
His sons, who seek the tyrant to sustain,
And long for arbitrary lords again,
He dooms to death deserv'd. Dryden's Æn.

- Glad of the gift, the new made warrior goes,
And arms among the Greeks, and long for equal foes. Dryd.
Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
This longing after immortality? Addison's Cato.
There's the tie that binds you;
You long to call him father: Marcia's charms
Work in your heart unseen, and plead for Cato. Addison.
Nicomedes longing for herrings, was supplied with fresh ones by his cook, though at a great distance from the sea.
Arbutnot on Coins.
Through stormy seas
I courted dangers, and I long'd for death. A. Philips.
LONGANIMITY. n. f. [longanimitas, Latin; longanimité, Fr.]
Forbearance; patience of offences.
It had overcome the patience of Job, as it did the meekness of Moses, and surely had mastered any but the longani-mity and lasting sufferance of God. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
That innocent and holy matron had rather go clad in the snowy white robes of meekness and longanimity, than in the purple mantle of blood. Howell's England's Tears.
LONGBOAT. n. f. The largest boat belonging to a ship.
At the first descent on shoar, he did countenance the landing in his longboat. Watson.
They first betray their masters, and then, when they find the vessel sinking, save themselves in the longboat. L'Estrange.
LONGEVITY. n. f. [longævus, Latin.] Length of life.
That those are countries suitable to the nature of man, and convenient to live in, appears from the longevity of the natives. Ray on Creation.
The instances of longevity are chiefly amongst the abstemious. Arbutnot on Aliments.
LONGIMANOUS. adj. [longuimanus, French; longimanus, Lat.]
Long-handed; having long hands.
The villainy of this Christian exceeded the persecution of heathens, whose malice was never so longimannous as to reach the soul of their enemies, or to extend unto the exile of their clifums. Brown's Vulg. Errors, b. vii.
LONGIMETRY. n. f. [longus and metria; longimetrie, French.]
The art or practice of measuring distances.
Our two eyes are like two different stations in longimetry, by the assistance of which the distance between two objects is measured. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.
LONGING. n. f. [from long.] Earnest desire; continual wish.
When within short time I came to the degree of uncertain wishes, and that those wishes grew to unquiet longings, when I would fix my thoughts upon nothing, but that within little varying they should end with Philoclea. Sidney.
I have a woman's longing,
An appetite that I am sick withal,
To see great Hector in the weeds of peace. Shakep. Henry VI.
The will is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions, and to the removal of those uneasinesses which it then feels in its want of, and longings after, them. Locke.
LONGINGLY. adv. [from longing.] With incessant wishes.
To his first bias longingly he leans,
And rather would be great by wicked means. Dryden.
LONGISH. adj. [from long.] Somewhat long.
LONGITUDE. n. f. [longitudo, French; longitudo, Latin.]
1. Length; the greatest dimension.
The ancients did determine the longitude of all rooms, which were longer than broad, by the double of their latitude. Watson's Architect.
The variety of the alphabet was in mere longitude only;
but the thousand parts of our bodies may be diversified by situation in all the dimensions of solid bodies; which multiplies all over and over again, and overwhelms the fancy in a new abyss of unfathomable number. Bentley's Sermons.
This universal gravitation is an incessant and uniform action by certain and established laws, according to quantity of matter and longitude of distance, that it cannot be destroyed nor impaired. Bentley's Sermons.
2. The circumference of the earth measured from any meridian.
Some of Magellan's company were the first that did compass the world through all the degrees of longitude. Abbot.
3. The distance of any part of the earth to the east or west of any place.
To conclude;
Of longitude, what other way have we,
But to mark when and where the dark eclipses be? Donne.
His was the method of discovering the longitude by bomb vessels. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
4. The position of any thing to east or west.
The longitude of a star is its distance from the first point of numeration toward the east, which first point, unto the ancients, was the vernal equinox. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
LONGITUDINAL. adj. [from longitude; longitudinalis, French.]
Measured by the length; running in the longest direction.
Longitudinal is opposed to transverse: these vessels are dilated, and their longitudinal diameters fringed, and so the length of the whole muscle shortened. Cheyne.
LONGLY.

L O O

- LONGLY. adv. [from long.] Longingly; with great liking.
Master, you look'd to longly on the maid,
Perhaps, you mark not what's the pith of all. Shakep.
LONGOSOME. adj. [from long.] Tedious; wearisome by its length.
They found the war so churlish and longsome, as they grew then to a resolution, that, as long as England stood in state to succour those countries, they should but consume themselves in an endless war. Bacon's War with Spain.
When chill'd by adverse snows, and beating rain,
We tread with weary steps the longsome plain. Prior.
LONGSUFFERING. adj. [long and suffering.] Patient; not easily provoked.
The Lord God, merciful and gracious, longsuffering, and abundant in goodness. Exod. xxxiv. 6.
LONGSUFFERING. n. f. Patience of offence; clemency.
We infer from the mercy and longsuffering of God, that they were themselves sufficiently secure of his favour. Regent.
LONGTAIL. n. f. [Long and tail.] Cut and long tail: a canting term for, one or another.
He will maintain you like a gentlewoman.
— Aye, that I will come cut and longtail under the degree of a square. Shakep. Merry Wives of Windsor.
LONGWAYS. adv. [This and many other words for terminated are corrupted from ways.] In the longitudinal direction.
This island stands as a vast mole, which lies longways, almost in a parallel line to Naples. Addison on Italy.
LONGWINDED. adj. [Long and wind.] Long-breathed; tedious.
My simile you minded,
Which, I confess, is too longwinded. Swift.
LONGWISE. adv. [Long and wise.] In the longitudinal direction.
They make a little cross of a quill, longwise of that part of the quill which hath the pith, and crosswise of that piece of the quill without pith. Bacon.
He was laid upon two beds, the one joined longwise unto the other, both which he filled with his length. Hakewill.
LOO. n. f. A game at cards.
A secret indignation, that all those affections of the mind should be thus vilely thrown away upon a hand at loo. Addison.
In the fights of loo. Pope.
LOONLY. adj. [looby and like.] Aukward; clumsy.
The plot of the farce was a grammar school, the master setting his boys their lessons, and a looby country fellow putting in for a part among the scholars. L'Estrange.
LOOF. n. f. It is that part aloft of the ship which lies just before the chees-trees, as far as the bulk head of the castle.
Sea Dictionary.
To LOOF. v. a. To bring the ship close to a wind.
LOOBY. n. f. [Of this word the derivation is unsettled. Skinner mentions looby, German, foolish; and Junius, labe, a clown, Welsh, which seems to be the true original.] A lubber; a clumsy clown.
The vices trace
From the father's scoundrel race,
Who could give the looby such airs?
Were they mafons, were they butchers? Swift.
LOOFED. adj. [from aloof.] Gone to a distance.
The once being loofed, Antony
Claps on his sea-wings, like a doating mallard, Leaving the fight. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.
To LOOK. v. n. [locan, Saxon.]
1. To direct the eye to or from any object.
Your queen died, she was more worth such gazes Than what you look on now. Shakep. Winter's Tale.
The gods look down, and the unnatural scene
They laugh at. Shakep. Coriolanus.
Abimelech looked out at a window, and saw Isaac. Gen.
Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up. Psal. xl. 12.
He was ruddy, and of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to. 1 Sam. xvi. 12.
The fathers shall not look back to their children. Jer.
He had looked round about on them with anger. Adark iii.
The state would cast the eye, and look about to see, whether there were any head under whom it might unite. Bacon.
Fine devices of arching water without spilling, be pretty things to look on, but nothing to health. Bacon's Essays.
Froth appears white, whether the sun be in the meridian, or anywhere between it and the horizon, and from what place sever the beholders look upon it. Boyle on Colours.
They'll rather wait the running of the river dry, than take pains to look about for a bridge.
Thus pond'ring, he look'd under with his eyes,
And saw the woman's tears. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Betran; if thou dar'st, look out Upon yon slaughter'd host. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
I cannot, without some indignation, look on an ill copy of an excellent original; much less can I behold with patience Virgil and Homer abused to their faces, by a burling interpreter. Dryden.
Intellectual being, in their constant endeavours after true

- felicity, can suspend this prosecution in particular cases, till they have looked before them, and informed themselves, whether that particular thing lie in their way to their main end. Locke.
There may be in his reach a book, containing pictures and discourses capable to delight and instruct him, which yet he may never take the pains to look into. Locke.
Towards those who communicate their thoughts in print,
I cannot but look with a friendly regard, provided there is no tendency in their writings to vice. Addison's Freeholder.
A solid and substantial greatness of soul looks down with a generous neglect on the censures and applauses of the multi-
I have nothing left but to gather up the reliques of a wreck, and look about me to see how few friends I have left. Pope to Swift.
The optick nerves of such animals as look the same way with both eyes, as of men, meet before they come into the brain; but the optick nerves of such animals as do not look the same way with both eyes, as of fishes, do not meet.
Newton's Opticks.
2. To have power of seeing.
Fate sees thy life lodg'd in a brittle glass,
And looks it through, but to it cannot pass. Dryden.
3. To direct the intellectual eye.
In regard of our deliverance past, and our danger present and to come, let us look up to God, and every man reform his own ways. Bacon's New Atlantis.
We are not only to look at the bare action, but at the reason of it. Stillingfleet.
The man only saved the pigeon from the hawk, that he might eat it himself; and if we look well about us, we shall find this to be the case of most mediations. L'Estrange.
They will not look beyond the received notions of the place and age, nor have so presumptuous a thought as to be wiser than their neighbours. Locke.
Every one, if he would look into himself, would find some defect of his particular genius. Locke.
Change a man's view of things; let him look into the future state of bliss or misery, and see there God, the righteous Judge, ready to render every man according to his deeds.
Locke.
4. To expect.
Being once chafed, he speaks
What's in his heart; and that is there, which looks
With us to break his neck. Shakep. Coriolanus.
If he long deferred the march, he must look to fight another battle before he could reach Oxford. Clarendon.
5. To take care; to watch.
I look that ye bind them fast. Shakep. Henry VI.
He that gathered a hundred bushels of apples, had thereby a property in them: he was only to look that he used them before they spoiled, else he robbed others. Locke.
6. To be directed with regard to any object.
Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee. Prov. iv. 25.
7. To have any particular appearance.
I took the way,
Which through a path, but scarcely printed, lay;
And look'd as lightly pres'd by fairy feet. Dryden.
That spotless modesty of private and publick life, that generous spirit, which all other Christians ought to labour after, should look in us as if they were natural. Spratt's Sermon.
Piety, as it is thought a way to the favour of God; and fortune, as it looks like the effect either of that, or at least of prudence and courage, beget authority. Temple.
Cowards are offensive to my sight;
Nor shall they see me do an act that looks Below the courage of a Spartan king. Dryd. Cleomenes.
Should I publish any favours done me by your lordship, I am afraid it would look more like vanity than gratitude. Addison.
Something very noble may be discerned, but it looketh cumbersome. Felton on the Classics.
Late, a sad spectacle of woe, he trod
The desert sands, and now he looks a god. Pope's Odyss.
From the vices and follies of others, observe how such a practice looks in another person, and remember that it looks as ill, or worse, in yourself. Watts.
8. To seem.
To complain of want, and yet refuse all offers of a supply, looks very fullen. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
This makes it look the more like truth, nature being frugal in her principles, but various in the effects thence arising.
Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.
9. To have any air, mien, or manner.
Nay look not big, nor stamp, nor flare, nor fret,
I will be master of what is mine own. Shakep. Henry IV.
What haste looks through his eyes?
So should he look that seems to speak things strange. Shak.
Give me your hand, and trust me you look well, and bear your years very well. Shakep. Henry IV.

Can

Can these, or such, be any aids to us?
Look they as they were built to shake the world,
 Or be a moment to our enterprise? Benj. Johnson.
 Though I cannot tell what a man says; if he will be sincere, I may easily know what he looks. Collier.
 It will be his lot to look singular in loose and licentious times, and to become a by-word. Atterbury's Sermons.
 10. To form the air in any particular manner, in regarding or beholding.
 I welcome the condition of the time,
 Which cannot look more hideously on me,
 Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakefp. Henry IV.
 That which was the worst now least afflicts me:
 Blindness, for had I fight, confus'd with shame,
 How could I once look up, or heave the head. Milton.
 These look up to you with reverence, and would be animated by the sight of him at whose fowl they have taken fire in his writings. Swift to Pope.
 11. To Look about one. To be alarmed; to be vigilant.
 It will import those men who dwell careless to look about them; to enter into serious consultation, how they may avert that ruin. Decay of Piety.
 If you find a wasting of your flesh, then look about you, especially if troubled with a cough. Harvey on Consumptions.
 John's cause was a good milch cow, and many a man sub-fitted his family out of it: however, John began to think it high time to look about him. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
 12. To Look after. To attend; to take care of; to observe with care, anxiety, or tenderness.
 Mens hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. Luke xxi. 26.
 Politeness of manners, and knowledge of the world, should principally be looked after in a tutor. Locke on Education.
 A mother was wont to indulge her daughters, when any of them desired dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must be sure to look diligently after them, that they were not ill used. Locke on Education.
 My subject does not oblige me to look after the water, or point forth the place whereunto it is now retreated. Woodw.
 13. To Look for. To expect.
 Phalantus's disgrace was enervated, in lieu of comfort, of Artesia, who telling him the never looked for other, bad him seek some other mistress. Sidney.
 Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hooker, b. v.
 Thou
 Shalt feel our justice, in whose easiest passage
Look for no less than death. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
 If we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment. Heb. x.
 In dealing with cunning persons, it is good to say little to them, and that which they least look for. Bacon's Essays.
 This mistake was not such as they looked for; and, though the error in form seemed to be consented to, yet the substance of the accusation might be still insisted on. Clovenodon.
 Inordinate anxiety, and unnecessary scruples in confession, instead of setting you free, which is the benefit to be looked for by confession, perplex you the more. Taylor.
Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
 The bait of homed words. Milton.
 Drown'd in deep despair,
 He dares not offer one repenting prayer:
 Amaz'd he lies, and sadly looks for death. Dryden's Juv.
 I must with patience all the terms attend,
 Till mine is call'd; and that long look'd for day
 Is still encumber'd with some new delay. Dryden's Juv.
 This limitation of Adam's empire to his line, will save those the labour who would look for one heir amongst the race of brutes, but will very little contribute to the discovery of one amongst men. Locke.
 14. To Look into. To examine; to sift; to inspect closely; to observe narrowly.
 His nephew's levies to him appear'd
 To be a preparation 'gainst the Poland;
 But better look'd into, he truly found
 It was against your highness. Shakefp. Hamlet.
 The more frequently and narrowly we look into the works of nature, the more occasion we shall have to admire their beauty. Atterbury's Sermons.
 It is very well worth a traveller's while to look into all that lies in his way. Addison on Italy.
 15. To Look on. To respect; to regard; to esteem; to consider; to view; to think on.
 Ambitious men, if they be checked in their desires, become secretly discontent, and look upon men and matters with an evil eye. Bacon's Essays.
 I looked on Virgil as a fuccinct, majestic writer; one who weighed not only every thought, but every word and syllable. Dryden.
 If a harmless maid
 Should ere a wife become a nurse,
 Her friends would look on her the worse. Prior.

16. To Look on. To consider.
 He looked upon it as morally impossible, for persons infinitely proud to frame their minds to an impartial consideration of a religion that taught nothing but self-denial and the cross. South's Sermons.
 Do we not all profess to be of this excellent religion? but who will believe that we do so, that shall look upon the actions, and consider the lives of the greatest part of Christians. Tillotson's Sermons.
 In the want and ignorance of almost all things, they look-ed upon themselves as the happiest and wisest people of the universe. Locke on human Understanding.
 Those prayers you make for your recovery are to be looked upon as best heard by God, if they move him to a longer continuance of your sickness. Wake's Prepar. for Death.
 17. To Look on. To be a mere idle spectator.
 I'll be a candle-holder, and look on. Shakefp. Some come to meet their friends, and to make merry; others come only to look on. Bacon's Apophth.
 18. To Look over. To examine; to try one by one.
Look o'er the present and the former time,
 If no example of so vile a crime Appears, then mourn. Dryden's Juvenal.
 A young child, distracted with the number and variety of his play-games, tired his maid ever day to look them over. Locke on Education.
 19. To Look out. To search; to seek.
 When the thriving tradesman has got more than he can well employ in trade, his next thoughts are to look out for a purchase. Locke.
 Where the body is affected with pain or sickness, we are forward enough to look out for remedies, to listen greedily to every one that suggests them and immediately to apply them. Atterbury's Sermons.
 Where a foreign tongue is elegant, expressive, and compact, we must look out for words as beautiful and comprehensive as can be found. Felton on the Clapham.
 The curious are looking out, some for flattery, some for ironies, in that poem; the four folks think they have found out some. Swift to Pope.
 20. To Look out. To be on the watch.
 Is a man bound to look out sharp to plague himself? Collier.
 21. To Look to. To watch; to take care of.

 Look. interj. [properly the imperative mood of the verb: it is sometimes look ye.] See! lo! behold! observe.
 Look, where he comes, and my good man too; he's as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause. Shakefp.
 Look you, he must seem thus to the world: fear not your advancement. Shakefp.
 Look, when the world hath fewest barbarous people, but as such as will not marry, except they know means to live, as it is almost everywhere at this day, except Tartary, there is no danger of inundations of people. Bacon's Essays.

Look you! we that pretend to be subject to a constitution, must not carve out our own quality; for at this rate a cobbler may make himself a lord. Collier on Pride.
 LOOK. n. f.
 1. Air of the face; mien; cast of the countenance.
 Thou cream-fac'd loon,
 Where got'st thou that goose look?
 Thou wilt save the afflicted people, but wilt bring down high looks. Shakefp.
 Them gracious heav'n for nobler ends design'd,
 Their looks erected, and their clay refin'd. J. Dryden, jun.
 And though death be the king of terrors, yet pain, disgrace, and poverty, have frightful looks, able to discompose most men. Locke.
 2. The act of looking or seeing.
 Then on the crowd he cast a furious look,
 And wither'd all their strength. Dryden.
 When they met they made a fury stand,
 And glar'd, like angry lions, as they pass'd.
 And with'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryden.
 LOOKER. n. f. [from look.]
 1. One that looks.
 2. LOOKER ON. Spectator, not agent.
 Shepherds poor pipe, when his harsh found testifies anguish, into the fair looker on, pastime not passion enters. Sidney.
 Such labour is then more necessary than pleasant, both to them which undertake it, and for the lookers on. Hooker.
 My business in this state
 Made me a looker on here in Vienna;
 Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble Till it o'er-run the stew. Shakefp. Meas. for Measure.
 Did not this fatal war affront thy coat,
 Yet fatterst thou an idle looker on. Fairfax, b. i.
 The Spaniard's valour lieth in the eye of the looker on; but the English valour lieth about the soldier's heart: a valour of glory and a valour of natural courage are two things. Bac.
 The people love him;
 The lookers on, and the enquiring vulgar,
 Will talk themselves to action. Denham's Sophy.
 He wish'd he had indeed been gone,
 And only to have stood a looker on. Addison's Ovid.
 LOOKING-GLASS. n. f. [from look and glass.] Mirror; a glass which shews forms reflected.
 Command a mirror hither straight,
 That it may shew me what a face I have.
 —Go some of you and fetch a looking-glass. Shakefp.
 There is none so homely but loves a looking-glass. South.
 We should make no other use of our neighbours faults, than we do of a looking-glass to mend our own manners by. L'Estrange.
 The surface of the lake of Nemi is never ruffled with the least breath of wind, which perhaps, together with the clearness of its waters, gave it formerly the name of Diana's looking-glass. Addison on Italy.
 LOOM. n. f. [from loomus, a bottom of thread, Minshew.] Lome is a general name for a tool or instrument, Junius.] The frame in which the weavers work their cloth.
 He must leave no uneven thread in his loom, or by indulging to any one fort of reprovable discourse himself, defeat all his endeavours against the rest. Governm. of the Tongue.
 Minerva, studious to compose
 Her twisted threads, the web she strung,
 And o'er a loom of marble hung. Addison.
 A thousand maidens ply the purple loom.
 To weave the bed, and deck the regal room. Prior.
 To LOOM. v. n. [from loom, Sax.] To appear at sea. Skinner.
 LOOM. n. f. A bird.

 LOOK. n. f. [This word, which is now used only in Scotland, is the English word looni.] A forry fellow; a scoundrel; a rascal.
 Thou cream-fac'd loon!
 Where got'st thou that goose look?
 The false loon, who could not work his will
 By open force, employ'd his flat'ring skill:
 I hope, my lord, said he, I not offend;
 Are you afraid of me that are your friend?
 This young lord had an old cunning rogue, or, as the Scots call it, a false loon of a grandfather, that one might call a Jack of all trades. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
 LOOP. n. f. [from loopen, Dutch, to run.] A double through which a string or lace is drawn; an ornamental double or fringe.
 Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring fine,
 Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
 With this, so curious network, to compare.
 Make me to see't, or at least so prove it, Spenser.

That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,
 To hang a doubt on.
 Bind our crooked legs in hoops
 Made of shells, with silver loops. Benj. Johnson.
 An old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his cloaths with great integrity, while all the rest of the world are degenerated into buttons, pockets, and loops. Addison.
 LOOPED. adj. [from loop.] Full of holes.
 Poor naked wretches, where'er you are,
 That 'bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
 How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
 Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you
 From seasons such as these. Shakefp. King Lear.
 LOOPHOLE. n. f. [from loop and hole.]
 1. Aperture; hole to give a passage.
 The Indian herdsman shunning heat,
 Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds;
 At loopholes cut through thickest shade. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Ere the blabbing Eastern scout
 The nice morn on the Indian steep,
 From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton.
 Walk not near yon corner house by night; for there are blunderbusses planted in every loophole, that go off at the squeaking of a fiddle. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
 2. A shift; an evasion.
 Needleless, or needful, I not now contend,
 For still you have a loophole for a friend. Dryden.
 LOOPHOLED. adj. [from loophole.] Full of holes; full of openings, or void spaces.
 This uneasy loophol'd gaol,
 In which y' are hamper'd by the fetlock,
 Cannot but put y' in mind of wedlock. Hudibras, p. ii.
 LOORD. n. f. [from lord, Dutch; from lurdant, French; lurdan, Erse; a heavy, stupid, or witless fellow. D. Treux derives lurdant from lorde or lourde, a village in Gascoigny, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, say they. But dexterity in robbing implies some degree of subtilty, from which the Gascoigns are so far removed, that, at this day, they are awkward and heavy to a proverb. The Erse imports some degree of knavery, but then it is used in a ludicrous sense, as in English, you pretty rogue; though in general it denotes reproachful heaviness, or stupid laziness. Spenser's Scholiast says, lord was wont, among the old Britons, to signify a lord; and therefore the Danes, that usurped their tyranny here in Britain, were called, for more dread than dignity, lurdans, i. e. lord Danes, whose insolence and pride was so outrageous in this realm, that if it fortune'd a Briton to be going over a bridge, and saw the Dane set foot upon the same, he must return back till the Dane was clean over, else he must abide no less than present death: but being afterward expelled, the name of lurdane became so odious unto the people whom they had long oppress'd, that, even at this day, they use for more reproach to call the quartan ague the fever lurdane. So far the Scholiast, but erroneously. From Spenser's own words, it signifies something of stupid dulness rather than magisterial arrogance. Macbean.] A drone.
 Siker, thou'st but a lazy loord,
 And rekes much of thy fwinke,
 That with fond terms and witless words
 To bleer mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Pastorals.
 To LOOSE. v. a. [from loos, Sax.]
 1. To unbind; to untie any thing fastened.
 The shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose. Acts.

 Who is worthy to loose the seals thereof. Rev. v. 2.
 This is to cut the knot when we cannot loose it. Burnet.
 2. To relax.
 The joints of his loins were loosed. Dan. v. 6.
 3. To unbind any one bound.
 Loose and bring him to me. Luke xix. 30.
 He loosed, and set at liberty, four or five kings of the people of that country, that Berok kept in chains. Abbot.
 4. To free from imprisonment.
 Loose those appointed to death. Psal. cii. 20.
 The captive hasteneth that he may be loosed. Isaiah.
 5. To free from any obligation.
 Art thou loosed from a wife, seek not a wife. 1 Cor. vii.
 6. To free from any thing that shackles the mind.
 Ay; there's the man, who, loos'd from lust and pelf,
 Less to the pretor owes than to himself. Dryden's Persius.
 7. To free from any thing painful.
 Woman, thou art loosed from thy infirmity. Luke xiii. 12.
 8. To disengage.
 When heav'n was nam'd, they loos'd their hold again,
 Then sprung the forth, they follow'd her again. Dryden.
 To LOOSE. v. n. To set sail; to depart by loosing the anchor.
 Ye should have hearkened, and not have loosed from Crete. Acts xxvii. 21.

LOO

- The emperor loosing from Barcelona, came to the port of Mago, in the island of Minorca. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
Loosing thence by night, they were driven by contrary winds back into his port. Raleigh.
Loose, adj. [from the verb.]
 1. Unbound; untied.
 If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakespeare.
 Lo! I see four men loose walking. Dan. iii. 25.
 2. Not fast; not fixed.
 Those few that clashed might rebound after the collision; or if they cohered, yet by the next conflict might be separated again, and so on in an eternal vicissitude of fast and loose, though without ever confociating into the bodies of planets. Bentley's Sermons.
 3. Not tight; as, a loose robe.
 4. Not crowded; not close.
 With extended wings a host might pass,
 With horse and chariots, rank'd in loose array. Milton.
 5. Wanton; not chaste.
 Fair Venus seem'd unto his bed to bring Her, whom he waking evermore did ween
 To be the chafest flower that ay did spring
 On earthly branch, the daughter of a king,
 Now a loose leman to vile service bound.
 When loose epistles violate chaste eyes,
 She half consents who silently denies. Dryden's Ovid.
 6. Not close; not concise; lax.
 If an author be loose and diffuse in his style, the translator needs only regard the propriety of the language. Felton.
 7. Vague; indeterminate.
 It is but a loose thing to speak of possibilities, without the particular designs; so is it to speak of lawfulness without the particular cases. Bacon's holy War.
 It seems unaccountable to be so exact in the quantity of liquor where a small error was of little concern, and to be so loose in the doses of powerful medicines. Arbutnot.
 8. Not strict; not rigid.
 Because conscience, and the fear of swerving from that which is right, maketh them diligent observers of circumstances, the loose regard whereof is the nurse of vulgar folly. Hooker, b. v.
 9. Unconnected; rambling.
 I dare venture nothing without a strict examination; and am as much ashamed to put a loose indigested play upon the publick, as I should be to offer brass money in a payment. Dryden's Dedication to his Spanish Friar.
 Vario spends whole mornings in running over loose and unconnected pages, and with fresh curiosity is ever glancing over new words and ideas, and yet treasures up but little knowledge. Wat's Improvement of the Mind, p. i.
 10. Lax of body; not coltive.
 What hath a great influence upon the health, is going to stool regularly; people that are very loose have seldom strong thoughts, or strong bodies. Locke on Education.
 11. Disengaged; not enslaved.
 Their prevailing principle is, to fit as loose from those pleasures, and be as moderate in the use of them, as they can. Atterbury's Sermons.
 12. Disengaged from obligation.
 Now I stand
Loose of my vow; but who knows Cato's thoughts. Addis.
 13. Free from confinement.
 They did not let prisoners loose homeward. Isa. xiv. 17.
 With the wildest tempests loose;
 That thrown again upon the coast,
 I may once more repeat my pain. Prior.
 14. Remiss; not attentive.
 15. To break loose. To gain liberty.
 If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination which keeps us from chusing the worse, be liberty, madmen and fools are only the freemen. Locke.
 Like two black storms on either hand,
 Our Spanish army and the Indians stand;
 This only space betwixt the clouds is clear,
 Where you, like day, broke loose from both appear. Dryd.
 16. To let loose. To let at liberty; to let at large; to free from any restraint.
 And let the living bird loose into the open field. Lev. xiv. 7.
 We ourselves make our fortunes good or bad; and when God lets loose a tyrant upon us, or a sickness, if we fear to die, or know not to be patient, the calamity fits heavy upon us. Taylor's holy Living.
 In addition and division, either of space or duration, it is the number of its repeated additions or divisions that alone remains distinct, as will appear to any one who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expansion of space, or divisibility of matter. Locke.

LOO

- If one way of improvement cannot be made a recreation, they must be let loose to the childish play they fancy; which they should be weaned from, by being made fursit of it. Locke on Education.
Loose, n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Liberty; freedom from restraint.
 Come, and forsake thy cloying store,
 And all the busy pageantry
 That wise men scorn, and fools adore:
 Come, give thy soul a loose, and taste the pleasures of the poor. Dryden's Hecate.
 Lucia, might my big swollen heart
 Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow, Marcia could answer thee in sighs. Addison's Cato.
 The fiery Pegasus disdain
 To mind the rider's voice, or hear the reins;
 When glorious fields and opening camps he views,
 He runs with an unbounded loose. Prior.
 Poets should not, under a pretence of imitating the ancients, give themselves such a loose in lyrics, as if there were no connection in the world. Felton on the Classics.
 2. Dismission from any restraining force.
 Air at large maketh no noise, except it be sharply percuss'd; as in the sound of a string, where air is percuss'd by a hard and stiff body, and with a sharp loose. Bacon.
Loosely, adv. [from loose.]
 1. Not fast; not firmly.
 I thought your love eternal: was it ty'd
 So loosely, that a quarrel could divide? Dryden's Aureng.
 2. Without bandage.
 Her golden locks for haste were loosely shed
 About her ears. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 3. Without union or connection.
 He has eminently, and within himself, all degrees of perfection that exist loosely and separately in all second beings. Norris's Miscellany.
 4. Irregularly.
 In this age, a bishop, living loosely, was charged that his conversation was not according to the apostles lives. Camden's Remains.
 5. Negligently; carelessly.
 We have not loosely through silence permitted things to pass away as in a dream. Hooker.
 The chiming of some particular words in the memory, and making a noise in the head, seldom happens but when the mind is lazy, or very loosely and negligently employed. Locke.
 6. Unfoldly; meanly; without dignity.
 A prince should not be so loosely studied, as to remember so weak a composition, Shakspeare Henry IV. p. ii.
 7. Unchastly.
 The stage how loosely does Alfreed tread,
 Who fairly puts all characters to bed. Pope.
 To Loosen, v. n. [from loose.] To part.
 When the polypus appears in the throat, extract it that way; it being more ready to loosen when pulled in that direction than by the nose. Sharp's Surgery.
 To Loosen, v. a. [from loose.]
 1. To relax any thing tied.

 She breaks her back, the loosen'd fides give way,
 And plunge the Tufcan soldiers in the sea. Dryden's En.
 4. To free from restraint.
 It resolves those difficulties which the rules beget; it loosens his hands, and affixes his understanding. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 5. To make not coltive.
 Fear loosens the belly; because the heat retiring towards the heart, the guts are relaxed in the same manner as fear also causeth trembling. Bacon's Nat. History, N. 41.
Looseness, n. f. [from loose.]
 1. State contrary to that of being fast or fixed.
 The cause of the casting of skin and shell should seem to be the looseness of the skin or shell, that sticketh not close to the flesh. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 2. Latitude; criminal levity.
 A general looseness of principles and manners hath seized on us like a pestilence, that walketh not in darkness, but wasteth at noon-day. Atterbury's Sermons.
 3. Irregularity; neglect of laws.
 He endeavour'd to win the common people, both by straitened curtesy and by looseness of life. Hayward.
 4. Lewdness; unchastity.
 Courtly court he made still to his dame,
 Pour'd out in looseness on the grassy ground,
 Both careless of his health and of his fame. Fairy Queen.
 5. Diarrhea; flux of the belly.
 Taking

LOR

- Taking cold moveth looseness by contraction of the skin and outward parts. Bacon's Natural History.

 Fat meats, in phlegmatick stomachs, procure looseness and hinder retention. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Loosestrife, n. f. [lysanachia, Lat.] An herb.
 The leaves are entire, oblong, and produced sometimes by pairs, or three or four at each joint of the stalk: the flower consists of one leaf, which expands in a circular order, and is cut into several segments at the top; the fruit is globular, and open at the top, inclosing many seeds fixed to the placenta: it produces large spikes of fine yellow flowers in July, and is prescribed in medicine. Miller.
 To LOR, v. a. [It is derived by Skinner from laube, German, a leaf.]
 1. To cut the branches of trees.
 Gentle niece, what stern ungentle hands
 Have lopp'd, and hew'd, and made thy body bare
 Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments. Shakspeare.
 Like to pillars,
 Or hollow'd bodies, made of oak or fir,
 With branches lopp'd in wood, or mountain fell'd. Milt.
 The plants, whose luxury was lopp'd,
 Or age with crutches underprop'd. Cleaveland.
 The oak, growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lopp'd, is still the same oak. Locke.
 The hook the bore, instead of Cynthia's spear,
 To lop the growth of the luxuriant year. Pope.
 2. To cut any thing.
 The gardener may lop religion as he please.
 So long as there's a head,
 Hither will all the mountain spirits fly;
Lop that but off. Dryden's Sp. Friar.
 All that denominated it paradise was lopp'd off by the deluge, and that only left which it enjoyed in common with its neighbour countries. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 I'm sure in needful bonds it poets ties,
 Procrustes like, the ax or wheel applies,
 To lop the mangled sense, or stretch it into size. Smith.
LOR, n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. That which is cut from trees.
 Or liker thy head very tottie is,
 So on thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss;
 Now thyself hath lost both lop and top,
 As my budding branch thou would'st crop. Spenser.
 Nor should the boughs grow too big, because they give opportunity to the rain to soak into the tree, which will quickly cause it to decay, so that you must cut it down, or else both body and lop will be of little value. Mortimer.
 2. [Loppa, Swedisch.] A flea.
LOR, pret. of leap. Obsolete. This is retained in Scotland.
 With that sprang forth a naked swain,
 With spotted wings like peacock's train,
 And laughing lope to a tree. Spenser's Pastorals.
LOPPER, n. f. [from lop.] One that cuts trees.
LOPPERED, adj. Coagulated; as, loppered milk. Ainsworth.
 And thus it is still called in Scotland.
Loquacious, adj. [loquax, Latin.]
 1. Full of talk; full of tongue.
 To whom sad Eve,
 Confessing soon; yet not before her judge
 Bold, or loquacious, thus abash'd reply'd. Milt. Pa. L.
 In council she gives licence to her tongue,
Loquacious, bawling, ever in the wrong. Dryden.
 2. Speaking.
 Blind British bards, with volant touch Travels loquacious strings, whose solemn notes Provoke to harmless revells. Philips.
 3. Blabbing; not secret.
Loquacity, n. f. [loquacitus, Latin.] Too much talk.
 Why loquacity is to be avoided, the wife man gives sufficient reason for, In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin. Ray on Creation.
 Too great loquacity, and too great taciturnity by fits. Art.
LORD, n. f. [plafono, Saxon.]
 1. Monarch; ruler; governor.
 Man over man
 He made not lord.
 Of Athens he was lord. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
 We have our author's only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren. Locke.
 They call'd their lord Aftæon to the game,
 He shook his head in answer to the name.
 O'er love, o'er fear, extends his wide domain, Unconquer'd lord of pleasure and of pain. Va. of bu. Wishes.
 2. Master; supreme person.
 But now I was the lord
 Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
 Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
 This house, these servants, and this same myself
 Are yours, my lord. Shakspeare Merchant of Venice.

LOR

3. A tyrant; an oppressive ruler.
 Now being assembled into one company, rather without a lord than at liberty to accomplish their misery, they fall to division. Hayward.
 'Tis death to fight, but kingly to controul
Lord-like at ease, with arbitrary pow'r,
 To peel the chiefs, the people to devour. Dryden.
 4. A husband.
 I sit in bitterness of soul deplor'd
 My absent daughter, and my dearer lord. Pope's Odyssey.
 5. One who is at the head of any business; an overseer.

 8. A baron.
 9. An honorary title applied to offices; as, lord chief justice, lord mayor, and lord chief baron.
 To LORP, v. n. To domineer; to rule despotically.
 Unrighteous lord of love! what law is this,
 That me thou makest thus tormented be?
 The whiles the lordeth in licentious bliss
 Of her free will, scorning both thee and me. Spenser.
 I see them lording it in London streets. Shakspeare.
 Those huge tracts of ground they lorded over begat wealth, wealth usher'd in pride. Hovell's Vocal Forest.
 They had by this posses'd the tow'rs of Gath,
 And lorded over them whom now they serve. Milton's Ag.
 I should choole rather to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our lord, than by a denial of truths, through blood and perjury, wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne. South's Sermons.
 But if thy passions lord it in thy breast,
 Art thou not still a slave? Dryden's Persius.
 The valour of one man th' afflicted throne
 Imperial, that once lorded o'er the world, Sustain'd. Philips.
 The civilizers! the disturbers say,
 The robbers, the corrupters of mankind!
 Proud vagabonds! who make the world your home,
 And lord it where you have no right. Philips's Britain.
LORDING, n. f. [from lord.] Lord in contempt or ridicule.
 I'll question you
 Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys.
 You were pretty lordings then? Shakspeare Winter's Tale.
 To lordings proud I tune my lay,
 Who feast in bower or hall;
 Though dukes they be, to dukes I say,
 That pride will have a fall. Swift.
LORLING, n. f. A diminutive lord.
 Traulus, of amphibious breed,
 By the dam from lordings sprung,
 By the fire exhal'd from dung. Swift.
LORLINES, n. f. [from lordly.]

 2. Proud; haughty; imperious; insolent.
 So bad a peer—
 —As who, my lord?
 —Why, as yourself, my lord?
 An't like your lordly, lord protectorship? Shakspeare.
 Of me as of a common enemy,
 So dreaded once, may now exasperate them,
 I know not: lords are lordly in their wine. Milt. Agon.
 Expect another message more imperious,
 More lordly thund'ring than thou wilt bear. Milton.
 Ev'ry rich and lordly swain,
 With pride would drag about her chain. Swift.
LORDLY, adv. Imperiously; despotically; proudly.
 So when a tiger sucks the bullock's blood,
 A famish'd lion, issuing from the wood,
 Roars lordly fierce, and challenges the food. Dryden.
LORDSHIP, n. f. [from lord.]
 1. Dominion; power.
 Let me never know that any base affection should get any lordship in your thoughts, Sidney.
 It being set upon such an insensible rising of the ground, it gives the eye lordship over a good large circuit. Sidney.
 They which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles, exercise lordship over them, and their great ones exercise authority upon them. Mark x. 42.

Matt. v. 13.
4. To possess no longer; contrary to keep.
They have lost their trade of woollen drapery. Graunt.
No youth shall equal hopes of glory give;
The Trojan honour and the Roman boast,
Admir'd when living, and ador'd when lost. Dryden.
We should never quite lose sight of the country, though we are sometimes entertained with a distant prospect of it.
Addison's Essay on the Georgicks.
5. To have any thing gone so as that it cannot be found, or had again.
But if to honour lost 'tis still decreed
For you my bowl shall flow, my flocks shall bleed;
Judge and assert my right, impartial Jove. Pope's Odyssey.
When men are openly abandoned, and lost to all shame, they have no reason to think it hard, if their memory be reproached. Swift.
6. To bewilder.
I will go lose myself,
And wander up and down to view the city. Shakespeare.
Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.
When the mind pursues the idea of infinity, it uses the ideas and repetitions of numbers, which are so many distinct ideas, kept best by number from running into a confused heap, wherein the mind loses itself. Locke.
7. To deprive of.
How should you go about to lose him a wife he loves with so much passion. Temple.

LOT

8. To kill; to destroy.
9. To throw away; to employ ineffectually.
He has merit, good nature, and integrity, that are too often lost upon great men, or at least are not all three a match for flattery. Pope's Letters.
10. To mis; to part with, so as not to recover.
These sharp encounters, where always many more men are lost than are killed or taken prisoners, put such a stop to Middleton's march, that he was glad to retire. Clarendon.
- To LOSE. v. n.
1. Not to win.
We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too.
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shakespeare.
2. To decline; to fail.
Wisdom in discourse with her
*Los*es discount'nan'd, and like folly shews. Milton.
LOSEABLE. adj. [from lose.] Subject to privation.
Consider whether motion, or a propensity to it, be an inherent quality belonging to atoms in general, and not loseable by them. Boyle.
- LO'SEL*. n. f. [from loyan, to perish.] A scoundrel; a fory worthless fellow. A word now obsolete.
Such losels and scatterlings cannot easily, by any sheriff, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Spenser.
A loset wand'ring by the way,
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His bair breast. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
And losels lifted high, where I did look,
I mean to turn the next leaf of the book. Hubbard's Tale.
Be not with work of losels wit defamed,
Ne let such verses poetry be named. Hubbard's Tale.
By Cambridge a towne I do know,
Whose losels by losels doth shew
More here then is needful to tell. Tusser's Husbandry.
A grofs hag!
And, loset, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
- LO'SER*. n. f. [from lose.] One that is deprived of any thing; one that forfeits any thing; one that is impaired in his possession or hope; the contrary to winner or gainer.
With the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win. Shakespeare.
No man can be provident of his time that is not prudent in the choice of his company; and if one of the speakers be vain, tedious, and trifling, he that hears, and he that answers, are equal losers of their time. Taylor's holy Living.
Losers and malecontents, whose portion and inheritance is a freedom to speak. South's Sermons.
It cannot last, because that act seems to have been carried on rather by the interest of particular countries, than by that of the whole, which must be a loser by it. Temple.
A bull with gilded horns,
Shall be the portion of the conquering chief,
A sword and helm shall cheer the loser's grief. Dryden.
- LOSS*. n. f. [from lose.]
1. Forfeiture; the contrary to gain.
The only gain he purchased was to be capable of loss and detriment for the good of others. Hooker, b. v.
An evil natured son is the dishonour of his father that begat him; and a foolish daughter is born to his loss. Ecclesiast.
The statement of price of any of the landholder's commodities, lessens his income, and is a clear loss. Locke.
2. Mis.
If he were dead, what would betide of me?
—No other harm but loss of such a lord.
—The loss of such a lord includes all harms. Shakespeare.
3. Deprivation.
Her fellow ships from far her loss descri'd;
But only she was sunk, and all were safe beside. Dryden.
There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, with the slaughter of above two thousand of the enemy, with the loss but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.
4. Destruction.
Her fellow ships from far her loss descri'd;
But only she was sunk, and all were safe beside. Dryden.
There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, with the slaughter of above two thousand of the enemy, with the loss but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.
5. Fault; puzzle.
Not the least transaction of sense and motion in man, but philosophers are at a loss to comprehend. South's Sermon.
Reason is always striving, and always at a loss, while it is exercised about that which is not its proper object. Dryden.
A man may sometimes be at a loss which side to close with. Baker's Refl. on Learning.
6. Useless application.
It would be loss of time to explain any farther our superiority to the enemy in numbers of men and horse. Addison.
- LOST*. participial adj. [from lose.] No longer perceptible.
In seventeen days appear'd your pleasing coat,
And woody mountains, half in vapours lost. Pope's Odyssey.
- LOT*. n. f. [blaut, Gothic; plos, Saxon; lot, Dutch.]
1. Fortune; state assigned.
Kala at length concluded my ling'ring lot;
Disdain me not, although I be not fair, Who

LOV

- Who is an heir of many hundred sheep,
Doth beauty keep which never sun can burn,
Nor storms do turn. Sidney, b. i.
Our own lot is best; and by aiming at what we have not,
we lose what we have already. L'Estrange's Fables.
Prepar'd I stand; he was but born to try
The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope's Odyssey.
2. A die, or any thing used in determining chances.
Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scape-goat. Lev. xvi. 8.
Their talks in equal portions the divides,
And where unequal, there by lots decides. Dryden's Virg.
Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots, to shew; that he would not voluntarily expose them to so imminent danger. Notes on the Odyssey.
3. It seems in Shakespeare to signify a lucky or wished chance.
If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks.
My name hath touch'd your ears; it is Menenius. Shakespeare.
4. A portion; a parcel of goods as being drawn by lot: as;
what lot of silks had you at the sale?
5. Proportion of taxes: as; to pay scot and lot.
LOVE. n. f. [Latin.] See LORE.
The leaves of the love tree are like those of the nettle; the flowers consist of five leaves, expanded in form of a rose, containing many short stamina in the bosom: the fruit, which is a roundish berry, grows single in the bosom of its leaves.
The fruit of this tree is not so tempting to us, as it was to the companions of Ulysses: the wood is durable, and used to make pipes for wind instruments: the root is proper for hafts of knives, and was highly esteemed by the Romans for its beauty and use. Miller.
- LOTOS*. n. f. [Latin.] See LORE.
The trees around them all their food produce,
Lotos, the name divine, nectareous juice. Pope's Odyssey.
- LO'TION*. n. f. [Latin, Latin; lotion, French.]
A lotion is a form of medicine compounded of aqueous liquids, used to wash any part with; from lavo, to wash.
- In lotions in women's cases, he orders two potions of hellebore macerated in two cotylæ of water. Arbutnot on Coins.
- LO'TTERY*. n. f. [lottery, Fr. from lot.] A game of chance; a fortige; distribution of prizes by chance; a play in which lots are drawn for prizes.
Let high-sighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
The lottery that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead, will never be chosen by any but whom you shall rightly love. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
Every warrior may be said to be a soldier of fortune, and the best commanders to have a kind of lottery for their work.
South's Sermons.
- Fortune, that with malicious joy
Does man, her slave, oppress, Still various and unconstant still,
Promotes, degrades, delights in strife,
And makes a lottery of life. Dryden's Horace.
- LO'VAGE*. n. f. [lovisium, Latin.]
The loves of the loving leaves are cut about their borders like those of parsley; the flower consists, for the most part, of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose; each of these flowers are succeeded by two oblong, gibbous, furrowed seeds, which on one side have a leafy border. This plant is often used in medicine. Miller.
- LOUD*. adj.
1. Noisy; striking the ear with great force.
Contenting on the Lesbian shore,
His prowess Philomelides confest'd,
And loud acclaiming Greeks the victor blest'd. Pope.
The numbers soft and clear,
Gently steal upon the ear;
Now louder, and yet louder rise,
And fill with spreading sounds the skies. Pope's St. Cecilia.
2. Clamorous; turbulent.
She is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house.
Prov. vii. 11.
- LO'UDLY*. adv. [from loud.]
1. Noisily; so as to be heard far.
The soldier that philosopher well blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd. Denham.
2. Clamorously.
I read above fifty pamphlets, written by as many presbyterian divines, loudly disclaiming toleration. Swift.
- LO'UDNESS*. n. f. Noise; force of sound; turbulence; vehemence or furiousness of clamour.
Had any disaster made room for grief, it would have moved according to prudence, and the proportions of the provocation: it would not have fallen out into complaint or loudness. South's Sermons.
- To LOVE. v. a. [lupian, Saxon.]
1. To regard with passionate affection, as that of one sex to the other.

LOV

- Good Shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.
—It is to be made all of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service;
It is to be all made of fantasy,
All made of passion; and all made of wishes;
All adoration, duty, and obedience;
All humbleness, all patience, all impatience,
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakespeare. As you like it.
I could not love I'm sure
One who in love were wise. Cowley.
The jealous man wishes himself a kind of deity to the person he loves; he would be the only employment of her thoughts. Addison's Spectator, N. 170.
2. To regard with the affection of a friend.
None but his brethren he, and sisters, knew;
Whom the kind youth prefer'd to me;
And much above myself I lov'd them too. Cowley.
3. To regard with parental tenderness.
He that loveth me shall be loved of my father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. John xiv. 21.
4. To be pleased with.
Fish used to salt water delight more in fresh; we see that salmons and finets love to get into rivers, though against the stream. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 703.
Wit, eloquence, and poetry;
Arts which I lov'd. Cowley.
He lov'd my worthless rhimes. Cowley.
5. To regard with reverent unwillingness to offend.
Love the Lord thy God with all thine heart. Deut. vi. 5.
LOVE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The passion between the sexes.
Hearken to the birds love-learned song,
The dewie leaves among! Spenser's Epithalam.
While idly I stood looking on;
I found th' effect of love in idleness. Shakespeare.
My tales of love were wont to weary you;
I know you joy not in a love discourse. Shakespeare.
What! have I 'scaped love letters in the holiday-time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Shakespeare.
I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye,
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakespeare.
What need a vermil-tinctur'd lip for that;
Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the morn. Milton.
Love quarrels oft in pleasing concord end;
Not wedlock treachery, endang'ring life. Milton's Agon.
A love potion works more by the strength of charm than nature. Collier on Popularity.
You know y' are in my pow'r by making love. Dryden.
Let mutual joys our mutual trust combine;
And love, and love-born confidence be thine. Pope.
Cold is that breast which warm'd the world before,
And these love-darting eyes must roll no more. Pope.
2. Kindness; good-will; friendship.
Death grin on me; and I will think thou smil'st,
And kiss me as thy wife; misery's love,
O come to me! Shakespeare's King John.
What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?
My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;
That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants. Shakespeare.
God brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince. Dan. i. 9.
The one preach Christ of contention, but the other of love. Phil. i. 17.
By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another. Rom. xiii. 35.
Unwearied have we spent the nights,
Till the Ledaean stars, so fam'd for love;
3. Courtship.
Demetrius
Made love to Nedar's daughter Helena,
And won her soul. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.
If you will marry make your loves to me,
My lady is bespoken. Shakespeare's King Lear.
I to your assistance do make love,
Marking the business from the common eye. Shakespeare.
The enquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it; the knowledge of truth, the preference of it; and the belief of truth, the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. Bacon's Essays.
4. Tenderness; parental care.
No religion that ever was so fully represents the goodness of God, and his tender love to mankind, which is the most powerful argument to the love of God. Tillotson's Sermons.
5. Liking; inclination to: as, the love of one's country.
Open the temple gates unto my love. Spenser.
If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue;
These pretty pleasures might me move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Shakespeare.

LOV

The banish'd never hopes his love to see.
The lover and the love of human kind. Dryden.
7. Lewdness. Pope.
He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. Shakspeare. Rich. III.
8. Unreasonable liking. Taylor's holy living.
The love to sin makes a man sin against his own reason.
Men in love with their opinions may not only suppose what is in question, but allege wrong matter of fact. Locke.
9. Fondness; concord.
Come love and health to all!
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine; fill full. Shak.
Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness? 1 Cor. iv. 21.
10. Principle of union.
Love is the great instrument of nature, the bond and cement of society, the spirit and spring of the universe: love is such an affection as cannot so properly be said to be in the soul, as the soul to be in that: it is the whole man wrapt up into one desire. South's Sermons.
11. Picturelike representation of love.
The lovely babe was born with ev'ry grace:
Such was his form as painters, when they show
Their utmost art, on naked loves below. Dryden's Ovid.
12. A word of endearment.
'Tis no dishonour, trust me, love, 'tis none;
I would die for thee. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
13. Due reverence to God.
I know that you have not the love of God in you. John.
Love is of two sorts, of friendship and of desire; the one betwixt friends, the other betwixt lovers; the one a rational, the other a sensitive love: so our love of God consists of two parts, as esteeming of God, and desiring of him. Hammond.
The love of God makes a man chaste without the laborious arts of fasting, and exterior disciplines; he reaches at glory without any other arms but those of love. Taylor.
14. A kind of thin silk stuff. Ains.
This leaf held near the eye, and obverted to the light, appeared so full of pores, with such a transparency as that of a sieve, a piece of cyprus, or lovehood. Boyle on Colours.
LOVEAPPLE. n. f.
The loveapple has a flower consisting of one leaf, which expands in a circular order; the style afterwards becomes a roundish, soft, fleshy fruit, divided into several cells, which contain many flat seeds. Miller.
LOVEKNOT. n. f. [love and knot.] A complicated figure, by which affection interchanged is figured.
LOVELETTER. n. f. [love and letter.] Letter of courtship.
The children are educated in the different notions of their parents: the sons follow the father, while the daughters read loveletters and romances to their mother. Addison's Spect.
LOVELLY. adv. [lovely.] Amiaably; in such a manner as to excite love.
Thou look'st
Lovely dreadful. Orway's Venice Preserv'd.
LOVELINESS. n. f. [from lovely.] Amiableness; qualities of mind or body that excite love.
Carrying thus in one person the only two bands of goodwill, loveliness and lovingness. Sidney.
When I approach
Her loveliness, so absolute she seems,
That what she wills to do, or say,
Seems wisest, virtuoudest, discreetest, best. Milt. Pa. Lost.
If there is such a native loveliness in the sex, as to make them victorious when they are in the wrong, how restless is their power when they are on the side of truth? Addison.
LOVELORN. adj. [love and lorn.] Forsaken of one's love.
The love-lorn nightingale,
Nightly to thee her sad long mourneth well. Milton.
LOVELY. adj. [from love.] Amiaable; exciting love.
The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided. 2 Sam. i. 23.
The flowers which it had press'd Appeared to my view,
More fresh and lovely than the rest, Denham.
That in the meadows grew.
The Christian religion gives us a more lovely character of God than any religion ever did. Tillotson's Sermons.
The fair
With cleanly powder dry their hair;
And round their lovely breast and head
Fresh flow'rs their mingl'd odours shed. Prior.
LOVEMONGER. n. f. [love and monger.] One who deals in affairs of love.
Thou art an old lovmonger, and speakest skilfully. Shak.
LOVER. n. f. [from love.]
1. One who is in love.

LOV

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit. Shakspeare.
Let it be never said, that he whole breast
Is fill'd with love, should break a lover's rest. Dryden.
2. A friend; one who regards with kindness.
Your brother and his lover have embrac'd. Shakspeare.
I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my lover: I have been
The book of his good act, whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd haply amplified. Shakspeare.
3. One who likes any thing.
To be good and gracious, and a lover of knowledge, are amiable things. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
LO'OVER. n. f. [from l'ouvert, French, an opening.] An opening for the smoke to go out at in the roof of a cottage. Spens.
LO'VESECRET. n. f. [love and secret.] Secret between lovers.
What danger, Arimant, is this you fear?
Or what lovesecret which I must not hear. Dryden's Aur.
LO'VESICK. adj. [love and sick.] Disordered with love; languishing with amorous desire.
See, on the floor inhabits purple spring,
Where nightingales their lovesick ditty sing. Dryden.
To the dear mistress of my lovesick mind,
Her swain a pretty present has design'd. Dryden's Virg.
Of the reliefs to ease a lovesick mind, Flavia prescribes despair. Granville.
LO'VESOME. adj. [from love.] Lovely. A word not used.
Nothing new can spring
Without thy warmth, without thy influence bear,
Or beautiful or lovesome can appear. Dryden's Lucretius.
LO'VESONG. n. f. [love and song.] Song expressing love.
Poor Romeo is already dead!
Stabb'd with a white wench's black eye,
Run through the ear with a lovesong. Shakspeare.
Love's weeds and fatyick thorns are grown,
Where feeds of better arts were early sown. Donne.
LO'VESUIT. n. f. [love and suit.] Courtship.
His lovesuit hath been to me
As fearful as a siege. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
LO'VE-TALE. n. f. [love and tale.] Narrative of love.
The love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat;
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
Cato's a proper person to instruct
A love-tale with. Addison's Cato.
LO'VE-THOUGHT. n. f. [love and thought.] Amorous fancy.
Away to sweet beds of flowers,
Love-thoughts lie rich when canopied with bowers. Shakspeare.
LO'VE-TORY. n. f. [love and toy.] Small presents given by lovers.
Has this amorous gentleman presented himself with any lovetoy, such as gold snuff-boxes. Arbuth. and Pope's Ma. Sc.
LO'VE-TRICK. n. f. [love and trick.] Art of expressing love.
Other disports than dancing jollities;
Other lovetricks than glancing with the eyes. Donne.
LOUGH. n. f. [lough, Irish, a lake.] A lake; a large inland standing water.
A people near the northern pole that won,
Whom Ireland sent from loughs and forests here, Fairfax.
Divided far by sea from Europe's shore. Phil. Trans.
LOUGH NELS never freezes. Phil. Trans.
LO'VING. participial adj. [from love.]
1. Kind; affectionate.
So loving to my mother,
That he permitted not the winds of heav'n
To visit her face too roughly. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
This earl was of great courage, and for this cause much loved of his soldiers, to whom he was no less loving again. Heyward.
2. Expressing kindness.
The king took her in his arms till she came to herself, and comforted her with loving words. Elyth. xv. 8.
LO'VINGKINDNESS. Tenderness; favour; mercy. A scriptural word.
Remember, O Lord, thy tender mercies, and thy loving- kindnesses. Psal. cxv. 6.
He has adapted the arguments of obedience to the imperfection of our understanding, requiring us to consider him only under the amiable attributes of goodness and loving- kindness, and to adore him as our friend and patron. Rogers.
LO'VINGLY. adv. [from loving.] Affectionately; with kindness.
The new king, having no less lovingly performed all duties to him dead than alive, pursued on the siege of his uncles as natural brother, as much for the revenge of his father, as for the establishing of his own quiet. Sidney, b. ii.
It is no great matter to live lovingly with good-natured and meek persons; but he that can do so with the froward and perverso, he only hath true charity. Taylor.
LO'VINGNESS. n. f. [from loving.] Kindness; affection.
Carrying

LOW

Carrying thus in one person the only two bands of goodwill, loveliness and lovingness. Sidney, b. i.
LOUIS D'OR. n. f. [French.] A golden coin of France, valued at about seventeen shillings.
If he is desired to change a louis d'or, he must consider of it. Spectator, N°. 305.
TO LOUNGE. v. n. [lunderen, Dutch.] To idle; to live lazily.
LO'UNGER. n. f. [from lounge.] An idler.
LOURGE. n. f. [longuria, Latin.] A tall gangrel. Ains.
LOUSE. n. f. plural lice. [lur, Saxon; loys, Dutch.] A small animal, of which different species live on the bodies of men, beasts, and perhaps of all living creatures.
There were lice upon man and beast. Exodus. viii. 18.
Frogs, lice, and flies, mult all his palace fill With loath'd intrusion. Milton.
It is beyond even an atheist's credulity and impudence to affirm, that the first men might proceed out of the tumours of leaves of trees, as maggots and flies are supposed to do now, or might grow upon trees; or perhaps might be the lice of some prodigious animals, whose species is now extinct.
Bentley's Sermons.
Not that I value the money the fourth part of the flip of a louse. Swift.
TO LOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To clean from lice.
As for all other good women, that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to louse themselves in the sunshine, that they have been but a while in Ireland can well witness. Spenser on Ireland.
You fat and lous'd him all the sun-shine day. Swift.
LOUSEWORT. n. f. The name of a plant; called also rattle and cock's-comb.
There are four different kinds of this plant, which grow wild, and in some low meadows are very troublesome; especially one sort with yellow flowers, which rises to be a foot high or more, and is often in such plenty as to be the most predominant plant; but it is very bad food for cattle. Miller.
LOUSILY. adv. [from louse.] In a paltry, mean, and scurvy way.
LOUSINESS. n. f. [from louse.] The state of abounding with lice.
LOUSY. adj. [from louse.]
1. Swarming with lice; over-run with lice.
Let him be daub'd with louse, live high and whore,
Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden's Juu.
Sweetbriar and gooseberry are only lousy in dry times, or very hot places. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. Mean; low born; bred on the dunghill.
I pray you now remembrance on the lousy knave mine host.
A lousy knave, to have his gibes and his mockeries. Shakspeare.
LOUT. n. f. [loute, old Dutch. Mr. Lye.] A mean awkward fellow; a bumpkin; a clown.
Pamela, whose noble heart doth disdain, that the trust of her virtue is repaid in such a lout's hands, had yet, to shew an obedience, taken on shepherd's apparel. Sidney.
This lout, as he exceeds our lords, the odds
Is, that we fence are men, and you are gods. Shakspeare.
I have need of such a youth,
That can with some discretion do my business;
For 'tis no trusting to yon foolish lout. Shakspeare.
Thus wail'd the louts in melancholy strain. Gay's Past.
TO LOUR. v. n. [lurcan, to bend, Saxon.] To pay obedience; to bend; to bow; to stoop. Obsolete. It was used in a good sense. In Scotland they say, a fellow with louran or lutan shoulders; that is, one who bends forwards; his shoulders or back.
He fair the knight saluted, louring low,
Who fair him quitted, as that courteous was. Fa. Qu.
Under the sand-bag he was seen,
Louring low, like a for'fear green. Ben. Johnson's Underw.
The palmer, grey with age, with count'nance louring low,
His head ev'n to the earth before the king did bow. Dryden.
TO LOW. v. a. This word seems in Shakspeare to signify, to overpower.
I am lowed by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier. Shakspeare. Henry VI.
LO'UTISH. adj. [from lout.] Clownish; bumpkinly.
This loutish clown is such, that you never saw so ill-favoured a visor; his behaviour such, that he is beyond the degree of ridiculous. Sidney.
LO'UTISHLY. adv. [from lout.] With the air of a clown;
with the gait of a bumpkin.
Low, adj.
1. Not high.
2. Not rising far upwards.
It became a spreading vine of low stature. Ezek. xvii. 6.
3. Not elevated in situation.
O mighty Caesar! do'st thou lye so low?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils, Shrunk to this little measure? Shakspeare. Julius Caesar.
Whatever is washed away from them is carried down into the lower grounds, and into the sea, and nothing is brought back. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

LOW

4. Descending far downwards; deep.
5. Not deep; not swelling high; shallow: used of water.
As two men were walking by the sea-side at low water, they saw an oyster, and they both pointed at it together. L'Estrange.
It is low ebb sure with his accuser, when such peccadillo's are put in to swell the charge. Atterbury.
6. Not of high price: as, corn is low.
7. Not loud; not noisy.
As when in open air we blow,
The breath, though strain'd, sounds flat and low:
But if a trumpet take the blast,
It lifts it high, and makes it last. Waller.
The theatre is so well contrived, that, from the very deep of the stage, the lowest found may be heard distinctly to the farthest part of the audience; and yet, if you raise your voice as high as you please, there is nothing like an echo to cause confusion. Addison on Italy.
8. In latitudes near to the line.
They take their course either high to the north, or low to the south. Abbot's Descript. of the World.
9. Not rising to so great a sum as some other accumulation of particulars.
Who can imagine, that in sixteen or seventeen hundred years time, taking the lower chronology, that the earth had then stood, mankind should be propagated no farther than Judaea. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
10. Late in time: as, the lower empire.
11. Dejected; depressed.
To be wofly,
The lowest, most dejected, thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance. Shakspeare.
His spirits are so low his voice is drown'd,
He hears as from afar, or in a swoon,
Like the deaf murmur of a distant found. Dryden.
Though he before had gall and rage,
Which death or conquest must assuage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and thuns the foe. Prior.
12. Impotent; subdued.
To keep them all quiet, he must keep them in greater awe and less splendor; which power he will use to keep them as low as he pleases, and at no more cost than makes for his own pleasure. Granat's Bills of Mortality.
13. Not elevated in rank or station; abject.
He woos both high and low, both rich and poor. Shakspeare.
Try in men of low and mean education, who have never elevated their thoughts above the spade. Locke.
14. Dishonourable; betokening meanness of mind: as, low tricks.
15. Not sublime; not exalted in thought or diction.
He has not so many thoughts that are low and vulgar, but, at the same time, has not so many thoughts that are sublime and noble. Addison's Spectator, N°. 279.
In comparison of these divine writers, the noblest wits of the heathen world are low and dull. Felton on the Classics.
16. Reduced; in poor circumstances; as, I am low in the world.
Low, adv.
1. Not aloft; not at a high price; meanly: it is chiefly used in composition.
Proud of their numbers and secure in soul,
The confident and over-lusty French:
Do the low-rated English play at dice? Shakspeare. Hen. V.
This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever Ran the greenford; nothing she does or seems,
But snacks of something greater than herself.
Too noble for this place. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.
There under Ebon shades and low-brow'd rocks,
As ragged as thy locks,
In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell. Milton.
My eyes no object met
But low-hung clouds, that dipt themselves in rain,
To shake their fleeces on the earth again. Dryden.
No luxury found room
In low-roof'd houses, and bare walls of lome. Dryden.
Vast yellow offsprings are the German's pride;
But hotter climates narrower frames obtain,
And low-built bodies are the growth of Spain. Creech.
Whenever I am turned out, my lodge descends upon a low-spirited creeping family. Swift.
We wand'ring go through dreary wastes,
Where round some mould'ring tow'r pale ivy creeps,
And low-brow'd rocks hang nodding o'er the deeps. Pope.
Corruption, like a general flood,
Shall deluge all; and a'rice creeping on,
Spread like a low-born mist, and blot the sun. Pope.
2. In times near our own.
In that part of the world which was first inhabited, even as low down as Abraham's time, they wandered with their flocks and herds. Locke.
3. With a depression of the voice.
Lucia, speak low, he is retir'd to rest. Addison's Cato.

LOW

4. In a state of subjection.
How comes it that, having been once so low brought, and thoroughly subjected, they afterwards lifted up themselves so strongly again.
To Low. v. a. [from the adjective.] To sink; to make low. Probably misprinted for lower.
The value of guineas was lowed from one-and-twenty shillings and sixpence to one-and-twenty shillings.
To Low. v. n. [Saxon, lowan, Saxon. The adjective low, not high, is pronounced lo; the verb low, to bellow, low.] To bellow as a cow.
Doth the wild ass bray when he has grafs? or loweth the ox over his fodder?
The maids of Argos, who, with frantick cries, And imitated lowings, fill'd the skies.
Fair lo grac'd his shield, but lo now,
With horns exalted stands, and seems to low.
Had he been born some simple shepherd's heir,
The lowing herd, or fleecy sheep his care.
Lo'w'bell. n. f. [lacy, Dutch; leg, Saxon; or leg, Islandick, a flame, and bell.] A kind of fowling in the night, in which the birds are awakened by a bell, and lured by a flame into a net. Low denotes a flame in Scotland; and to low, to flame.
LOWE. n. f.
Low, lo, comes from the Saxon pleap, a hill, heap, or barrow; and so the Gothick blaiw is a monument or barrow.
To Lo'w'er. v. a. [from low.]
1. To bring low; to bring down by way of submission.
As our high vessels pass their wat'ry way,
Let all the naval world due homage pay;
With hasty reverence their top-honours lower,
Confessing the almighty power.
The suppliant nations
Bow to its ensigns, and with lower'd sails Confess the ocean's queen. Smith's Phœdrus and Hippolytus.
2. To suffer to sink down.
When the water of rivers issues out of the apertures with more than ordinary rapidity, it bears along with it such particles of loose matter as it met with in its passage through the stone, and it sustains those particles till its motion begins to remit, when by degrees it lowers them, and lets them fall.
3. To lessen; to make less in price or value.
The kingdom will lose by this lowering of interest, if it makes foreigners withdraw any of their money.
Some people know it is for their advantage to lower their interest.
To LOWER. v. n. To grow less; to fall; to sink.
By revolution low'ring, does become
The opposite of itself.
To Lo'w'er. v. n. [It is doubtful what was the primitive meaning of this word; it was originally applied to the appearance of the sky, it is no more than to grow low, as the sky seems to do in dark weather; if it was first used of the countenance, it may be derived from the Dutch loeren, to look askance.]
1. To appear dark, stormy, and gloomy; to be clouded.
Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious Summer by this son of York;
And all the clouds that lower'd upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
The low'ring spring, with lavish rain,
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain. Dryden.
When the heavens are filled with clouds, and all nature wears a lowering countenance, I withdraw myself from these uncomfortable scenes.
The dawn is overcast, the morning low'rs,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day.
If on Swithin's feast the welkin lowrs,
And ev'ry penthouse streams with hasty show'rs,
Twice twenty days shall clouds their fleeces drain. Gay.
2. To frown; to pout; to look sullen.
There was Diana when Actæon saw her, and one of her foolish nymphs, who weeping, and withal lowering, one might see the workman meant to set forth tears of anger.
He mounts the throne, and Juno took her place,
But sullen discontent sat low'ring on her face;
Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke.
Lo'w'er. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Cloudiness; gloominess.
2. Cloudiness of look.
Philoclea was jealous for Zelmae, not without so mighty a low as that face could yield.
Lo'w'ringly. adv. [from low.] With cloudiness; gloomily.
Lo'w'ermost. adj. [from low, lower, and most.] Lowest.
Plants have their femal parts uppermost, living creatures have their lowermost.
It will also happen, that the same part of the pipe which was now lowermost, will presently become higher, so that the water does ascend by descending; ascending in compa-

- riou to the whole instrument, and descending in respect of its several parts.
Lo'wland. n. f. [low and land.] The country that is low in respect of neighbouring hills; the marsh.
What a devil's he?
His errand was to draw the lowland damps,
And noisome vapours, from the foggy fens,
Then breathe the baleful fench with all his force.
No nat'ral cause she found from brooks or bogs,
Or marshy lowlands, to produce the fogs.
Lo'wly. adv. [from low.]
1. Humbly; without pride.
2. Meanly; without dignity.
Lo'wliness. n. f. [from low.]
1. Humility; freedom from pride.
Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face.
As justice, verity, temperance, stabilities,
Bounty, perfection, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them.
With lowliness majestic, from her seat,
And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay,
Rose.
If with a true Christian lowliness of heart, and a devout fervency of soul, we perform them, we shall find, that they will turn to a greater account to us, than all the warlike preparations in which we trust.
2. Meanness; want of dignity; abject depression.
They continued in that lowliness until the time that the division between the two houses of Lancaster and York arose.
The lowliness of my fortune has not yet brought me to flatter vice; and it is my duty to give testimony to virtue.
Lo'wly. adj. [from low.]
1. Humble; meek; mild.
Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart.
He did bend to us a little, and put his arms abroad; we of our parts saluted him in a very lowly and submissive manner, as looking that from him we should receive sentence of life or death.
With cries they fill'd the holy fane;
Then thus with lowly voice Ilioneus began.
The heavens are not pure in his sight, and he charges even his angels with folly; with how lowly a reverence must we bow down our souls before so excellent a being, and adore a nature so much superior to our own.
2. Mean; wanting dignity; not great.
For from the natal hour distinctive names,
One common right the great and lowly claims.
3. Not lofty; not sublime.
For all who read, and reading not disdain,
These rural poems, and their lowly strain,
The name of Varus oft inscrib'd shall see.
Lo'wly. adv. [from low.]
1. Not highly; meanly; without grandeur; without dignity.
I will shew myself highly fed, and lowly taught; I know my business is but to the court.
'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.
2. Humbly; meekly; modestly.
Heav'n is for thee too high
To know what passes there; be lowly wife:
Think only what concerns thee, and thy being.
Prefer'd the same request, and lowly bow'd.
Lo'w. n. f. [lium, Irish; leen, Dutch, a stupid drone.] A scoundrel; a rascal.
King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown,
He thought them fixpence all too dear,
And therefore call'd the taylor low.
Lo'wness. n. f. [from low.]
1. Absence of height; small distance from the ground.
By th' height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth,
Or foison follow.
The lowness of the bough where the fruit cometh, maketh the fruit greater, and to ripen better; for you shall even see, in apricots upon a wall, the greatest fruits towards the bottom.
In our Gothick cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, the lowness often opens it in breadth.
2. Meanness of condition, whether mental or external.
Nothing could have low'd nature
To such a lowness, but his unkind daughter.

LOZ

- Now I must
To the young man send humble treaties,
And alter in the shift of lozings.
3. Want of rank; want of dignity.
The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lozings of condition.
4. Want of sublimity; contrary to loftiness.
A transcendent height, as lozings me,
Makes her not see, or not show.
His style is accommodated to his subject, either high or low; if his fault be too much lozings, that of Persius is the hardness of his metaphors.
5. Submissiveness.
The people were in such lozings of obedience as subjects were like to yield, who had lived almost four-and-twenty years under so politic a king as his father.
6. Depression; dejection.
Hence proceeded that poverty and lozings of spirit to which a kingdom may be subject, as well as a particular person.
LOWTHOUGHTED. adj. [low and thought.] Having the thoughts withheld from sublime or heavenly meditations; mean of sentiment; narrow mindedness.
Above the smoke and stir of this dim spot,
Which men call earth, and with lowthoughted care,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being!
O grace serene! Oh virtue heav'nly fair!
Divine oblation of lowthoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky,
And faith our early immortality!
LOWSPITED. adj. [low and spit.] Dejected; depressed; not lively; not vivacious; not spritely.
Severity carried to the highest pitch breaks the mind; and then, in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a lowspited moped creature.
LOXODROMICK. n. f. [loxos and dromos; loxodromus, Lat.]
Loxodromick is the art of oblique sailing by the rhomb, which always makes an equal angle with every meridian; that is, when you sail neither directly under the equator, nor under one and the same meridian, but across them: hence the table of rhumbs, or the transverse tables of miles, with the table of longitudes and latitudes, by which the sailor may practically find his course, distance, latitude, or longitude, is called loxodromick.
LOYAL. adj. [loyal, Fr.]
1. Obedient; true to the prince.
Of Glosster's treachery,
And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot.
The regard of duty in that most loyal nation overcame all other difficulties.
Loyal subjects often seize their prince,
Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence.
2. Faithful in love; true to a lady, or lover.
Hail wedded love! by thee
Founded in reason loyal, just, and pure,
There Laodamia with Evadne moves,
Unhappy both! but loyal in their loves.
LOYALIST. n. f. [from loyal.] One who professes uncommon adherence to his king.
The cedar, by the infigation of the loyalists, fell out with the homebians.
LOYALLY. adv. [from loyal.] With fidelity; with true adherence to a king.
The circling year I wait, with ampler stores,
And fitter pomp, to hail my native shores;
Then by my realms due homage would be paid,
For wealthy kings are loyally obey'd.
LOYALTY. n. f. [loialité, French.]
1. Firm and faithful adherence to a prince.
Though loyalty, well held, to fools does make
Our faith meer folly; yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer.
To day shalt thou behold a subject die
For truth, for duty, and for loyalty.
Commotions flaw'd the heart
Of all their loyalties.
He had never had any veneration for the court, but only such loyalty to the king as the law required.
Unshaken, undetected, unterrify'd,
His loyalty he kept.
2. Fidelity to a lady, or lover.
LOYZENGE. n. f. [lozenge, French.] Of unknown etymology.
1. A rhomb.
The best builders resolve upon rectangular squares, as a mean between too few and too many angles; and through the equal inclination of the sides, they are stronger than the rhomb or lozenge.
2. Lozenge is a form of a medicine made into small pieces,

- to be held or chewed in the mouth till melted or wasted.
3. A cake of preserved fruit: both these are so denominated from the original form, which was rhomboidal.
L.P. a contraction for lordship.
LU'BBARD. n. f. [from lubber.] A lazy sturdy fellow.
Yet their wine and their victuals those curmudgeon lubbards
Lock up from my sight, in cellars and cupboards.
LU'BBER. n. f. [of this word the best derivation seems to be from lubber, said by Junius to signify in Danish fat.] A sturdy drone; an idle, fat, bulky lofel; a booby.
For tempest and showers deceiveth a many,
And ling'ring lubbards loose many a penie.
These chase the smaller shoals of fish from the main sea into the havens, leaping up and down, puffing like a fat lubber out of breath.
They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his feet were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking.
A notable lubber thou reportest him to be.
Tell how the drudging goblin sweat,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,
That ten day labourers could not end;
Then lies him down the lubber fend.
Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did your lubber state mankind bestride.
How can you name that superannuated lubber?
LU'BBERLY. adj. [from lubber.] Lazy and bulky.
I came at Eaton to marry Mrs. Anne Page; and she's a great lubberly boy.
LU'BBERLY. adv. Aukwardly; clumsily.
Merry andrew on the low rope copies lubberly the same tricks which his master is so dexterously performing on the high.
LU. n. f. A game at cards.
Ev'n mighty pain who kings and queens o'erthrew,
And mow'd down armies in the fights of lu.
To LU'BRICATE. v. a. [from lubricus, Lat.] To make smooth or slippery; to smoothe.
There are alimts which, besides this lubricating quality, stimulate in a small degree.
The patient is relieved by the mucilaginous and the sapaceous remedies, some of which lubricate, and others both lubricate and stimulate.
To LU'BRICATE. v. n. [from lubricus, Latin.] To smooth; to make slippery.
LUBRICITY. n. f. [lubricus, Latin; lubricité, French.]
1. Slipperiness; smoothness of surface.
2. Aptness to glide over any part, or to facilitate motion.
Both the ingredients are of a lubricating nature; the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation.
3. Uncertainty; slipperiness; instability.
The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same conveniences in any modification.
He that enjoyed crowns, and knew their worth, excepted them not out of the charge of universal vanity; and yet the politician is not discouraged at the inconstancy of human affairs, and the lubricity of his subject.
A state of tranquillity is never to be attained, but by keeping perpetually in our thoughts the certainty of death, and the lubricity of fortune.
4. Wantonness; lewdness.
From the lechery of these fauns, he thinks that satyr is derived from them, as if wantonness and lubricity were essential to that poem which ought in all to be avoided.
LU'BRICK. adj. [lubricus, Latin.]
1. Slippery; smooth on the surface.
Of short thick fobs, whose thund'ring volleys float
And roul themselves over her lubrick throat,
In panting murmurs.
2. Uncertain; unsteady.
I will deduce him from his cradle through the deep and lubrick waves of state, till he is swallowed in the gulph of fatality.
3. Wanton; lewd. [lubrique, French.]
Why were we hurry'd down
This lubrick and adult'rate age;
Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,
T' encrease the steaming ordures of the stage.
LU'BRICIOUS. adj. [lubricus, Latin.]
1. Slippery; smooth.
The parts of water being voluble and lubricous as well as fine, it easily insinuates itself into the tubes of vegetables, and by that means introduces into them the matter it bears along with it.
2. Uncertain.
The judgment being the leading power, if it be stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, and peremptorily resolved in them, the practice will be as irregular as the conceptions.

Plutarch quotes this as an instance of Homer's judgment, in closing a ludicrous scene with decency and instruction.

LUDICROUSLY. adv. [ludicrous, Latin.] Sportively; in burlesque; in a manner that may excite laughter.

LUDICROUSNESS. n. f. [ludicrous, Latin.] Burlesque; sportiveness; merry cast or manner; ridiculousness.

LUDIFICATION. n. f. [ludificatio, Latin.] The act of mocking, or making sport with another.

I did demand what news from Shrewsbury. He told me, that rebellion had ill luck, And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold.

That part of mankind who have had the justice, or the luck, to pass, in common opinion, for the wisest, have followed a very different scent.

LUK

LUFF. n. f. [in Scotland.] The palm of the hand; as, clap me aris in my luff.

TO LUG. v. n. [loof, Latin.] To keep close to the wind. Sea term.

Contract your swelling sails, and luff to wind.

TO LUG. v. a. [aluccan, Saxon; to pull; loga, Swedish, the hollow of the hand.]

1. To hall or drag; to pull with rugged violence. You gods! why this

Will lug your priests and servants from your sides.

Thy bear is safe, and out of peril, Though lugg'd indeed, and wounded very ill.

When savage bears agree with bears, Shall secret ones lug faints by th' ears.

See him drag his feeble legs about, Like hounds ill coupled: Jowler lugs him still Through hedges.

Whole pleasure is to see a strumpet tear A cynick's beard, and lug him by the hair.

Either every single animal spirit must convey a whole representation, or else they must divide the image amongst them, and so lug off every one his share.

TO LUG OUT. To draw a sword, in burlesque language. But buff and belmen never know these cares, No time, nor trick of law, their action bars;

They will be heard, or they lug out and cut.

TO LUG. v. n. To drag; to come heavily: perhaps only misprinted for lugs.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch, Like fowl in air, too damp, and lugs along, As if the were a body in a body.

LUKE. n. f. 1. A kind of small fish. They feed on salt unmerchantable pilchards, tag worms, lugs, and little crabs.

2. [In Scotland.] An ear. That ample pit, yet far renown'd

For the large leap which Debon did compel Ceaulin to make, being eight lugs of ground.

LUCKAGAGE. n. f. [lucky, Latin.] Any thing cumbersome and unwieldy that is to be carried away; any thing of more weight than value.

Come bring your luggage nobly on your back.

To doat thus on such luggage?

Think not thou to find me slack, or need Thy politick maxims, or that cumbersome luggage of war there shewn me.

How durst thou with that swollen luggage O' th' self, old ir'n, and other baggage, T' oppose thy lumber against us?

The mind of man is too light to bear much certainty among the rustling winds of passion and opinion; and if the luggage be prized equally with the jewels, none will be cast out till all be shipwrecked.

A lively faith will bear aloft the mind, And leave the luggage of good works behind.

I am gathering up my luggages, and preparing for my journey.

LUGUBRIOUS. adj. [lugubris, French; lugubris, Latin.] Mournful; sorrowful.

A demure, or rather a lugubrious look, a sad or whining tone, makes up the sum of many mens humiliations.

LUKEWARM. adj. [The original of this word is doubted. Warmth, in Saxon, is pleos; in old Frisick bliz; in Dutch waer; whence probably our luke, to which warm may be added, to determine, by the first word, the force of the second, as we say, boiling hot.]

1. Moderately or mildly warm; so warm as to give only a pleasing sensation.

A dreary corse, whose life away did pass, All wallow'd in his own, yet lukewarm blood; That from his wound yet welled fresh alas!

May you a better feast never behold, You knot of mouth friends; smoke and lukewarm water Is your perfection.

Bathing the body in lukewarm water is of great advantage to temperate hot and sharp humours.

Whence is it but from this attractive power that water, which alone diffils with a gentle lukewarm heat, will not diffil from salt of tartar without a great heat?

2. Indifferent; not ardent; not zealous. If some few continue steadfast, it is an obedience to lukewarm and languishing, that it merits not the name of passion.

This sober conduct is a mighty virtue In lukewarm patriots.

LUKEWARMLY. adv. [from the adjective.] 1. With moderate Warmth.

2. With indifference.

LUKEWARMNESS. n. f. [from lukewarm.]

LUM

1. Moderate or pleasing heat. 2. Indifference; want of ardour. Some kind of zeal counts all merciful moderation lukewarmness.

The defect of zeal is lukewarmness, or coldness in religion; the excess is inordinate heat and spiritual fury.

Go dry your chaff and stubble, give fire to the zeal of your faction, and reproach them with lukewarmness.

TO LULL. v. a. [lula, Danish; lallo, Latin.] 1. To compose to sleep by a pleasing sound.

There trickled softly down A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play Amongst the puny stones, and made a sound To lull him soft a sleep, that by it lay.

Such sweet compulsion doth in mulick lie, To lull the daughters of necessity.

These lull'd by nightingales embracing slept.

2. To compose; to quiet; to put to rest. To find a foe it shall not be his hap; And peace shall lull him in her flow'ry lap.

No more these scenes my meditations aid, Or lull to rest the visionary maid.

By the vocal woods and waters lull'd, And lost in lonely musing in a dream.

LU'LAVY. n. f. [lallus, Latin.] Quem nutricum fuisse deum contentit Turnebus, from lull: it is observable that the nurses call sleep by, by; lullaby is therefore lull to sleep. A song to still babes.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles kept, Sung lullaby, to bring the world to rest.

Philomel, with melody, Sing in your sweet lullaby;

Lull a, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby.

If you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my bounty further.

—Marry, Sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again.

Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still crying children.

LUMBA'GO. n. f. [lumbi, Latin.] The loins.

Lumbago is a very troublesome about the loins, and small of the back, such as precede ague fits and fevers: they are most commonly from fullness and acrimony, in commotion with a disposition to yawning, shuddering, and erratic pains in other parts, and go off with evacuation; generally by sweat, and other critical discharges of fevers.

LUMBER. n. f. [loma, zeloma, Saxon; householdstuff; lommer, the dirt of an house, Dutch.] Any thing useless or cumbersome; any thing of more bulk than value.

The very bed was violated By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains; And thrown amongst the common lumber.

One son at home Concerns thee more than many guests to come. If to some useful art he be not bred, He grows more lumber, and is worse than dead.

Thy neighbour has remov'd his wretched store, Few hands will rid the lumber of the poor.

If God intended not the precise use of every single atom, that atom had been no better than a piece of lumber.

The poring schollasts mark; Wits, who, like owls, see only in the dark;

A lumber-house of books in ev'ry head.

TO LUMBER. v. a. [from the noun.] To heap like useless goods irregularly.

In Rollo we must have so much stuff lumbered together, that not the least beauty of tragedy can appear.

TO LUMBER. v. n. To move heavily, as burthened with his own bulk.

First let them run at large, Nor lumber o'er the meads; nor cross the wood.

LUMINARY. n. f. [luminare, Latin; luminaires, French.] 1. Any body which gives light.

The great luminary Dispenses light from far.

2. Any thing which gives intelligence. Sir John Graham, I know not upon what luminaries he espied in his face, dissuaded him from matting.

3. Any one that instructs mankind. The circulation of the blood, and the weight and spring of the air, had been reserved for a late happy discovery by two great luminaries of this island.

LUMINATION. n. f. [from lumen.] Emission of light.

LUMINOUS. n. f. [luminosus, French.] 1. Shining; emitting light.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly, broken and incinerate.

The luminous inferior orbs inclos'd, From chaos.

How came the sun to be luminous? Not from the necessity of natural causes.

2. Enlightened.

LUN

2. Enlightened.
Earth may, industrious of herself, fetch day,
Travelling east; and with her part averie
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.
3. Shining; bright.
The most luminous of the prismatic colours are the yellow and orange: these affect the senses more strongly than all the rest together. Newton's Opticks.
- LUMP. n. f. [lump, Dutch.]
1. A small mass of any matter.
The weed kal is by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Without this various agitation of the water, how could lumps of sugar or salt cast into it be so perfectly dissolved in it, that the lumps themselves totally disappear? Boyle.
An Omnibite wretch is prisoner made;
Whose flesh torn off by lumps, the rav'nous foe
In morsels cut. Tate.
Ev'ry fragrant flower, and od'rous green,
Were forced well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dry.
To conceive thus of the soul's intimate union with an infinite being, and by that union receiving of ideas, leads one into as gross thoughts, as a country-maid would have of an infinite butter-print, the several parts whereof being applied to her lump of butter, left on it the figure or idea there was present need of. Locke.
2. A shapeless mass.
Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigestible lump;
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shak. Henry VI.
Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity. Shakespeare.
Why might not there have been, in this great mass, huge lumps of solid matter, which, without any form or order, might be jumbled together. Kail against Burnet.
3. Mass undistinguished.
All mens honours
Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pinch he please. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
It is rare to find any of these metals pure; but copper, iron, gold, silver, lead, and tin, all promiscuously in one lump. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
4. The whole together; the gross.
If my readers will not go to the price of buying my papers by retail, they may buy them in the lump. Addison.
Other epidemical vices are rise and predominant only for a season, and must not be ascribed to human nature in the lump. Bentley's Sermons.
The principal gentlemen of several counties are stigmatized in a lump, under the notion of being papists. Swift.
- TO LUMP. v. a. To take in the gross, without attention to particulars.
The expences ought to be lumped together. Ayliffe's Par.
Boccalini, in his political balance, after laying France in one scale, throws Spain into the other, which wanted but very little of being a counterpoise: the Spaniards upon this reckoned, that if Spain of itself weighed so well, they could not fail of success when the several parts of the monarchy were lumped in the same scale. Addison.
- LU'MPISH. [lump and fish; lumpish, Lat.] A sort of fish.
- LU'MPING. adj. [from lump.] Large; heavy; great. A low word.
- Nick, thou shalt have a lumping pennyworth. Arbutnot.
- LU'MPISH. adj. [from lump.] Heavy; gross; dull; unactive; bulky.
Out of the earth was formed the flesh of man, and therefore heavy and lumpish. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Sylvia is lumpish, heavy, melancholy. Shakespeare.
Love is all spirit: fairies sooner may Be taken tardy, when they night tricks play,
Than we; we are too dull and lumpish. Suckling.
Little terrestrial particles swimming in it after the grossest were sunk down, which, by their heaviness and lumpish figure, made their way more speedily. Burnet.
How dull and how insensible a beast
Is man, who yet would lord it o'er the rest?
Philosophers and poets vainly strove
In every age the lumpish mass to move. Dryden.
- LU'MPISHLY. adv. [from lumpish.] With heaviness; with stupidity.
- LU'MPISHNESS. n. f. [from the adjective.] Stupid heaviness.
- LU'MPY. adj. [from lump.] Full of lumps; full of compact masses.
One of the best spades to dig hard lumpy clays, but too small for light garden mould. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- LU'NACY. n. f. [from luna, the moon.] A kind of madness influenced by the moon; madness in general.
Love is merely madness, and deserves as well a dark house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and cured is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too. Shakespeare. As you like it.

LUN

- Your kindred shun your house,
As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. Shakespeare.
There is difference of lunacy; I had rather be mad with him, that, when he had nothing, thought all the ships that came into the haven his, than with you, who, when you have so much coming in, think you have nothing. Suckling.
- LU'NAR. n. f. [lunaire, Fr. lunaris, Latin.] Relating to the moon; under the dominion of the moon.
They that have revolved that these years were but lunary years, viz. of a month, or Egyptian years, are easily confuted. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The figure of its seed much resembles a horseshoe, which Baptista Porta hath thought too low a signification, and raised the same unto a lunary representation. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
We upon our globe's last verge shall go,
And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.
- LU'NARY. n. f. [lunaria, Latin; lunaire, Fr.] Moonwort.
Then sprinkles she the juice of rue
With nine drops of the midnight dew,
From lunary distilling. Drayton's Nymphid.
- LU'NATED. adj. [from luna.] Formed like a half moon.
- LU'NATIC. adj. [lunaticus, Latin.] Mad; having the imagination influenced by the moon.
Bedlam beggars, from low farms,
Sometimes with lunatick bars, sometimes with prayers, Enforce their charity. Shakespeare.
- LU'NATICK. n. f. A madman.
The lunatick, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact:
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;
The madman. Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream.
I dare ensure any man well in his wits, for one in the thousand that he shall not die a lunatick in Bedlam within these seven years; because not above one in about one thousand five hundred have done so. Grant's Bills.
See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatick a king. Pope.
The residue of the yearly profits shall be laid out in purchasing a piece of land, and in building thereon an hospital for the reception of idiots and lunatics. Swift.
- LU'NATION. n. f. [lunation, French; lunas, Latin.] The revolution of the moon.
If the lunations be observed for a cycle of nineteen years, which is the cycle of the moon, the same observations will be verified for succeeding cycles for ever. Holder on Time.
- LUNCH. n. f. [Minshaw derives it from lunja, Spanish; luncheon, from kleinken, a small piece, Teutonic.] It probably comes from clunch or clunch. As much food as one's hand can hold.
When hungry thou stood'st flaring, like an oaf,
I flie'd the luncheon from the barley loaf;
With crumbled bread I thickened well the melfs. Gay.
- LUNE. n. f. [luna, Latin.]
1. Any thing in the shape of an half moon.
2. Fits of lunacy or frenzy, mad freaks. The French say of a man who is but fantastical or whimsical, Il a des lunes. Hammer.
- Bestrew them
These dangerous, unsafe lunes i' th' king;
He must be told on't, and he shall: the office Becomes a woman best. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
3. A laith: as, the lune of a hawk.
- LUNETTE. n. f. [French.] A small half moon.
Lunette is a covered place made before the courtine, which consists of two faces that form an angle inwards, and is commonly raised in fosses full of water, to serve instead of a fausse braye, and to dispute the enemy's passage: it is six toises in extent, of which the parapet is four. Trevout.
- LUNGS. n. f. [lungen, Saxon; long, Dutch.] The lights; the part by which breath is inspired and expired.
More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me. Shakespeare.
The bellows of his lungs begin to swell,
Nor can the good receive, nor bad expel. Dryden.
Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
And throats of brass inspir'd with iron lungs;
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.
- LUNGED. adj. [from lungs.] Having lungs; having the nature of lungs; drawing in and emitting air: as, the lungs in an animal body.
The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke. Dryden.
- LUNG-GROWN. adj. [lung and grown.]
The lungs sometimes grow fast to the skin that lines the breast within; whence such as are detained with that accident are lung-grown. Harvey on Conjunction.

LUR

- LU'NOWORT. n. f. [palmaria, Lat.]
The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, whose upper part is cut into several segments; from its fitulous flower-cup, which is for the most part pentagonal, rises the point encompassed by four embryos, which afterwards become so many seeds inclosed in the flower-cup. Miller.
- LUNISO'LAR. adj. [lunifoliar, French; luna and solaris, Lat.] Compounded of the revolution of sun and moon.
- LUNT. n. f. [lunte, Dutch.] The matchcord with which guns are fired.
- LU'PINE. n. f. [lupin, French; lupinus, Latin.] A kind of pulse.
It has a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pale, which afterward turns into a pod filled with either plain or spherical seeds: the leaves grow like fingers upon the foot stalks. Miller.
When Proteogenes would undertake any excellent piece, he used to diet himself with peas and lupines, that his invention might be quick and refined. Peacham on Drawing.
Where stalks of lupines grew,
Th' ensuing season, in return, may bear
The bearded product of the golden year. Dryden's Georg.
Proteogenes, drawing the picture of Jalyfus, took no other nourishment than lupines mixed with water, for fear of clogging his imagination by the luxury of his food. Dryden.
- LURCH. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from Pourche, a game of draughts, much used, as he says, among the Dutch; urche he derives from arca; so that, I suppose, those that are lost are left in lorche, in the lurch or box; whence the use of the word.]
To leave in the LURCH. To leave in a forlorn or deserted condition; to leave without help.
Will you now to peace incline,
And languish in the main design,
And leave us in the lurch. Denham.
But though th' art of a different church,
I will not leave thee in the lurch. Hudibras, p. i.
Have a care how you keep company with those that, when they find themselves upon a pinch, will leave their friends in the lurch. L'Estrange's Fables.
Can you break your word with three of the honestest best-meaning persons in the world? It is safe to take advantage of their simplicity and credulity, and leave them in the lurch at last. Arbutnot's Hist. of F. Bull.
Flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world, and leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Addison's Guardian.
- TO LURCH. v. n. [lueren, Dutch; or rather from the noun.]
1. To shift; to play tricks.
I myself, sometimes leaving the fear of heav'n on my left-hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shakespeare.
2. To lie in wait: we now rather use lurk.
While the one was upon wing, the other stood lurking upon the ground, and flew away with the fish. L'Estrange.
- TO LURCH. v. a. [lurca, Latin.]
1. To devour; to swallow greedily.
Too far off from great cities may hinder business; or too near lurcheb all provisions, and maketh every thing dear. Bacon's Essays.
2. To defeat; to disappoint. A word now used only in burlesque. [from the game lurch.]
He waxed like a sea;
And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurched all swords o' th' garland. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
God never designed the use of them to be continual; by putting such an emptiness in them, as should fo quickly fail and lurch the expectation. South's Sermons.
This is a sure rule, that will never deceive or lurch the sincere communicant. South's Sermons.
3. To steal privily; to filch; to pilfer.
LURCHER. n. f. [from lurch.]
1. One that watches to steal, or to betray or entrap.
I cannot represent those worthies more naturally than under the shadow of a pack of dogs, made up of finders, lurchers, and setters. Tatler, No. 59.
His thefts some tradesman pines,
Swift from his play the scudding lurcher flies;
Whilst ev'ry honest tongue stop thief refunds. Gay.
2. [Lurca, Latin.] A glutton; a gourmandizer. Not used.
- LURE. n. f. [lurre, French; lore, Dutch.]
1. Something held out to call a hawk.
My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And, till she stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd,
For then she never looks upon her lure. Shakespeare.
This lure she cast abroad, thinking that this fame and belief would draw, at one time or other, some birds to strike upon it. Bacon's Henry VII.
A great estate to an heir, is as a lure to all the birds of prey round about to seize on him. Bacon.

LUS

- A falc'ner Henry is, when Emma hawks;
With her of tarsels, and of lures he talks. Prior.
2. Any enticement; any thing that promises advantage.
How many have with a simile made small account
Of beauty, and her lures, easily scorn'd
All her assaults, on worthier things intent. Milt. Par. Reg.
This stiffneck'd pride, nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-flown hopes to reason's lure descend. Denham.
- TO LURE. v. n. [from the noun.] To call hawks.
Standing near one that lured loud and shrill, I had suddenly an offence, as if somewhat had broken, or been dislocated in my ear, and immediately after a loud ringing. Bacon.
- TO LURE. v. a. To attract; to entice; to draw.
As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd, come flying, hur'd
With scent of living carcasses. Milton's Par. Lost.
A man spent one day in labour, that he might pass the other at ease; and lured on by the pleasure of this bait, when he was in vigour he would provide for as many days as he could. Temple.
- Should you lure
From this dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots
Of pendant trees, the monarch of the brook,
Behoves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson's Spring.
Volumes on shelter'd stalls expanded lie,
And various science lures the learned eye. Gay's Trivia.
- LU'RID. adj. [luridus, Latin.] Gloomy; dismal.
Slow settling o'er the lurid grove, Unusual darkness broods. Thomson's Summer.
- TO LURK. v. n. [probably lurch and lurk are the same word. See LURCH.] To lie in wait; to lie hidden; to lie close.
Far in land a savage nation dwelt,
That never tasted grace, nor goodness felt;
But like wild beasts, lurking in loathsome den,
And flying fast as roebuck through the fen,
All naked. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Milbrook lurketh between two hills, a village of some eighty houses, and borrowing his name from a mill and little brook running there through. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
They lay not to live by their work,
But theevishly loiter and lurke. Tusser's Husbandry.
If sinners entice, consent not; if they say, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent. Prov. i. 11.
The wife, when danger or dishonour lurks, Safest, and seemliest by her husband stays. Milton.
- See
The lurking gold upon the fatal tree:
Then rend it off. Dryden's Æn.
- The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen;
He springs to vengeance. Pope.
I do not lurk in the dark: I am not wholly unknown to the world: I have set my name at length. Swift.
- LU'RKER. n. f. [from lurk.] A thief that lies in wait.
- LU'RKINGPLACE. n. f. [lurk and place.] Hiding place; secret place.
Take knowledge of all the lurkingplaces where he hideth himself. 1 Sam. xxiii. 23.
LU'SCIOUS. adj. [from delicious, say some; -but Skinner more probably derives it from luxurious, corruptly pronounced.]
1. Sweet, so as to nauseate.
2. Sweet in a great degree.
The food that to him now is as luscious as loches, shall shortly be as bitter as coloquintida. Shakespeare. Othello.
With brandish'd blade rush on him, break his gla's,
And shed the luscious liquor on the ground. Milton.
Blown roses hold their sweetness to the last,
And raisins keep their luscious native taste. Dryden.
3. Pleasing; delightful.
He will bait him in with the luscious propofal of some gainful purchase. South's Sermons.
- LU'SCIOUSLY. adv. [from luscious.] Sweet to a great degree.
- LU'SCIOUSNESS. n. f. [from luscious.] Immoderate sweetness.
Can there be greater indulgence in God, than to embitter sensualities whose lusciousness intoxicates us, and to clip wings which carry us from him. Decay of Piety.
Peas breed worms by reason of the lusciousness and sweetness of the grain. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- LU'SERN. n. f. [lupus cervarius, Latin.] A lynx.
- LUSH. adj. Of a dark, deep, full colour, opposite to pale and faint; from lushche. Hammer.
How lush and lusty the grafs look? how green? Shak.
- LUSK. adj. [lusche, French.] Idle; lazy; worthless. Diët.
- LU'SKISH. adj. [from lusk.] Somewhat inclinable to laziness or indolence.
- LU'SKISHLY. adv. [from luskish.] Lazily; indolently.
- LU'SKISHNESS. adv. [from luskish.] A disposition to laziness.
- LUSO'RIOUS. adj. [lusorius, Latin.] Used in play; sportive. Spenser.

LUS

Things more open to exception, yet unjustly condemned as unlawful; such as the lufurious lots, dancing and stage-plays. Bishop Sanderfen.

LUSORY. adj. [luforius, Latin.] Used in play.

There might be many entertaining contrivances for the instruction of children in geometry and geography, in such alluring and lufury methods, which would make a most agreeable and lasting impression. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Involved and close together wound, contain. Blackmore.

LYNX. n. f. [lynx, Latin.] A spotted beast, remarkable for speed and sharp sight.

He that has an idea of a beast with spots, has but a confused idea of a leopard, it not being thereby sufficiently distinguished from a lynx. Locke.

What modes of fight betwixt each wide extreme,
The mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam. Pope.

LYRE. n. f. [lyre, French; lyra, Latin.] A harp; a musical instrument to which poetry is, by poetical writers, supposed to be sung.

With other notes then to th' Orphean lyre. Milton.

My softest verse, my darling lyre, Upon Euphelia's toilet lay. Prior.

He never touched his lyre in such a truly chromatick manner as upon that occasion. Arbuth. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

LYRIC. n. f. [lyricus, Latin; lyrique, French.] Pertaining to a harp; singing to an harp.

All his trophies hung and acts enroll'd
In copious legend, or sweet lyric song. Milton's Agonist.

Somewhat of the purity of English, somewhat of more equal thoughts, somewhat of sweetness in the numbers; in one word, somewhat of a finer turn, and more lyric verse, is yet wanting. Dryden.

The lute neglected, and the lyric music,
Love taught my tears in sadder notes to flow,
And tun'd my heart to elegies of woe. Pope.

LYRICK. n. f. A poet who writes songs to the harp.

The greatest conqueror in this nation, after the manner of the old Grecian lyricks, did not only compose the words of his divine odes, but set them to music himself. Addison.

LYRIST. [lyristes, Latin.] A musician who plays upon the harp.

His tender theme the charming lyrist chose Minerva's anger, and the direful woes
Which voyaging from Troy the victors bore. Pope.

M A C

M Has, in English, one unvaried sound, by compression of the lips; as, mine, tame, camp: it is never mute.

MACARON. n. f. [macaron, Italian.]
1. A coarse, rude, low fellow; whence macaronick poetry, in which the language is purposely corrupted. Like a big wife, at sight of loathed meat, Ready to travail; so I sigh and sweat, To hear this macaron talk on in vain.

MACARON. n. f. [macaron, French, from macar.] A kind of sweet biscuit, made of flower, almonds, eggs, and sugar.

MACAW-TREE. n. f.
The macaw-tree is a species of the palm-tree, and is very common in the Caribbee islands, where the negroes pierce the tender fruit, whence issues a pleasant liquor, which they are very fond of; and the body of the tree affords a solid timber, with which they make javelins, arrows, &c. and is supposed by some to be a sort of ebony.

MACAW. n. f. A bird in the West-Indies.

MACE. n. f. [magga, Saxon; maça, Spanish.]

1. An ensign of authority worn before magistrates. He mightily upheld that royal mace Which now thou bear'st.
Death with his mace petrified smote.

2. [Masse, French; masa, Latin.] A heavy blunt weapon; a club of metal.

O murth'rous slumber! Lay'st thou thy leaden mace upon my boy That plays thee musick?
The Turkish troops breaking in with their scymitars and heavy iron maces, made a most bloody execution.
With his mace their monarch struck the ground; With inward trembling earth receiv'd the wound, And rising streams a ready passage found.
The mighty maces with such haste descend, They break the bones, and make the solid armour bend.

3. [Macis, Latin.] A kind of spice.

The nutmeg is inclosed in a threefold covering, of which the second is mace: it is a thin and flat membranaceous substance, of an oleaginous, and a yellowish colour: it has an extremely fragrant, aromatick, and agreeable smell, and a pleasant, but acrid and oleaginous taste. Mace is carminative, stomachick, and astringent.

Water, vinegar, and honey, is a most excellent sudorifick: it is more effectual with a little mace added to it.

MACEA'LE. n. f. [mace and ale.] Ale spiced with mace.

I prescribed him a draught of maceale, with hopes to dissolve him to rest.

MACEBEARER. n. f. [mace and bear.] One who carries the mace before persons in authority.

I was placed at a quadrangular table, opposite to the mace-bearer.

To MACE'RATE. v. a. [macer, Latin; macerer, French.]

1. To make lean; to wear away.

Recurrent pains of the stomach, megrims, and other recurrent head-aches, macerate the parts, and render the looks of patients consumptive and pining.

2. To mortify; to harass with corporal hardships.

Covetous men are all fools: for what greater folly can there be, or madness, than for such a man to macerate himself when he need not?

Out of an excess of zeal they practise mortifications; whereby they macerate their bodies, and impair their health.

3. To sleep almost to solution, either with or without heat.

In lotions in womens cases, he orders two portions of hel-lebore macerated in two cotyæ of water.

MACE'RATION. n. f. [maceration, French; from macerate.]

1. The act of wasting, or making lean.

To MA'CHINATE. v. a. [machinor, Latin; machiner, Fr.] To plan; to contrive.

MACHINA'TION. n. f. [machinatio, Lat. machination, French; from machinate.] Artifice; contrivance; malicious scheme.

If you miscarry, Your business of the world hath, so an end, And machination ceases.

O from their machinations free, That would my guiltless soul betray; From those who in my wrongs agree, And for my life their engines lay.

Some one intent on mischief, or insipid With devilish machination, might devise Like instrument, to plague the sons of men For sin; on war, and mutual slaughter bent.

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell, And devilish machinations come to nought.

How were they zealous in respect to their temporal governors? Not by open rebellion, not by private machinations; but in blessing and submitting to their emperors, and obeying them in all things but their idolatry.

MACHINE. n. f. [machina, Latin; machine, French. This word is pronounced maheen.]

1. Any complicated piece of workmanship.

We are led to conceive this great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity, as to conceive a watch to have been once in its first materials.

In a watch's fine machine, The added movements which declare How full the moon, how old the year, Derive their secondary pow'r From that which simply points the hour.

2. An engine.

In the hollow side, Selected numbers of their soldiers hide; With inward arms the dire machine they load, And iron bowels stuff the dark abode.

3. Supernatural agency in poems.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods.

MACH'NERY. n. f. [from machine.]

1. Machinery; complicated workmanship; self-moved engines.

1. A spot.

And lastly, the body of the sun may contract some spots or macule greater than usual, and by that means be darkened.

2. [In physick.] Any spots upon the skin, whether those in fevers or scorbutick habits.

To MA'CLATE. v. a. [macule, Lat.] To stain; to spot.

MACULA'TION. n. f. [from maculate.] Stain; spot; taint.

I will throw my glove to death himself, That there's no maculation in thy heart.

MACULE. n. f. [macula, Latin.] A spot; a stain.

MAD. adj. [gemaad, Saxon; matto, Italian.]

1. Disordered in the mind; broken in the understanding; distracted.

Alack, Sir, he is mad. 'Tis the time's plague when madmen lead the blind.

The poets sung, Thy mother from the sea was sprung; But they were mad to make thee young.

We must bind our passions in chains, lest like mad-folks they break their locks and bolts, and do all the mischief they can.

A bear, enrag'd at the stinging of a bee, ran like mad into the bee-garden, and over-turn'd all the hives.

Madmen ought not to be mad; But who can help his frenzy?

2. Over-run with any violent or unreasonable desire; with on, after, of, perhaps better for, before the object of desire.

It is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols.

The world is running mad after farce, the extremity of bad poetry, or rather the judgment that is fallen upon dramatick writing.

The people are not so very mad of acorns, but that they could be content to eat the bread of civil persons.

3. Enraged; furious.

Holy writ represents St. Paul as making havock of the church, and persecuting that way unto the death, and being exceedingly mad against them.

To MAD. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make mad; to make furious; to enrage.

O villain! cried out Zelmane, *madd*ed with finding an unlooked-for rival.

Had I but seen thy picture in this plight, It would have *madd*ed me.

This will witness outwardly, As strongly as the conscience do's within, To th' madding of her lord.

This musick *madd*ed me, let it sound no more; For though it have help'd madmen to their wits, In me, it seems, it will make witsmen mad.

This *madd*ed me, that perhaps ignoble hands Have overlaid him, for they could not conquer.

To MAD. v. n. To be mad; to be furious.

The madding wheels Of brazen chariots rag'd: dire was the noise Of conflict!

She, mixing with a throng Of madding matrons, bears the bride along.

MAD. n. f. [maðu, Saxon.] An earth worm.

MA'DAM. n. f. [ma dame, French, my dame.] The term of compliment used in address to ladies of every degree.

Certes, madam, ye have great cause of plaint. Madam, once more you look and move a queen!

MA'DBRAIN. } adj. [mad and brain.] Disordered in the mind; hotheaded.

I give my hand oppos'd against my heart, Unto a madbrain Rudeby, full of spleen.

And as he sloop'd again to take it up, This madbrain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff, That down fell priest and book.

Until the golden circuit on my head, Like to the glorious sun's transparent beams, Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw.

MA'DCAP. n. f. [mad and cap; either taking the cap for the head, or alluding to the caps put upon distracted persons by way of distinction.] A madman; a wild hotbrained fellow.

That last is Biron, the merry madcap lord; Not a word with him but a jest.

Where is his son, The nimble-footed madcap prince of Wales, And his comrades, that daft the world aside, And bid it pass.

M A G

To MA'DDEN. v. n. [from mad.] To become mad; to act as mad.

The dog-star rages, nay 'tis past a doubt, All Bedlam or Parnassus is let out;

Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand, They rave, recite, and madden round the land.

To MA'DDEN. v. a. To make mad.

Such mad'ning draughts of beauty, As for a while overwhelm'd his raptur'd thought.

MA'DDER. n. f. [masere, Saxon.]

The flower of the madder consists of one single leaf, which is cut into four or five segments, and expanded at the top; the flower-cup afterwards becomes a fruit, composed of two juicy berries closely joined together, containing seed for the most part, hollowed like a navel; the leaves are rough, and surround the stalks in whorles.

Madder is cultivated in vast quantities in Holland: what the Dutch send over for medicinal use is the root, which is only dried; but the greatest quantity is used by the dyers, who have it sent in coarse powder.

MADE, participle preterite of make.

Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents; but that the works of God should be made manifest.

MADEFA'CTION. n. f. [madefactio, Latin.] The act of making wet.

To all madefaction there is required an imbibition.

To MA'DEFY. v. a. [madefio, Latin.] To moisten; to make wet.

MADGEHOWLET. n. f. An owl.

MA'DHOUSE. n. f. [mad and house.] A house where madmen are cured or confined.

A fellow in a madhouse being asked how he came there? why, says he, the mad-folks abroad are too many for us, and so they have mastered all the sober people, and cooped them up here.

MA'DLY. adv. [from mad.] Without understanding; furiously.

He wav'd a torch aloft, and madly vain, Sought godlike worship from a servile train.

MA'DMAN. n. f. [mad and man.] A man deprived of his understanding.

They shall be like madmen, sparing none, but still sporting.

He that eagerly pursues any thing, is no better than a mad-man.

He who ties a madman's hands, or takes away his sword, loves his person while he disfarms his frenzy.

MADNESS. n. f. [from mad.]

1. Distraction; loss of understanding; perturbation of the faculties.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old tunes again: he so rails against all married mankind, so curses all Eve's daughters, and so buffets himself on the forehead, that any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tame and civility to this distemper.

2. There are degrees of madness as of folly, the disorderly jumbling ideas together, in some more, some less.

3. Fury; wildness; rage.

The power of God sets bounds to the raging of the sea, and restrains the madness of the people.

He rav'd with all the madness of despair, He roar'd, he beat his breast, and tore his hair.

MADRIER. n. f.

Madrier, in war, a thick plank armed with iron plates, having a cavity sufficient to receive the mouth of the petard when charged, with which it is applied against a gate, or other thing intended to be broken down.

MADRIGAL. n. f. [madrigal, Spanish and French, from mandra, Latin; whence it was written anciently mandriale, Italian.] A pastoral song.

A madrigal is a little amorous piece, which contains a certain number of unequal verses, not tied to the scrupulous regularity of a sonnet, or subtlety of an epigram: it consists of one single rank of verses, and in that differs from a canon, which consists of several strophes, which return in the same order and number.

Waters, by whose falls Birds sing melodious madrigals.

His artful strains have oft delay'd The huddling brook to hear his madrigal.

Their tongue is light and trifling in comparison of the English; more proper for sonnets, madrigals, and elegies, than heroic poetry.

To MADWORT. n. f. [mad and wort.] An herb.

MÆRE. adv. It is derived from the Saxon mær, famous, great, noted: so ælmere is all famous; æthelmere, famous for nobility.

To MAFFLE. v. n. To flammer.

MAFFLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A flammer.

MAGAZINE. n. f. [magazine, French, from the Arabick mach-san, a treasure.]

1. A storehouse, commonly an arsenal or armoury, or repository of provisions.
If it should appear fit to bestow shipping in those harbours, it shall be very needful that there be a magazine of all necessary provisions and munitions. Raleigh's Essays.
Plain heroic magnitude of mind;
Their armories and magazines contemns. Milton's Agonist.
Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden's Virg.
Useful arms in magazines we place,
All rang'd in order, and dispos'd with grace. Pope.
His head was so well stored a magazine, that nothing could be propos'd which he was not master of. Locke.
2. Of late this word has signified a miscellaneous pamphlet, from a periodical miscellany named the Gentleman's Magazine, by Edward Cave.
MAGE. n. f. [magus, Latin.] A magician. Spenser.
MAGGOT. n. f. [magro, Welsh; millepeda, Latin; mađu, Saxon.]
1. A small grub, which turns into a fly.
Out of the sides and back of the common caterpillar we have seen creep out small maggots. Ray on Creation.
From the fore although the insect flies,
It leaves a brood of maggots in disguise. Garth's Dispens.
2. Whimsy; caprice; odd fancy.
Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Three-pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation:
I do forswear them.
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be exprest
In russet yeas, and honest kerfy noes. Shakespeare.
To reconcile our late dissenters,
Our brethren though by other venters,
Unite them and their different maggots,
As long and short flicks are in faggots. Hudibras, p. iii.
She pricked his maggot, and touched him in the tender point; then he broke out into a violent passion. Arbutnot.
MAGGOTTINESS. n. f. [from maggoty.] The state of abounding with maggots.
MAGGOTTY. adv. [from maggot.]
1. Full of maggots.
2. Capricious; whimsical.
To pretend to work out a neat scheme of thoughts with a maggoty unfettered head, is as ridiculous as to think to write fitra in a jumbling coach. Norris's Miscel.
MAGICAL. n. f. [from magick.] Acting, or performed by secret and invisible powers, either of nature, or the agency of spirits.
I'll humbly signify what, in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected. Shakespeare.
They beheld unveiled the magical shield of your Ariosto, which dazzled the beholders with too much brightness; they can no longer hold up their arms. Dryden.
By the use of a looking-glass, and certain attire made of cambric, upon her head, she attained to an evil art and magical force in the motion of her eyes. Tatler, N° 110.
MAGICALLY. adv. [from magical.] According to the rites of magick.
In the time of Valens, divers curious men, by the falling of a ring magically prepared, judged that one Theodorus should succeed in the empire. Camden.
MAGICK. n. f. [magia, Latin.]
1. The art of putting in action the power of spirits: it was supposed that both good and bad spirits were subject to magick; yet magick was in general held unlawful; forcery; enchantment.
She once being loofe,
The noble ruin of her magick, Antony, Claps on his sea-wing. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
What charm, what magick, can over-rule the force of all these motives. Rogers.
2. The secret operations of natural powers.
The writers of natural magick do attribute much to the virtues that come from the parts of living creatures, as if they did infuse some immaterial virtue into the part severed. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
MAGICK. adj. Acting or doing by powers superior to the known power of nature; incantating; necromantic.
Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that distill'd by magick flights
Shall raise such artificial' frights,
As by the strength of his illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
And the brute earth would lend her nerves, and shake
Till all the magick structures rear'd so high,
Were shatter'd into heaps. Milton.
Like castles built by magick art in air,
That vanish at approach, such thoughts appear. Granville.

- MAGICIAN. n. f. [magicus, Latin.] One skilled in magick; an enchanter; a necromancer.
What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
An old magician, that did keep
Th' Hesperian fruit, and made the dragon sleep;
Her potent charms do troubled souls relieve,
And, where she lifts, makes calmest souls to grieve. Waller.
There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know; as, whether Roger Bacon was a mathematician, or a magician. Locke.
MAGISTERIAL. adj. [from magister, Latin.]
1. Such as suits a master.
Such a frame of government is paternal, not magisterial. King Charles.
He bids him attend as if he had the rod over him; and uses a magisterial authority while he instructs him. Dryden.
2. lofty; arrogant; proud; insolent; despotic.
We are not magisterial in opinions, nor, dictator like, obtrude our notions on any man. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Pretences go a great way with men that take fair words, and magisterial looks, for current payment. L'Estrange.
Those men are but trappan who are called to govern, being invested with authority, but bereaved of power; which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South's Sermon.
3. Chemically prepared, after the manner of a magistry.
Of corals are chiefly prepared the powder ground upon a marble, and the magisterial salt, to good purpose in some fevers: the tincture is no more than a solution of the magisterial salt. Grew's Museum.
MAGISTERIALLY. n. f. [from magisterial.] Arrogantly; with an air of authority.
A downright advice may be mistaken, as if it were spoken magisterially. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Over their pots and pipes, claiming and engrossing all these wholly to themselves; magisterially censuring the wisdom of all antiquity, scoffing at all piety, and new modelling the world. South's Sermon.
MAGISTERIALNESS. n. f. [from magisterial.] Haughtiness; airs of a master.
Peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact: in the one we impose upon mens understandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue.
MAGISTRY. n. f. [magisterium, Latin.]
Magistry is a term made use of by chemists to signify sometimes a very fine powder, made by solution and precipitation; as of bismuth, lead, &c. and sometimes refinings and reifinings substances; as those of jalap, scamony, &c. but the most genuine acceptation is to express that preparation of any body, wherein the whole, or most part, is, by the addition of somewhat, changed into a body of quite another kind; as when iron or copper is turned into crystals of Mars or Venus.
Paracelsus extracteth the magistry of wine, expelling it unto the extremity of cold; whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit be uncongealed in the centre. Brown.
The magistry of vegetables consists but of the more soluble and coloured parts of the plants that afford it. Boyle.
MAGISTRACY. n. f. [magistratus, Latin.] Office or dignity of a magistrate.
You share the world, her magistracies, priesthoods, Wealth, and felicity, amongst you, friends. B. Johnson.
He had no other intention but to disswade men from magistracy, or undertaking the publick offices of state. Brown.
Some have disputed even against magistracy itself. Atterbury.
Duelling is not only an usurpation of the divine prerogative, but it is an insult upon magistracy and good government. Clarissa.
MAGISTRALLY. adv. [magistralis, low Latin.] Despotically; authoritatively; magisterially.
What a presumption is this for one, who will not allow liberty to others, to assume to himself such a license to controul so magistrally. Bishop Bramhall against Hobbes.
MAGISTRATE. n. f. [magistratus, Latin.] A man publickly invested with authority; a governor; an executor of the laws.
They chuse their magistrate!
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
I treat here of those legal punishments which magistrates inflict upon their disobedient subjects. Decay of Piety.
MAGNALITY. n. f. [magnalia, Latin.] A great thing; something above the common rate. Not used.
Too greedy of magnalities, we make but favourable experiments concerning welcome truths. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
MAGNANIMITY. n. f. [magnanimitas, French; magnanimus, Latin.] Greatness of mind; bravery; elevation of soul.
With deadly hue, an armed corse did lye,
In whose dead face he read great magnanimity. Fa. Q. y. Let

- Let but the acts of the ancient Jews be but indifferently weighed, from whose magnanimity, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever hitherto match. Hooker, b. v.
They had enough reveng'd, having reduc'd
Their foe to misery beneath their fears,
The rest was magnanimity to remit,
If some convenient ransom was propos'd. Milton's Agonist.
Exploding many things under the name of trifles, is a very false proof either of wisdom or magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame. Swift.
MAGNANIMOUS. adj. [magnanimus, Latin.] Great of mind; elevated in sentiment; brave.
To give a kingdom hath been thought Greater and nobler done, and to lay down
Far more magnanimous, than to assume. Milton's Par. Reg.
In strength
All mortals I excell'd, and great in hopes,
With youthful courage and magnanimous thoughts
Of birth from heaven foretold, and high exploits. Milton.
Magnanimous industry is a resolved assiduity and care, answerable to any weighty work. Grew's Cofinal.
MAGNANIMOUSLY. adv. [from magnanimous.] Bravely; with greatness of mind.
A complete and generous education fits a man to perform justly, skilfully, and magnanimously, all the offices of peace and war. Milton on Education.
MAGNET. n. f. [magnes, Latin.] The loadstone; the stone that attracts iron.
Two magnets, heav'n and earth, allure to bliss,
The larger loadstone that, the nearer this. Dryden.
It may be reasonable to ask, whether obeying the magnet be essential to iron?
MAGNETICAL. adj. [from magnet.]
MAGNETICK. adj. [from magnet.]
1. Relating to the magnet.
Review this whole magnetick scheme. Blackmore.
Water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer, than gold; and gold is so rare as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetick effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton's Opticks.
2. Having powers correspondent to those of the magnet.
The magnet acts upon iron through all dense bodies not magnetick, nor red hot, without any diminution of its virtue; as through gold, silver, lead, glass, water. Newton's Opt.
3. Attractive; having the power to draw things distant.
The moon is magnetick of heat, as the sun is of cold and moisture. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
She should all parts to reunion bow;
She, that had all magnetick force alone,
To draw and fasten hundred parts in one. Donne.
They, as they move towards his all-cheering lamp,
Turn swift their various motions, or are turn'd
By his magnetick beam. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
4. Magnetick is once used by Milton for magnet.
Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
At will the manliest, resolute breast,
As the magnetick hardest iron draws. Milton's Par. Reg.
MAGNETISM. n. f. [from magnet.] Power of the loadstone; power of attraction.
Many other magnetisms, and the like attractions through all the creatures of nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
By the magnetism of interest our affections are irresistibly attracted. Granville's Scap.
MAGNETISABLE. adj. [from magnify.] To be extolled or praised.
Unusual.
Number, though wonderful in itself, and sufficiently magnifiable from its demonstrable affection, hath yet received adjections from the multiplying conceits of men. Brown.
MAGNETICAL. adj. [magnificus, Latin.] Illustrious; grand; magnificent.
MAGNETICK. adj. great; noble.
The house that is to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnetick of fame and glory throughout all countries. 1 Chron. xxii. 5.
Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues, powers!
If these magnetick titles yet remain,
Not merely titular. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
O parent! these are thy magnetick deeds;
Thy trophies! Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
MAGNETICENCE. n. f. [magnificentia, Lat.] Grandeur of appearance; splendour.
This desert soil
Wants not her hidden lustre, gems, and gold,
Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magneticence.
Not Babylon,
Nor great Alcairo, such magneticence

MAGNIFICENT. adj. [magnificus, Latin.]
1. Grand in appearance; splendid; pompous.
Man he made, and for him built Magnificent this world. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
It is suitable to the magnificent harmony of the universe, that the species of creatures should, by gentle degrees, ascend upward from us toward his perfection, as we see they gradually descend from us downwards. Locke.
Immortal glories in my mind revive,
When Rome's exalted beauties I descry,
Magnificent in piles of ruin lie. Addison.
2. Fond of splendour; setting greatness to shew.
If he were magnificent, he spent much with an aspiring intent: if he spared, he heaped much with an aspiring intent. Sidney, b. ii.
MAGNIFICENTLY. adv. [from magnificent.] Pompously; splendidly.
Beauty a monarch is,
Which kingly power magnificently proves,
By crouds of slaves and peopled empire's loves. Dryden.
We can never conceive too highly of God; so neither too magnificently of nature, his handy-work. Grew's Cofinal.
MAGNIFICICO. n. f. [Italian.] A grandee of Venice.
The duke himself, and the magnificos
Of greatest port, have all proceeded with him. Shakespeare.
MAGNIFIER. n. f. [from magnify.]
1. One that praises; an encomiast; an extoller.
The primitive magnifiers of this star were the Egyptians, who notwithstanding chiefly regarded it in relation to their river Nilus. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
2. A glass that encreases the bulk of any object.
To MAGNIFY. v. a. [magnifico, Latin.]
1. To make great; to exaggerate; to amplify; to extol.
The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.
2. To exalt; to elevate; to raise in estimation.
Greater now in thy return,
Than from the giant-angels: thee that day
Thy thunders magnify'd, but to create
Is greater than created to destroy. Milt. Par. Lost, b. vii.
3. To raise in pride or pretension.
He shall exalt and magnify himself above every god. Dan.
If ye will magnify yourselves against me, know now that God hath overthrown me. Jeb xix. 5.
He shall magnify himself in his heart. Dan. viii. 25.
4. To encrease the bulk of any object to the eye.
How these red globules would appear, if glasses could be found that could magnify them a thousand times more, is uncertain. Locke.
By true reflection I would see my face?
Why brings the fool a magnifying glass?
The greatest magnifying glasses in the world are a man's eyes, when they look upon his own person. Pope.
As things seem large which we through mists descry, Dulness is ever apt to magnify. Pope's Essay on Criticism.
5. A cant word for to have effect.
My governers assured my father I had wanted for nothing; that I was almost eaten up with the green-sickness: but this magnified but little with my father. Spektator, N° 432.
MAGNITUDE. n. f. [magnitudo, Latin.]
1. Greatness; grandeur.
With plain heroic magnitude of mind,
And celestial vigour arm'd,
Their armories and magazines contemns. Milt. Agonist.
2. Comparative bulk.
This tree hath no extraordinary magnitude, touching the trunk or stem; it is hard to find any one bigger than the rest. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Never repose so much upon any man's single counsel, fidelity, and discretion, in managing affairs of the first magnitude, that is, matters of religion and justice, as to create in yourself, or others, a diffidence of your own judgment. K. Charles.
When I behold this goodly frame, this world,
Of heav'n and earth confisting; and compute
Their magnitudes; this earth a spot, a grain,
An atom, with the firmament compar'd. Milt. Par. Lost.
Convince the world that you're devout and true;
Whatever be your birth, you're fure to be A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden's Juv.
Conceive these particles of bodies to be so dispos'd amongst themselves, that the intervals of empty spaces between them may be equal in magnitude to them all; and that these particles may be compos'd of other particles much smaller, which have as much empty space between them as equals all the magnitudes of these smaller particles. Newton's Opticks.

MA'GPIE. n. f. [from pie, pica, Latin, and mag, contracted from Margaret, as phil is used to a sparrow, and poll to a parrot.] A bird sometimes taught to talk.
 Augurs, that understood relations, have
 By magpies and by choughs, and rooks brought forth
 The secret of man of blood. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
 Diffimulation is expressed by a lady wearing a vizard of two faces, in her right-hand a magpie, which Spenser described looking through a lattice. Peacocks on Drawing.
 So have I seen in black and white,
 A prating thing, a magpie height,
 Majestically stalk;
 A stately, worthless animal,
 That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,
 All flutter, pride, and talk. Swift.
 MA'GYDARE. n. f. [magudar, Lat.] An herb. Ains.
 MAID. n. f. [mæden, mægen, Saxon, maegd, Dutch.] MAIDEN. n. f. [mæden, mægen, Saxon, maegd, Dutch.]
 1. An unmarried woman; a virgin.
 Your wives, your daughters,
 Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
 The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 This is a man old, wrinkl'd, faded, wither'd,
 And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shakespeare.
 I am not solely led
 By nice direction of a maiden's eyes. Shakespeare.
 She employed the residue of her life to repairing of high-ways, building of bridges, and endowing of maidens. Carew.
 Your deluded wife had been a maid;
 Down on the bridal bed a maid she lay,
 A maid she rose at the approaching day. Dryden's Jew.
 Let me die, the said,
 Rather than lose the spotless name of maid. Dryden.
 2. A woman fervant.
 My maid Nerissa and myself, mean time,
 Will live as maids and widows. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.
 Old Tancred visited his daughter's bow'r;
 Her cheek, for such his custom was, he kiss'd,
 Then blest'd her kneeling, and her maids dismiss'd. Dryd.
 Her closet and the gods share all her time,
 Except when, only by some maids attended,
 She seeks some shady solitary grove. Rowe.
 A thousand maidens ply the purple loom,
 To weave the bed, and deck the regal room. Prior.

 MAIDENHEAD. n. f. [maiden.]
 MAIDENHOOD. n. f. [maiden.]
 1. Virginity; virgin purity; freedom from contamination.
 And, for the modest lore of maidenhood,
 Bids me not sojourn with these armed men.
 Oh whither shall I fly? what secret wood Shall hide me from the tyrant? or what den. Fairfax.
 She hated chambers, closets, secret mewes,
 And in broad fields prefer'd her maidenhead. Fairfax.
 Example, that so terrible shews in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot for all that diffuse succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them. Shakespeare.
Maidenhood she loves, and will be swift
 To aid a virgin. Milton.
 2. Newness; freshness; uncontaminated state. This is now become a low word.
 The devil and mischance look big Upon the maidenhead of our affairs. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
 Some who attended with much expectation, at their first appearing have stained the maidenhead of their credit with some negligent performance. Watson.

 MAIM. adj. [maim, old French; magnus, Latin.]
 1. Principal; chief; leading.
 In every grand or main public duty which God requireth at the hands of his church, there is, besides that matter and form wherein the essence thereof consisteth, a certain outward fashion, whereby the same is in decent manner administered. Hooker, b. iv.
 There is a history in all mens lives,
 Figuring the nature of the times deceased;
 The which observ'd a man may prophesy,
 With a near aim, of the main chance of things
 As yet not come to life. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
 He is superstitious grown of late,
 Quite from the main opinion he had once
 Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies. Shakespeare.
 There arose three notorious and main rebellions, which drew several armies out of England. Davies on Ireland.
 The nether flood,
 Which now divided into four main streams,
 Runs diverse. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
 I should be much for open war, O peers,
 If what was urg'd
 Main reason to persuade immediate war,
 Did not dissuade me most. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
 All creatures look to the main chance, that is, food and propagation.
 Our main interest is to be as happy as we can, and as long as possible. L'Estrange's Fables.
 Nor tell me in a dying father's tone,
 Be careful still of the main chance, my son;
 Put out the principal in trusty hands;
 Live on the life, and never dip thy lands. Dryden's Pers.
 Whilst they have busied themselves in various learning, they have been wanting in the one main thing. Baker.
 Nor is it only in the main design, but they have followed him in every episode. Pope's Pref. to the Iliad.
 2. Violent; strong; overpowering; vast.
 Think, you question with a Jew.
 You may as well go stand upon the beach,
 And bid the main flood bate his usual height. Shakespeare.
 Seek thou what rage Transports our adversary, whom no bounds,
 Nor yet the main abyss,
 Wide interrupt, can hold? Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
 3. Gross; containing the chief part.
 We ourselves will follow
 In the main battle, which on either side

 A substitute shines brightly as a king,
 Until a king be by; and then his state
 Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
 Into the main of waters. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
 Where's the king?
 Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea;
 Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,
 That things might change. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 He fell, and struggling in the main,
 Cry'd out for helping hands, but cry'd in vain. Dryden.
 Say, why should the collected main Itself within itself contain?
 Why to its caverns should it sometimes creep,
 And with delighted silence sleep
 On the lov'd bosom of its parent deep? Prior.
 4. Violence; force.
 He 'gan advance
 With huge force, and insupportable main,
 And towards him with dreadful fury prance. Fa. Qu.

Those of better fortune not making learning their mainte- nance, take degrees with little improvement. Swift.
2. Support; protection; defence.
They knew that no man might in reason take upon him to determine his own right, and according to his own determination proceed in maintenance thereof. Hooker, b. i.
The beginning and cause of this ordinance amongst the Irish was for the defence and maintenance of their lands in their posterity. Spenser on Ireland.
3. Continuance; security from failure.
Whatsoever is granted to the church for God's honour, and the maintenance of his service, is granted for and to God.
South's Sermons.
MA'INTOP. n. f. [main and top.] The top of the mainmast.
From their maintop joyful news they hear
Of ships, which by their mould bring new supplies. Dryd.
Dictys could the maintop-mast bestride.
And down the ropes with active vigour slide. Addison.
MA'JOR. adj. [major, Latin.]
1. Greater in number, quantity, or extent.
They bind none, not though they be many, saving only when they are the major part of a general assembly; and then their voices being more in number, must overweigh their judgments who are fewer. Hooker, b. iv.
The true meridian is a major circle passing through the poles of the world and the zenith of any place, exactly dividing the east from the west. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
In common discourse we denominate persons and things according to the major part of their character; he is to be called a wife man who has but few follies. Watts's Logic.
2. Greater in dignity.
Fall Greek, fall fame, honour, or go, or stay,
My major vow lies here. Shakesp. Troil. and Cressida.

ple; enclosure with dilatation; communication; reflection concurrent; and approach to the senfory. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
MAJO'RITY. n. f. [from major.]
1. The state of being greater.
It is not plurality of parts without majority of parts that maketh the total greater. Grew's Cosmol.
2. The greater number. [majorité, French.]
It was highly probable the majority would be so wise as to espouse that cause which was most agreeable to the publick weal, and by that means hinder a fedition. Addison.
As in senates so in schools,
Majority of voices rules. Prior.
Decent executions keep the world in awe; for that reason the majority of mankind ought to be hang'd every year.
Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
3. [From majores, Latin.] Ancestry.
Of evil parents an evil generation, a posterity not unlike their majority; of mischievous progenitors, a venomous and destructive progeny. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
4. Full age; end of minority.
During the infancy of Henry the III, the barons were troubled in expelling the French: but this prince was no sooner come to his majority, but the barons raised a cruel war against him. Davies on Ireland.
5. First rank. Obsolete.
Douglas, whose high deeds,
Whose hot incursions, and great name in arms,
Holds from all soldiers chief majority,
And military title capital. Shakesp. Henry IV.
6. The office of a major.
MAIZE, or Indian Wheat. n. f.
The whole maize plant has the appearance of a reed; the male flowers are produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same plant, growing generally in a spike upon the top of the stalk; the female flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves, and are surrounded by three or four leaves, which closely adhere to the fruit until it is ripe: this plant is propagated in England only as a curiosity, but in America it is the principal support of the inhabitants, and consequently propagated with great care. Miller.
Maize affords a very strong nourishment, but more viscous than wheat. Arbutnot on Aliments.

My brother's servants
Were then my fellows, now they are my men. Shakespeare.

Such gentlemen as are his majesty's own sworn servants should be preferred to the charge of his majesty's ships; choice being made of men of valour and capacity rather than to employ other men. Raleigh's Essays.

I and my man will presently go ride
Far as the Cornish mount. Cowley.

5. A word of familiarity bordering on contempt.
You may partake of any thing we say:
We speak no treason, man. Shakespeare's Richard III.

6. It is used in a loose signification like the French on, one, any one.

This fame young sober-blooded boy doth not love me, nor a man cannot make him laugh. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

A man in an infant may discover the attention to be impossible. More's Divine Dialogues.

He is a good-natured man, and will give as much as a man would desire.

By ten thousand of them a man shall not be able to advance one step in knowledge. Tillotson's Sermons.

Our thoughts will not be directed what objects to pursue, nor be taken off from those they have once fixed on; but run away with a man, in pursuit of those ideas they have in view. Locke.

A man would expect to find some antiquities; but all they have to shew of this nature is an old rostrum of a Roman ship. Addison.

A man might make a pretty landscape of his own plantation. Addison.

7. One of uncommon qualifications.
Manners maketh man. William of Wickham.

I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more is none.

—What beast was't then
That made you break this enterprize to me?
When you durst do it, then you were a man;
And, to be more than what you were, you would Be so much more the man. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He tript me behind, being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Will reckon he should not have been the man he is, had not he broke windows, and knocked down constables, when he was a young fellow. Addison's Spect. N<sup>o</sup>. 105.

8. A human being qualified in any particular manner.
Thou art but a youth, and lie a man of war from his youth. 1 Sam. xvii. 33.

In matters of equity between man and man, our Saviour

MAN

has taught us to put my neighbour in the place of myself, and myself in the place of my neighbour. Watts's Logick.

10. Not a beast.
Thy face, bright Centaur, autumn's heats retain,
The softer season suiting to the man. Creesh's Monitus.

11. Wealthy or independant person: to this sense some refer the following passage of Shakespeare, others to the sense next foregoing.

There would this monster make a man; any strange beast
there makes a man. Shakespeare's Tempest.

What poor man would not carry a great burthen of gold to be made a man for ever. Tillotson's Sermons.

12. When a person is not in his senses, we say, he is not his own man. Ansf.

13. A moveable piece at chess or draughts.

14. MAN of war. A ship of war.
A Flemish man of war lighted upon them, and overma-stered them. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

To MAN. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furnish with men.

Your ships are not well mann'd;
Your mariners are muliters, or reapers. Shakespeare.

A navy, to secure the seas, is mann'd;
And forces sent. Daniel's Civil War.

It hath been agreed, that either of them should send certain ships to sea well mann'd, and apparelled to fight. Hayward.

Their ships go as long voyages as any, and are for their burdens as well mann'd. Raleigh's Essays.

He had mann'd it with a great number of tall soldiers, more than for the proportion of the castle. Bacon.

They man their boats, and all their young men arm. Waller.

The Venetians could set out thirty men of war, a hundred gallics, and ten galeases; though I cannot conceive how they could man a fleet of half the number. Addison on Italy.

Timoleon forced the Carthaginians out, though they had mann'd out a fleet of two hundred men of war. Arbutnot.

2. To guard with men.
See, how the furlly Warwick mans the wall. Shakespeare.

There stands the castle by yond tuft of trees,
Mann'd with three hundred men. Shakespeare's Richard II.

The summons take of the fame trumpet's call,
To fall from one port, or man one publick wall. Tate.

3. To fortify; to strengthen.
Advise how war may be best upheld,
Mann'd by her two main nerves, iron and gold, Milton.

In all her equipage.
Theodolus having mann'd his soul with proper reflexions, exerted himself in the best manner he could, to animate his penitent. Addison's Spect. N<sup>o</sup>. 164.

4. To tame a hawk.
Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keeper's call;
That is, to watch her. Shakespeare.

5. To attend; to serve; to wait on.
Thou whoreforn mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap than to wait at my heels: I was never mann'd with agate till now. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

They distill their husbands land
In decoctions, and are mann'd
With ten empyricks in their chamber, Lying for the spirit of amber. Benj. Johnson's Forest.

6. To direct in hostility; to point; to aim. An obsolete word.
Man but a rush against Othello's breast,
And he retires. Shakespeare's Othello.

MANACLES. n. f. [manicles, French, manica from manus, Latin.] Chain for the hands; shackles.

For my fake wear this glove;
It is a manacle of love. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Thou
Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our street. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Such a person
Could fetch your brother from the manacles
Of the all-holding law. Shakespeare's Meas. for Meas.

Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet, and like mana- cles on the right-hand. Ecclus. xxi. 19.

The bounds of the law good men count their ornament and protection; others, their manacles and oppression.
King Charles.

To MANACLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To chain the hands;
to shackle.

We'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shakespeare.

I'll manacle thy neck and feet together. Shakespeare.

Is it thus you use this monarch, to manacle and shackle him hand and foot. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

To MANAGE. v. a. [menager, French.]
1. To conduct; to carry on.
The fathers had managed the charge of idolatry against the heathens. Stillingfleet.

MAN

And tell the nations in no vulgar strain,
What wars I manage, and what wreaths I gain. Prior.
2. To train a horse to graceful action.
He rode up and down gallantly mounted, managing his horse; and charging and discharging his lance. Knolles.
3. To govern; to make tractable.
They vault from hunters to the manag'd steed. Young.
- Let us stick to our point, and we will manage Bull I'll warrant you. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
4. To wield; to move or use easily.
Long tubes are cumbersome, and scarce to be easily ma- naged. Newton.
5. To husband; to make the object of caution.
There is no more to manage! If I fall,
It shall be like myself; a fettering fun
Should leave a track of glory in the skies. Dryden.
- The less he had to lose, the less he car'd,
To manage loathsome life, when love was the reward. Dryd.
6. To treat with caution or decency: this is a phrase merely Gallick; not to be imitated.
Notwithstanding it was so much his interest to manage his protestant subjects in the country; he made over his principality to France. Addison on Italy.
- To MANAGE. v. n. To superintend affairs; to transact;
Leave them to manage for thee, and to grant
What their unerring wisdom sees thee want. Dryden.
- MANAGE*. v. a. [manège, French.]
1. Conduct; administration.
To him put
The manage of my state. Shakespeare's Tempest.
- This might have been prevented,
With very easy arguments of love,
Which now the manage of two kingdoms must With fearful, bloody issue arbitrate. Shakespeare's K. John.
- For the rebels which stand out in Ireland,
Expedient manage must be made, my liege,
Ere further leisure yield them further means. Shakespeare.
- Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold, and stir more than they can quiet. Bacon's Essays.
- The plea of a good intention will serve to sanctify the worst actions; the proof of which is but too manifest from that scandalous doctrine of the jesuits concerning the direction of the intention, and likewise from the whole manage of the late rebellion. South's Sermons.
- Whenever we take a strong bias, it is not out of a moral incapacity to do better, but for want of a careful manage and discipline to set us right at first. L'Estrange's Fables.
2. Use; instrumentality.
To think to make gold of quicksilver is not to be hoped;
for quicksilver will not endure the manage of the fire. Bacon.
3. Government of a horse.
In thy slumbers
I heard thee murmur tales of iron wars,
Speak terms of manage to the bounding steed. Shakespeare.
- The horse you must draw in his career with his manage and turn, doing the curvetto. Peacham.
- MANAGEABLE*. adj. [from manage.]
1. Easy in the use; not difficult to be wielded or moved.
The conditions of weapons and their improvement are,
that they may serve in all weathers; and that the carriage may be light and manageable. Bacon's Essays.
- Very long tubes are, by reason of their length, apt to bend, and shake by bending so as to cause a continual trembling in the objects, whereas by contrivance the glasses are readily manageable. Newton's Opticks.
2. Governable; tractable.
MANAGEABLENESS. n. f. [from manageable.]
1. Accommodation to easy use.
This disagreement may be imputed to the greater or less exactness or manageableness of the instruments employed. Boyle.
2. Tractableness; easiness to be governed.
MANAGEMENT. n. f. [management, French.]
1. Conduct; administration.
Mark with what management their tribes divide;
Some stick to you, and some to t'other side. Dryden.
- An ill argument introduced with deference, will procure more credit than the profoundest science with a rough, insolent, and noisy management. Locke on Education.
- The wrong management of the earl of Godolphin was the only cause of the union. Swift's Miscel.
2. Practice; transaction; dealing.
He had great management with ecclesiastics in the view of being advanced to the pontificate. Addison on Italy.
- MANAGER*. n. f. [from manage.]
1. One who has the conduct or direction of any thing.
A skilful manager of the rabble, so long as they have but ears to hear, needs never enquire whether they have any understanding. South's Sermons.

MAN

- The manager opens his sluice every night, and distributes the water into the town. Addison.
- An artful manager, that crept between His friend and flame, and was a kind of screen. Pope.
2. A man of frugality; a good husband.
A prince of great aspiring thoughts: in the main, a ma- nager of his treasure, and yet bountiful, from his own motion, wherever he discerns merit. Temple's Miscel.
- The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of Ovid's wit; though he could have wished, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dryden.
- MANAGERY*. n. f. [menagerie, French.]
1. Conduct; direction; administration.
They who most exactly describe that battle, give so full an account of any conduct or discretion in the manager of that affair, that posterity would receive little benefit in the most particular relation of it. Clarendon, l. viii.
2. Husbandry; frugality.
The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attested its good manager, that it is not credible crowns are conferred gratis. Deacy of Pity.
3. Manner of using.
No expert general will bring a company of raw, untrained men into the field, but will, by little bloodless skirmishes, instruct them in the manner of the fight, and teach them the ready manager of their weapons. Deacy of Pity.
- MANATION*. n. f. [manatio, Latin.] The act of issuing from something else.
MANCHE. n. f. [French.] A sleeve.
MANCHET. n. f. [michet, French.] Skinner. A small loaf of fine bread.
Take a small toast of manchet, dipped in oil of sweet almonds. Bacon.
- I love to entertain my friends with a frugal collation; a cup of wine, a dish of fruit, and a manchet. Mor's Dial.
- MANCHINEEL*. n. f. [manacilla, Latin.]
The manchineel tree has male flowers, or katkins, which are produced at remote distances from embryos, which become round fleshy fruit, in which is contained a tough woody nut, inclosing four or five flat seeds: it is a native of the West Indies, and grows equal to the size of an oak: its wood, which is fawn out into planks, and brought to England, is of a beautiful grain, will polish well and last long, and is therefore much esteemed in cabinet-makers work: in cutting down those trees, the juice of the bark, which is of a milky colour, must be burnt out before the work is begun; for its nature is so corrosive, that it will raise blisters on the skin, and burn holes in linen; and if it should happen to fall into the eyes of the labourers, they are in danger of losing their sight: the fruit is of the colour and size of the golden pippen, by which many Europeans have been deceived; some of whom have greatly suffered, and others lost their lives by eating it, which will corrode the mouth and throat: the leaves of these trees also abound with a milky juice of the same nature, so that the cattle never shelter themselves under them, and scarcely will any vegetable grow under their shade;
yet the goats eat this fruit without any injury. Miller.
- To MANCIPATE. v. a. [mancipio, Latin.] To enslave; to bind; to tie.
Although the regular part of nature is seldom varied, yet the meteors, which are in themselves more unstable, and less mancipated to stated motions, are oftentimes employed to various ends. Hale's Origin of Manhood.
- MANCIPATION*. n. f. [from mancipate.] Slavery; involuntary obligation.
MANCIPLE. n. f. [maniceps, Latin.] The steward of a community; the purveyor: it is particularly used of the purveyor of a college.
Their manciple fell dangerously ill,
Bread must be had, their gift went to the mill:
This skimkin moderately stole before,
Their steward sick, he robb'd them ten times more. Betterton's Miller of Trampington.
- MANDAMUS*. n. f. [Latin.] A writ granted by the king, so called from the initial word.
MANDARIN. n. f. A Chinese nobleman or magistrate.
MANDATARY. n. f. [mandataire, Fr. from mandat, Latin.]
He to whom the pope has, by virtue of his prerogative, and his own proper right, given a mandate for his benediction. Ayliffe's Parergon.
- MANDATE*. n. f. [mandatum, Latin.]
1. Command.
Her force is not any where so apparent as in express man- dates or prohibitions, especially upon advice and consultation going before. Hooker, b. i.
- The necessity of the times cast the power of the three estates upon himself, that his mandates should pass for laws, whereby he laid what taxes he pleased. Hovell's Vocal Forest.
2. Precept; charge; commission, sent or transmitted.

Who

MAN

- Who knows,
If the scarce bearded Cæsar have not sent His powerful mandate to you. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
- This Moor,
Your special mandate, for the state affairs,
Hath hither brought. Shakespeare's Othello.
- He thought the mandate forg'd, your death conceal'd. Dryd.
- This dream all powerful Juno sends, I bear
Her mighty mandates, and her words you hear:
Haste, arm your Ardeans. Dryden's Æn.
- MANDATOR*. n. f. [Latin.] Director.
A person is said to be a client to his advocate, but a master and mandator to his proctor. Ayliffe's Parergon.
- MANDATORY*. adj. [mandare, Latin.] Preceptive; directory.
MANDIBLE. n. f. [mandibula, Latin.] The jaw; the instrument of manducation.
He faith, only the crocodile moveth the upper jaw, as if the upper mandible did make an articulation with the cranium. Grew's Museum.
- MANDIBULAR*. n. f. [from mandibula, Latin.] Belonging to the jaw.
MANDILION. n. f. [mandiglione, Italian.] A soldier's coat.
Skinner. A loose garment; a sleeveless jacket. Ains.
- MANDREL*. n. f. [mandrin, French.]
Mandrels are made with a long wooden shank, to fit stiff into a round hole that is made in the work, that is to be turned; this mandrel is called a shank, or pin-mandrel: and if the hole the shank is to fit into be very small, and the work to be fastened on it pretty heavy, then turners fasten a round iron shank or pin, and fasten their work upon it.
Mason's Mechanical Exercises.
- MANDRAKE*. n. f. [mandragora, Lat. mandragore, Fr.]
The flower of the mandrake consists of one leaf in the shape of a bell, and is divided at the top into several parts; the point afterwards becomes a globular soft fruit, in which are contained many kidney-shaped seeds: the roots of this plant is said to bear a resemblance to the human form. The reports of tying a dog to this plant, in order to root it up, and prevent the certain death of the person who dares to attempt such a deed, and of the groans emitted by it when the violence is offered, are equally fabulous. Miller.
- Among other virtues, mandrakes has been falsely celebrated for rendering barren women fruitful: it has a soporific quality, and the ancients used it when they wanted a nar-cotick of the most powerful kind. Hill's Mat. Med.
- Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
As curls, as harsh, and horrible to hear. Shakespeare.
- Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cline thee to that sweet sleep. Shakespeare.
- And shrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad. Shakespeare.
- Give me of thy sons mandrakes. Gen. xxx. 14.
- Go, and catch a falling star,
Get with child a mandrake root. Dehne.
- To MANDUCATE. v. a. [manducare, Lat.] To chew; to eat.
MANDUCATION. n. f. [manducatio, Latin.] Eating.
Manducation is the action of the lower jaw in chewing the food, and preparing it in the mouth before it is received into the stomach. Quincy.
- As he who is not a holy person does not feed upon Christ, it is apparent that our manducation must be spiritual, and therefore so must the food, and consequently it cannot be natural flesh. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
- MANE*. n. f. [maene, Dutch.] The halt which hangs down on the neck of horses, or other animals.
Dametas was tossed from the saddle to the mane of the horse, and thence to the ground. Sidney, b. ii.
- A currie comb, mane comb, and whip for a jade. Tusser.
- The weak wanton Cupid Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cressida.
- The horses breaking loose, ran up and down with their tails and manes on a light-fire. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
- A lion shakes his dreadful mane,
And angry grows.
For quitting both their swords and reins,
They grasp'd with all their strength the manes. Hudibras.
- MANEATER*. n. f. [man and eat.] A cannibal; an anthropophagite; one that feeds upon human flesh.
MANED. adj. [from the noun.] Having a mane.
MANES. n. f. [Latin.] Ghost; shade; that which remains of man after death.
Hail, O ye holy manes! hail again
Paternal ashes. Dryden's Virg.
- MANFUL*. adj. [man and full.] Bold; stout; daring.
It had devour'd 'twas so manful. Hudibras.
- MANFULLY*. adv. [from manful.] Boldly; stoutly.

MAN

- Artimelia behaved herself manfully in a great fight 'at sea, when Xerxes stood by as a coward. Abbott.
- I slew him manfully in fight. Shakespeare.
- Without false 'antage, or base treachery.
He that with this Christian armour manfully fights against, and repels, the temptations and assaults of his spiritual enemies; he that keeps his conscience void of offence, shall enjoy peace here, and for ever. Ray on Creation.
- MANFULNESS*. n. f. [from manful.] Stoutness; boldness.
MANGCOORN. n. f. [mengen, Dutch, to mingle.] Corn of several kinds mixed: as, wheat and rye.
- MANGANESE*. n. f. [manganesia, low Latin.]
Manganese is extremely well known by name, though the gallinule use it for many different substances, that have the same effect in clearing the foul colour of their glass: it is properly an iron ore of a poorer sort; the most perfect sort is of a dark iron grey, very heavy but brittle. Hilli.
- Manganese* is rarely found but in an iron vein. Woodward.
- MANGE*. n. f. [de mangaison, French.] The itch or scab in cattle.
The sheep died of the rot, and the swine of the mange.

to keep the horses from their provender. L'Estrange's Fab.
- MANGINESS*. n. f. [from mangy.] Scabbiness; infection with the mange.
To MANGLE. v. a. [mangler, Dutch, to be wanting; man- cus, Latin.] To lacerate; to cut or tear piece-meal; to butcher.
Cassio, may you suspect
Who they should be, that thus have mangled you? Shak.
- Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shakespeare.
- Thoughts my tormentors arm'd with deadly stings,
Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts;
Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise
Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb,
Or medicinal liquor can alluage. Milton's Agonistes.
- The triple porter of the Sygrian seat,
With lolling tongue, lay fawning at thy feet,
And, seiz'd with fear, forgot his mangled meat. Dryden.
- What could swords or poison, racks or flame,
But mangle and disjoint this brittle frame?
More fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's fame. Prior.
- It is hard, that not one gentleman's daughter should read or understand her own natural tongue; as any one may find, who can hear them when they are disposed to mangle a play or a novel, where the least word out of the common road disconcerts them. Swift to a young Lady.
- They have joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel, only to shorten a syllable; so that most of the books we see now-a-days, are full of those manglings and abbreviations. Swift's Let. to the Ld. Treasurer.
- Inextricable difficulties occur by mangling the sense, and cutting authors. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
- MANGLER*. n. f. [from mangle.] A hacker; one that destroys bunglingly.
Since after thee may rise an impious line,
Coarse manglers of the human face divine;
Paint on, till fate dissolve thy mortal part,
And live and die the monarch of thy art. Tickell.
- MANGO*. n. f. [mangostan, Fr.] A fruit of the isle of Java, brought to Europe pickled.
The fruit with the hulk, when very young, makes a good preserve, and is used to pickle like mangoes. Mortimer.
- What lord of old would bid his cook prepare Mangos, potatges, champignons, cavares. King.
- MANGY*. adj. [from mangy.] Infected with the mange; scabby.
Away, thou issue of a mangy dog!
I swoon to see thee. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
- MANHATER*. n. f. [man and hater.] Misanthrope; one that hates mankind.
MANHOOD. n. f. [from man.]
1. Human nature.

Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy;
Thy school-days frightful, desperate, wild and furious;
Thy prime of manhood daring, bold and venturous. Shak.
By fraud or force the sutor train destroy,
And starting into manhood, scorn the boy. Pope's Odyssey.
4. Courage; bravery; resolution; fortitude.
Nothing so hard but his valour overcame; which he so guided with virtue, that although no man was spoken of but he for manhood, he was called the courteous Amphialus.
Sidney.
MAN'AC. } adj. [maniacus, Lat.] Raging with madriels;
MAN'ACAL. } mad to rage.
Epilepsies and maniacal lunacies usually conform to the age of the moon. Grew's Cymol. b. iii.
MAN'IFEST. adj. [manifestus, Latin.]
1. Plain; open; not concealed; not doubtful; apparent.
They all concur as principles, they all have their forcible operations therein, although not all in like apparent and manifest manner. Hooker, b. i.
That which may be known of God is manifest in them;
for God hath shewed it unto them. Rom. i. 19.
He was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you. 1 Pet. i. 20.
He full
Repellent all his father manifest
Express'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Thus manifest to fight the God appear'd. Dryden's Æn.
I saw, I saw him manifest in view,
His voice, his figure, and his gesture knew. Dryden.
2. Detected, with of.
Calistho there stood manifest of shame,
And turn'd a bear, the northern star became. Dryden.
MAN'IFEST. n. f. [manifeste, Fr. manifesto, Italian.] Declaration; publick protestation.
You authentick witnesses I bring,
Of this my manifest: that never more
This hand shall combat on the crooked shore. Dryden.
TO MAN'IFEST. v. a. [manifeste, Fr. manifesto, Lat.] To make appear; to make publick; to shew plainly; to discover.
Thy life did manifest, thou lov'dst me not;
And thou wilt have me die assured of it. Shakespeare.
He that loveth me I will love him, and manifest myself to him.
He was pleas'd himself to assume, and manifest his will in our flesh, and so not only as God from heaven, but God visible on earth, to preach reformation among us. Hammond.
This perverse commotion
Must manifest thee worthiest to be heir
Of all things. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
Were he not by law withstood,
He'd manifest his own inhuman blood. Dryden's Juu.
It may be part of our employment in eternity, to contemplate the works of God, and give him the glory of his wisdom manifest in the creation. Roy on Creation.
MAN'IFESTATION. n. f. [manifestation, Fr. from manifest.]
Discovery; publication; clear evidence.
Though there be a kind of natural right in the noble, wife and virtuous, to govern them which are of servile disposition; nevertheless, for manifestation of this their right, the assent of them who are to be governed seemeth necessary. Hooker.
As the nature of God is excellent, so likewise it is to know him in those glorious manifestations of himself in the works of creation and providence. Tillotson's Sermons.
The secret manner in which acts of mercy ought to be performed, requires this publick manifestation of them at the great day. Atterbury's Sermons.
MAN'IFESTIBLE. adj. [manifestable, properly manifestable.] Easy to be made evident.
This is manifestible in long and thin plates of steel perforated in the middle, and equilibrated. Brown's Vulg. Err.
MAN'IFESTLY. adv. [manifestly, from manifest.] Clearly; evidently; plainly.
We see manifestly, that fouds are carried with wind. Bac.
Scats, in a state, seem to be tolerated because they are already spread, while they do not manifestly endanger the constitution. Swift.
MAN'IFESTNESS. n. f. [manifestness, from manifest.] Perspicuity; clear evidence.
MAN'IFESTO. n. f. [Italian.] Publick protestation; declaration.
It was propos'd to draw up a manifesto, setting forth the grounds and motives of our taking arms. Addison.
MAN'IFOLD. adj. [many and fold.] Of different kinds; many in number; multiplied; complicated.
When his eyes did her behold,
Her heart did seem to melt in pleasures manifold. Fa. Qu.
Terror of the torments manifold,
In which the damned souls he did behold. Spenfer.
If that the king
Have any way your good defects forgot,
Which he confesseth to be manifold,
He bids you name your griefs. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

MAN

If any man of quality will maintain upon Edward earl of Gloster, that he is a manifest traitor, let him appear. Shak.
They receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting. Luke xviii. 30.
To represent to the life the manifold use of friendship, see how many things a man cannot do himself. Bacon's Essays.
They not obeying,
Incurr'd, what could they less? the penalty;
And manifold in sin deserv'd to fall. Milton's Par. Lost.
My scope in this experiment is manifold. Boyle on Colours.
We are not got further than the borders of the mineral kingdom, so very simple is it, so various and manifold its productions. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
MAN'IFOLDED. adj. [many and fold.] Having many complications or doubles.
His puissant arms about his noble breast,
And manifold shield, he bound about his wrist. Fa. Qu.
MAN'IFOLDLY. adv. [from manifold.] In a manifold manner.
They were manifestly acknowledged the saviors of that country. Sidney, b. ii.
MAN'IGLIONS. n. f. [in gunnery.] Two handles on the back of a piece of ordnance, cast after the German form. Bailey.
MAN'IKIN. n. f. [manikin, Dutch.] A little man.
This is a dear manikin to you, Sir Toby.
—I have been dear to him, lad, some two thousand frong.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
MAN'IPLE. n. f. [manipulus, Latin.]
1. A handful.
2. A small band of soldiers.
MAN'IPULAR. adj. [from manipulus, Lat.] Relating to a manipule.
MANK'ILLER. n. f. [man and killer.] Murderer.
To kill mankillers man has lawful pow'r,
But not th' extended licence to devour. Dryden's Fables.
MANK'IND. n. f. [man and kind.]
1. The race of species of human beings.
Plato witnesseth, that soon after mankind began to increase,
they built many cities. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
All mankind alike require their grace,
All born to want; a miserable race. Pope's Odyssey.
2. Resembling man not woman in form or nature.
A mankin witch! hence with her, out o' door:
A most intelligency bawd! Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
MAN'LIKE. adj. [man and like.] Having the complexion of
man.
Such a right manlike man, as nature often errs, yet
shews she would fain make. Sidney, b. ii.
MAN'LESS. adj. [man and less.] Without men; not manned.
Sir Walter Raleigh was wont to say, the Spaniards were suddenly driven away with squibs; for it was no more but a stratagem of fire-boats manless, and sent upon the armada at Calais by the favour of the wind in the night, that put them in such terror, as they cut their cables. Bacon.
MAN'LINESS. n. f. [from manly.] Dignity; bravery; stout-
ness.
Young master, willing to shew himself a man, lets himself loose to all irregularities; and thus courts credit and manliness in the casting off the modesty he has till then been kept in. Locke.
MAN'LY. adj. [from man.] Manlike; becoming a man; firm;
brave; stout; undaunted; undimay'd.
As did Æneas old Anchises bear,
So I bear thee upon my manly shoulders. Shakespeare.
Let's briefly put on manly readiness,
And meet it th' hall together. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice; and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
Serene and manly, harden'd to sustain
The load of life, and exercis'd in pain. Dryden's Juu.
See great Marcellus! how inur'd in toils,
He moves with manly grace. Dryden's Æn.
MAN'LY. adv. [from man.] With courage like a man.
MAN'NA. n. f.
Manna is properly a gum, and is honey-like juice concreted into a solid form, seldom so dry but it adheres more or less to the fingers in handling; its colour is whitish, yellowish, or brownish, and it has in taste the sweetness of sugar, and with it a sharpness that renders it very agreeable:
we are supplied with manna from Calabria and Sicily, which is the product of two different trees, but which are of the same genus, being both varieties of the ash: when the heats of summer are free from rain, the leaves, the trunks, and branches of both these trees, exude a white honey juice, which concretes into what we call manna, forming itself as it runs, and according to its different quantity, into small roundish drops, or long flakes: what flows out of the leaves of these trees is all natural, but the Italians procure a forced kind by wounding the trunks and branches: the finest manna of all is that which oozes naturally out of the leaves in August, after the season of collecting the common manna is over: the French have another sort of manna, produced from the

MAN

the larch tree, of a very different genus of the ash, and the very tree which produces oil of turpentine; this is called Briançon manna, from the country where it is produced: our black thorn, or sloe tree, sometimes yield a true manna from the ribs of the leaves in Autumn; but it is in a very small quantity: there is another sort called the manna Persa, produced from a small prickly shrub about four or five feet high, growing in Egypt, Armenia, Georgia, and Persia. The Hebrews, who had been acquainted with the last mentioned sort of manna, when they found a miraculous food in the desert resembling it, did not scruple to call it manna: this was a conjecture the more natural to them, as they saw plainly that this descended from the heavens in form of a dew, and concreted into the globules in which they found it; and the received opinion at that time was, that the Oriental manna was formed in the same manner; that it was a dew from the clouds concreted on the plant, none supposing, in those early times, that it was the natural juice of the shrub upon which it was found: it is however evident, that this was not of the nature of manna, because it melted away as the sun grew hot, whereas manna hardens in that heat. It is but lately that the world were convinced of the mistake of manna being an aerial produce, by an experiment being made by covering a tree with sheets in the manna season, and the finding as much manna on it afterwards as on those which were open to the air and dew. Manna is celebrated, both by the ancients and moderns, as a gentle and mild cathartick. Hill.
It would be well inquired, whether manna doth fall but upon certain herbs, or leaves only. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The manna in heaven will suit every man's palate. Locke.
MANNER. n. f. [manieres, French.]
1. Form; method.
In my divine Emilia make me best.
Find thou the manner, and the means prepare,
Possession, more than conquest, is my care. Dryden.
2. Custom; habit; fashion.
As the manner of some is. New Testament.
3. Certain degree.
It is in a manner done already;
For many carriages he hath dispatch'd
To the sea-side. Shakespeare's King John.
The bread is in a manner common. 1 Sam. xxi. 5.
If the envy be general in a manner upon all the ministers of an estate, it is truly upon the state itself. Bacon's Essays.
This universe we have possess'd, and rul'd
In a manner at our will, th' affairs of earth. Paradise Reg.
Antony Augustinus does in a manner confess the charge.
Baker's Reflections on Learning.
4. Sort; kind.
All manner of men assembled here in arms against God's peace and the king's: we charge you to repair to your dwelling-places. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. i.
A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable,
Beyond all manner of fo much I love you. Shakespeare.
What manner of men were they whom ye slew? Judges.
The city may flourish in trade, and all manner of outward advantages. Atterbury.
5. Mien; cast of the look.
Air and manner are often more expressive than words.
Some men have a native dignity in their manner, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands. Clarissa.
6. Peculiar way.
If I melt into melancholy while I write, I shall be taken in the manner; and I fit by one too tender to these impressions. Donne's Letters.
It can hardly be imagined how great a difference was in the humour, disposition, and manner, of the army under Essex, and the other under Waller. Clarendon, b. viii.
Some few touches of your lordship, which I have endeavoured to express after your manner, have made whole poems of mine to pass with approbation. Dryden's Juu.
As man is known by his company, so a man's company may be known by his manner of expressing himself. Swift.
7. Way; fort.
The temptations of prosperity insinuate themselves after a gentle, but very powerful, manner. Atterbury.
8. Character of the mind.
His princes are as much distinguished by their manners as by their dominions; and even those among them, whose characters seem wholly made up of courage, differ from one another as to the particular kinds. Addison.
9. Manners in the plural. General way of life; morals; habits.
The kinds of music have most operation upon manners: as, to make them warlike; to make them soft and effeminate. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 114.
Every fool carries more or less in his face the signature of his manners, though more legible in some than others. L'Estrange's Fables.

MAN

We bring our manners to the blest abodes;
And think what pleases us must please the gods. Dryden.
10. [In the plural.] Ceremonious behaviour; studied civility.
The time will not allow the compliment,
Which very manners urge. Shakespeare's King Lear.
These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,
That so neglected you. Shakespeare's Othello.
Our griefs and not our manners reason now. Shakespeare.
Ungracious wretch,
Fit for the mountains and the barbarous caves;
Where manners ne'er were preach'd. Shakespeare.
Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Good manners bound her to invite
The stranger dame to be her guest that night. Dryden.
None but the careless and the confident would rush rudely into the presence of a great man: and shall we, in our applications to the great God; take that to be religion, which the common reason of mankind will not allow to be manners? South's Sermons.
Your passion bends
Its force against your nearest friends;
Which manners, decency, and pride,
Have taught you from the world to hide. Swift.
MANNERLINESS. n. f. [from mannerly.] Civility; ceremonious compliance.
Others out of mannerliness and respect to God, though they deny this universal foul of the universe, yet have devised several systems of the universe. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
MANNERLY. adj. [from manner.] Civil; ceremonious; complaisant.
Tut, tut; here is a mannerly forbearance. Shakespeare.
Let me have
What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly. Shakespeare.
Fools make a mock at sin, affront the God whom we serve, and vilify religion; not to oppose them, by whatever mannerly names we may palliate the offence, is not modesty but cowardice, and a traitorous desertion of our allegiance to Christ. Rogers's Sermons.
MANNERLY. adv. Civilly; without rudeness.
When we've sup'd,
We'll mannerly demand thee of thy story. Shakespeare.
MANNIKIN. n. f. [man and klein, German.] A little man; a dwarf.
MANNISH. adj. [from man.] Having the appearance of a man; bold; masculine; impudent.
Nature had proportioned her without any fault; yet altogether seem'd not to make up that harmony that Cupid delights in; the reason whereof might seem a manish countenance, which overthrew that lovely sweetness, the noblest power of womankind, far fitter to prevail by parley than by battle. Sidney.
A woman, impudent and manish grown,
Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man. Shakespeare.
When manish Mevia, that two-handed whore, Altride on horseback hunts the Tuscan boar. Dryden.
MANOR. n. f. [manoir, old French; manerium, low Latin;
maner, Armorick.]
Manor signifies, in common law, a rule or government which a man hath over such as hold land within his fee. Touching the original of these manors, it seems, that, in the beginning, there was a certain compass or circuit of ground granted by the king to some men of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercise some jurisdiction, more or less, within that compass, as he thought good to grant; performing him such services, and paying such yearly rent for the same, as he by his grant required: and that afterward this great man parcelled his land to other meaner men, in-joining them again such services and rents as he thought good; and by that means, as he became tenant to the king, so the inferiors became tenants to him: but those great men, or their posterity, have alienated these manors and lands so given them by their prince, and many for capital offences have forfeited them to the king; and thereby they still remain in the crown, or are bestowed again upon others. But whosoever possesses these manors, the liberty belonging to them is real and predial, and therefore remains, though the owners be changed. In these days, a manor rather signifies the jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site:
for a man may have a manor in gross, as the law terms it, that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites thereto belonging. Covel.
My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
E'en now forsake me; and of all my lands
Is nothing left me. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Kinsmen of mine,
By this so sicken'd their estates, that never They shall abound as formerly. O many

MAN

Have broke their backs with laying manors on them
For this great journey. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
MANQU'LLER. n. f. [man and cwellan, Saxon.] A murderer;
a mankiller; a manslaughterer.
This was not Kayne the manqueller, but one of a gentler spirit and milder sex, to wit, a woman. Carew.
MANSE. n. f. [manſio, Latin.] A parsonage house.
MAN'SION. n. f. [manſio, Latin.]
1. Place of residence; abode; house.
All these are but ornaments of that divine spark within you, which being defended from heaven, could not elsewhere pick out so sweet a manſion. Sidney.
A fault no less grievous, if so be it were true, than if some king should build his manſion-house by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker, b. v.
To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His manſion, and his titles in a place,
From whence himself does fly? he loves us not. Shakeſp.
Thy manſion wants thee, Adam, rise
First man, of men innumerable ordain'd;
First father! call'd by thee, I come thy guide
To the garden of bliss, thy seat prepar'd. Milton.
A manſion is provided thee; more fair
Than this, and worthy heav'n's peculiar care,
Not fram'd of common earth. Dryden.
2. Residence; abode.
These poets near our princes sleep,
And in one grave their manſions keep. Denham.
MANS'L'AUGHTER. n. f. [man and slaughter.]
1. Murder; destruction of the human species.
The whole pleasure of that book standeth in open man- slaughter and bold bawdry.
To overcome in battle, and subdue Nations, and bring home spoils, with infinite
Manſlaughter, shall be held the highest pitch
Of human glory. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. xi.
2. [In law.] The act of killing a man not wholly without fault, though without malice.
MANS'L'YER. n. f. [man and slay.] Murderer; one that has killed another.
Cities for refuge for the manſlayer. Num. xxxv. 6.
MANSU'ETE. adj. [manſuetus, Lat.] Tame; gentle; not ferocious; not wild.
This holds not only in domestick and manſuete birds; for then it might be thought the effect of clemency or institution, but also in the wild. Ray on Creation.
MANSUETUDE. n. f. [manſuetudo, French; manſuetudo, Lat.]
Tameſs; gentleness.
The angry lion did present his paw,
Which by consent was given to manſuetude;
The fearful hare her ears, which by their law Humility did reach to fortitude. Herbert.
MANTEL. n. f. [mantel, old Fr.] Work raised before a chimney to conceal it, whence the name, which originally signifies a cloak.
From the Italians we may learn how to raise fair mantels within the rooms, and how to disguise the shafts of chimnies. Wotton's Architecture.
If you break any china on the mantelſtee or cabinet, gather up the fragments. Swift.
MANTELET. n. f. [manletelet, French.]
1. A small cloak worn by women.
2. [In fortification.] A kind of moveable penthouse, made of pieces of timber sawed into planks, which being about three inches thick, are nailed one over another to the height of almost six feet: they are generally caſed with tin, and set upon little wheels; so that in a siege they may be driven before the pioneers, and serve as blinds to shelter them from the enemy's small-shot: there are other manletelets covered on the top, whereof the miners make use to approach the walls of a town or castle. Harris.
MANTIGER. n. f. [man and tiger.] A large monkey or baboon.
Near these was placed, by the black prince of Monomotapas's side, the glaring cat-a-mountain, and the man-mimicking mantiger. Arbut. and Pope.
MANTEL. n. f. [mantell, Welsh.] A kind of cloak or garment thrown over the rest of the dress.
We, well-cover'd with the night's black mantle,
At unawares may beat down Edward's guard,
And seize himself. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Poor Tom drinks the green mantle of the standing pool.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
The day begins to break, and night is fled, Shakespeare.
Whose purple mantle over-veil'd the earth.
Their actions were covered and disguised with mantles, very useful in times of disorder, of religion and justice.
Hayward's Edward VI.
The herald and children are clothed with mantles of water green fatten; but the herald's mantle is stream'd with gold. Bacon's New Atlantis.

MAN

Before the heav'n thou wert, and at the voice
Of God, as with a mantle, didst invest
The rising world of waters dark and deep,
Won from the void and formless infinite. Milton.
By which the beauty of the earth appears,
The divers-colour'd mantle which she wears. Sandys.
Upon loosening of his mantle the eggs fell from him at unawares, and the eagle was a third time defeated. L'Eſtrange.
Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has weav'd
A filken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours: gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress,
And Venus shall the texture bleis. Prior.
A spacious veil from his broad shoulders sew,
That set the unhappy Phaeton to view;
The flaming chariot and the steeds it shew'd,
And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd. Addison.
To MA'NTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloke, to cover;
to disguise.
As the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness; so their rising senses
Begin to chace the ign'rant fumes, that mantle
Their clearer reason. Shakespeare's Tempest.
I left them
I th' filthy mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to th' chins. Shakespeare's Tempest.
To MA'NTLE. v. n. [The original of the signification of this word is not plain. Skinner considers it as relative to the expansion of a mantle: as, the hawk mantleth; she spreads her wings like a mantle.]
1. To spread the wings as a hawk in pleasure.
The swan with arch'd neck,
Between her white wings mantling, rows
Her state with oary feet. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. viii.
2. To joy; to revel.
My frail fancy fed with full delight
Doth bathe in bliss, and mantleth most at ease;
Ne thinks of other heaven, but how it might
Her heart's desire with most contentment please. Spenser.
3. To be expanded; to spread luxuriantly.
The pair that clad
Each shoulder broad, came mantling o'er his breast
With regal ornament. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. v.
The mantling vine
Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps Luxuriant. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. iv.
I saw them under a green mantling vine,
That crawls along the side of you small hill,
Plucking ripe clusters. Milton.
You'll sometimes meet a fop, of niceſt tread,
Whose mantling peruke veils his empty head. Gay.
He with the Nais went to dwell,
Leaving the nectar'd feasts of Jove;
And where his mazy waters flow,
He gave the mantling vine, to grow
A trophy to his love. Penton's Ode to Lord Gower.
4. To gather any thing on the surface; to froth.
There are a fort of men, whose viſages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be drest in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit. Shakespeare.
It drinketh fresh, flowereth, and mantleth exceedingly. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. No. 46.
From plate to plate your eye-balls roll,
And the brain dances to the mantling bowl. Pope's Horac.
5. To ferment; to be in sprightly agitation.
When mantling blood
Flow'd in his lovely cheeks; when his bright eyes
Spark'd with youthful fires; when ev'ry grace Shone in the father, which now crowns the son. Smith.
MA'NTUA. n. f. [this is perhaps corrupted from manteau, Fr.]
A lady's gown.
Not Cynthia, when her mantua's pinn'd awry,
E'er felt such rage, resentment, and despair,
As thou, sad virgin! for thy ravish'd hair. Pope.
How naturally do you apply your hands to each other's lappets, ruffles, and mantuas. Swift.
MA'NTUAMAKER. n. f. [mantua and maker.] One who makes gowns for women.
By profession a mantuamaker: I am employed by the most fashionable ladies. Addison's Guardian.
MANUAL. adj. [manuallis, Latin; manuel, French.]
1. Performed by the hand.
The speculative part of painting, without the assistance of manual operation, can never attain to that perfection which is its object. Dryden's Duffresney.
2. Used

2. Used by the hand.
The treasurer obliged himself to expiate the injury, to procure some declaration under his majesty's sign manual. Clarendon.
MANUAL. n. f. A small book, such as may be carried in the hand.
This manual of laws, stiled the confessor's laws, contains but few heads. Hale's Common Law of England.
In those prayers which are recommended to the use of the devout persons of your church, in the manuals and offices allowed them in our own language, they would be careful to have nothing they thought scandalous. Stillington.
MANUAL. adj. [manubias, Lat.] Belonging to spoil; taken in war. Diſt.
MANUBRIUM. n. f. [Latin.] A handle.
Though the ficker move easily enough up and down in the cylinder by the help of the manubrium, yet if the manu- brium be taken off, it will require a considerable strength to move it. Boyle.
MANUDUCTION. n. f. [manuductio, Latin.] Guidance by the hand.
We find no open tract, or constant manuduction, in this labyrinth. Preface to Brown's Vulgar Errors.
That they are carried by the manuduction of a rule, is evident from the constant steadiness and regularity of their motion. Glanville.
This is a direct manuduction to all kind of sin, by abusing the conscience with undervaluing persuasions concerning the malignity and guilt even of the foulest. South's Sermons.
MANUFACTURE. n. f. [manus and facio, Latin; manufacture, French.]
1. The practice of making any piece of workmanship.
2. Any thing made by art.
Heav'n's pow'r is infinite: earth, air, and sea,
The manufacture maſs the making pow'r obey. Dryden.
The peasants are clothed in a coarse kind of canvas, the manufacture of the country. Addison on Italy.
To MANUFACTURE. v. a. [manufacturer, French.] To make by art and labour; to form by workmanship.
MANUFACTURER. n. f. [manufacturier, French; manufacturist, Lat.] A workman; an artificer.
In the practices of artificers and the manufacturers of various kinds, the end being proposed, we find out ways of composing things for the several uses of human life. Watts.
To MANUMIT. v. a. [manumitto, Latin.] To set free; to dismiss from slavery.
A constant report of a daigier so eminent run through the whole castle, even into the deep dungeons, by the compa-sion of certain manumitted slaves. Kneller's Hiſt. of the Turks.
He presents
To thee renown'd for piety and force,
Poor captives manumitted, and matchless horſe. Waller.
MANUMISSION. n. f. [manumission, Fr. manumissio, Lat.] The act of giving liberty to slaves.
Slaves wore iron rings until their manumission or preferment. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
The pileus was somewhat like a night-cap, as the symbol of liberty, and therefore given to slaves at their manumission.
Arbutnot on Coins.
To MANUMIT. v. a. [manumitto, Latin.] To release from slavery.
Help to manumit and release him from those servile drudge-ries to vice, under which those remain who live without God. Government of the Tongue.
Thou wilt beneath the burthen blow
And glad receive the manumitting blow
On thy shav'd slavish head. Dryden's Juvenal.
MANURABLE. adj. [from manure.] Capable of cultivation.
This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every maior. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
MANURANCE. n. f. [from manure.] Agriculture; cultivation.
An obsolete word, worthy of revival.
Although there should none of them fall by the sword, yet they being kept from manurance, and their cattle from running abroad, by this hard restraint they would quickly devour one another. Spenser on Ireland.
To MANURE. v. a. [manuvrer, French.]
1. To cultivate by manual labour.
They mock our scant manuring, and require More hands than ours to lop their wanton growth. Milt.
2. To dung; to fatten with composts.
Fragments of shells, reduced by the agitation of the sea to powder, are used for the manuring of land. Woodward.
Revenge her slaughter'd citizens,
Or share their fate: the corps of half her senate Manure the fields of Theſſaly, while we Sit here, deliberating in cold debates. Addison's Cato.
MANURE. n. f. [from the verb.] Soil to be laid on lands;
dung or compost to fatten land.
When the Nile from Pharian fields is fled,
The fat manure with heav'nly fire is warm'd. Dryden.

Ingratitude! thou marblehearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou fhew'ft thee in a child,
Than the fea monfter.
MARCASITE. n. f.
The term marcasite has been very improperly ufed by fome for bifmuth, and by others for zink: the more accurate writers however always exprefs a fubftance different from either of thefe by it, fulphureous and metallick. The marcasite is a folid hard foft, of an obfcurely and irregularly foliaceous ftructure, of a bright glittering appearance, and naturally found in continued beds among the veins of ores, or in the fiffures of ftone: the variety of forms this mineral puts on is almoft endless: as it is generally found among the ores of metals, it is frequently impregnated with particles of them, and of other foftile bodies, and thence affumes various colours and degrees of hardnefs. There are however only three diftinct fpecies of it; one of a bright gold colour, another of a bright filver, and a third of a dead white: the filver one feems to be peculiarly meant by the writers on the Materia Medica. Marcasite is very frequent in the mines of Corn-wall, where the workmen call it mundick, but more fo in Germany, where they extract vitriol and fulphur from it, be-fides which it contains a quantity of arfenick.
The writers of minerals give the name pyrites and marcasites indifferently to the fame fort of body: I refrain the name of pyrites wholly to the nodules, or thofe that are found of lodged in ftata that are feperate: the marcasite is part of the matter that either conflitutes the ftatrum, or is lodged in perpendicular fiffures.
The acid falt diffolved in water is the fame with oil of fulphur per campanam, and abounding much in the bowels of the earth, and particularly in marcasites, unites itfelf to the other ingredients of the marcasite, which are bitumen, iron, copper, copper, and earth, and with them compounds alum, vitriol, and fulphur: with the earth alone it compounds alum; with the metal alone, or metal and earth together, it compounds vitriol; and with the bitumen and earth it compounds fulphur: whence it comes to pafs, that marcasites abound with thofe three minerals.

Here marcasites in various figures wait,
To ripen to a true metallick ftate.
MARCH. n. f. [from Mars.] The third month of the year.
March is drawn in tawny, with a fierce afpect, a helmet upon his head, to fhew this month was dedicated to Mars.
To MARCH. v. n. [marcher, French; for varicare, Menage, from Mars, Junius.]
1. To move in military form.
Well march we on;
To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd.
He march'd in battle array with his power againft Ar-pharad.
Maccabeus march'd forth, and flew five-and-twenty thou-fand perfons.
My father, when fome days before his death
He order'd me to march for Utica, Wept o'er me.
2. To walk in a grave, deliberate, or ftately manner.
Plexirtus finding that if nothing elfe, famine would at laft bring him to deftruction, thought better by humblenefs to creep where by pride he could not march.
Doth York intend no harm to us,
That thou he marchest with thee arm in arm.
Our bodies, ev'ry footstep that they make,
March towards death, until at laft they die.
Like thee, great fon of Jove, like thee,
When clad in rifing majesty,
Thou marchest down o'er Delos' hills.
The power of wifdom march'd before.
To MARCH. v. n.
1. To put in military movement.
Cyrus marching his army for divers days over mountains of fnow, the dazzling fplendor of its whitenefs prejudiced the fight of very many of his foldiers.
2. To bring in regular proceffion.
March them again in fair array,
And bid them form the happy day;
The happy day defign'd to wait
On William's fame, and Europe's fate.
MARCH. n. f. [marcher, French.]
1. Movement; journey of foldiers.
Thefe troops came to the army harraffed with a long and wearifome march, and caft away their arms and garments; and fought in their thirts.
Who fhould command, by his Almighty nod,
Thefe chofen troops, unconfcious of the road,
And unacquainted with th' appointed end,
Their march to begin, and thither tend.
Their march begins in military ftate.
2. Grave and folemn walk.
Waller was fmoother, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verfe, the full refounding line,
The long majeftick march, and energy divine.
3. Deliberate or laborious walk.
We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublefome march to gain the top of it.
4. Signals to move.
The drums prefently ftriking up a march, they make no longer ftay, but forward they go directly towards Neofat.
5. Marches, without fingular. [march, Gothick; meare, Saxon; marche, French.] Borders; limits; confines.
They of thofe marches Shall be a wall fufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.
The Englifh colonies were enforced to keep continual guards upon the borders and marches round them.
It is not fit that a king of an ifland fhould have any marches or borders but the four feas.
MARCHER. n. f. [from marcher, French.] Prefident of the marches or borders.
Many of our Englifh lords made war upon the Welchmen at their own charge; the lands which they gained they held to their own ufe; they were called lords marchers, and had royal liberties.
MARCHIONESS. n. f. [feminine, formed by adding the Englifh female termination to the Latin marchia.] The wife of a marquis.
The king's majesty
Does purpofe honour to you, no leis flowing Than marchionefs of Pembroke.

MARCIIPANE. n. f. [maffepane, French.] A kind of fweet bread, or bifeuit.
Along whole ridge fuch bones are met,
Like comfits round in marchpane fet.
MARCID. adj. [marcidus, Latin.] Lean; pining; withered.
A burning colliquative fever, the fofter parts being melted away, the heat continuing its aduftion upon the drier and flefhy parts, changes into a marcid fever.
He on his own fhil pours the nobleft oil;
That to your marcid dying herbs affign'd,
By the rank finell and tafte betrays its kind.
MARCOUR. n. f. [marcor, Latin.] Leannels; the ftate of withering; wafte of flefh.
Confidering the exolution and languor enfuing the action of ventry in fome, the extenuation and marcor in others, it much abridgeth our days.
A marcor is either imperfect, tending to a leffer withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an entire wafte of the body, excluding all means of cure.
MARE. n. f. [mare, Saxon.]
1. The female of a horfe.
A pair of courfers born of heav'nly breed,
Whom Circe ftolc from her celeftial fire,
By fubftituting mares, produc'd on earth,
Whofe wombs conceiv'd a more than mortal birth.
2. [From mara; the name of a fpirit imagined by the nations of the north to torment fleepers.] A kind of torpor or ftagnation, which feems to prefs the ftomach with a weight; the night hag.
Mab, his merry queen by night,
Betrides young folks that lie upright,
In elder times the mare that hight,
Which plagues them out of meafure:
Mushrooms caufe the incubus, or the mare in the ftomach.
MARESCHAL. n. f. [mareschal, French, derived by Junius from mare, the female of an horfe.] A chief commander of an army.
O William, may thy arms advance,
That he may lofe Dunant next year,
And fo be mareschal of France.
MARGARITE. n. f. [margarita, Latin; marguerite, French.] A pearl.

The marigold hath a radiated discous flower; the petals of them are, for the most part, crenated, the seeds crooked and rough; those which are uppermost long, and those within short: the leaves are long, intire, and, for the most part, succulent. Miller.
Your circle will teach you to draw truly all spherical bodies. The most of flowers; as, the rose and marigold. Peach.
The marigold, whose courtier's face
Echoes the sun, and doth unlace
Her at his rise. Cleaveland.
Fair is the gillflower, of gardens sweet,
Fair is the marigold, for pottage meet. Gay's Pastorals.
To MA'RI'NATE. v. a. [mariner, French.] To salt fish, and then preserve them in oil or vinegar.
Why am I staid a cook, if I'm loath
To marinate my fish, or season broth. King's Cookery.
MAR'INE. adj. [marinus, Latin.] Belonging to the sea.
The king was desirous that the ordinances of England and France, touching marine affairs, might be reduced into one form. Hayward.
Vast multitudes of shells, and other marine bodies, are found lodged in all sorts of stone. Woodward.
No longer Circe could her flame disguise,
But to the suppliant God marine replies. Garth's Ovid.
MAR'INE. n. f. [la marine, French.]
1. Sea-affairs.
Nearchus, who commanded Alexander's fleet, and Onesicrates his intendant-general of marine, have both left relations of the fate of the Indies at that time. Arbutnot.
2. A soldier taken on shipboard to be employed in descents upon the land.
MA'RI'NER. n. f. [from mare, Latin; marinier, French.] A seaman; a sailor.

MARK. n. f. [marc, Welsh; measc, Saxon; merche, Dutch; marque, French.]
1. A token by which any thing is known.
Once was proclaimed throughout all Ireland, that all men should mark their cattle with an open several mark upon their flanks or buttocks, so as if they happened to be stolen they might appear whose they were. Spenser on Ireland.
In the present form of the earth there are certain marks and indications of its first state; with which, if we compare those things that are recorded in sacred history, we may discover what the earth was in its first original. Burnet.
The urine is a lixivium of the salts in a human body, and the proper mark of the state and quantity of such salts; and therefore very certain indications for the choice of diet may be taken from the state of urine. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. A token; an impression.
But cruel fate, and my more cruel wife,
To Grecian swords betray'd my sleeping life:
These are the monuments of Helen's love,
The flame I bear below, the marks I bore above. Dryden.
'Twas then old soldiers cover'd o'er with scars,
The marks of Pyrrhus, or the Punick wars,
Thought all past services rewarded well,
If to their share at least two acres fell. Dryden's Juvenal.
At present there are scarce any marks left of a subterraneous fire; for the earth is cold, and over-run with grass and shrubs. Addison on Italy.
3. A proof; an evidence.
As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language is a mark of union. Bacon.
The Argonauts sail'd up the Danube, and from thence pass'd into the Adriatick, carrying their ship Argo upon their shoulders; a mark of great ignorance in geography among the writers of that time. Arbutnot on Coins.
4. Notice taken.
Upon the north sea bordereth Stow, so called, per eminentiam, as a place of great and good mark and scope. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where least of them resides. Decay of Piety.
3. To note; to take notice of.
Alas, poor country!
Where sighs, and groans, and shrieks, that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd! Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Mark them which cause divisions contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them. Rom. xvi. 17.
Now swear, and call to witness Heav'n, hell, and earth, I mark it not from one That breaths beneath such complicated guilt. Smith.
TO MARK. v. n. To note; to take notice.
Men mark when they hit, and never mark when they miss, as they do also of dreams. Bacon's Essays.
Mark a little why Virgil is so much concerned to make this marriage; it is to make way for the divorce which he intended afterwards. Dryden's Em.
MAR'KER. n. f. [marqueur, French, from mark.]
1. One that puts a mark on any thing.
2. One that notes, or takes notice.
MAR'KET. n. f. [anciently written mercāt, of mercatus, Lat.]
1. A public time of buying and selling.
It were good that the privilege of a market were given, the rather to enable them to their defence; for there is nothing doth sooner cause civility than many market towns, by reason the people repairing often thither will learn civil manners. Spenser on Ireland.
Mistress, know yourself, down on your knees,
And thank heav'n, fasting, for a good man's love:
For I must tell you friendly in your ear,
Sell when you can, you are not for all markets. Shakespeare. Wjld. xv. 12.
They counted our life a pastime, and our time here a market for gain. Wjld. xv. 12.
If one bushel of wheat and two bushels of barley will, in the market, be taken one for another, they are of equal worth. Locke.
2. Purchase and sale.
With another year's continuance of the war, there will hardly be money left in this kingdom to turn the common markets, or pay rents. Temple.
The precious weight
Of pepper and Sabeen incense take,
And with post-haste thy running market make,
Be sure to turn the penny. Dryden's Persius.
3. Rate; price. [marcbi, French.]
'Twas then old soldiers, cover'd o'er with scars,
Thought all past services rewarded well,
If, to their share, at least two acres fell,
Their country's frugal bounty; so of old
Was blood and life at a low market sold. Dryden's Juvenal.
TO MARK'ET. v. n. To deal at a market; to buy or sell; to make bargains.

MAR'KET-CROSS. n. f. [market and cross.] A cross set up where the market is held.
These things you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at marketcrosses, read in churches,
To face the garment of rebellion
With some fine colour. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
MAR'KET-DAY. n. f. [market and day.] The day on which things are publicly bought and sold.
Fool that I was, I thought imperial Rome,
Like Mantua, where on marketdays we come,
And thither drive our lambs. Dryden's Virgil.
He ordered all the Lucques to be seized that were found on a marketday in one of his frontier towns. Addison on Italy.
MAR'KET-FOLKS. n. f. [market and folks.] People that come to the market.
Poor marketfolks, that come to sell their corn. Shakespeare.
MAR'KET-MAN. n. f. [market and man.] One who goes to the market to sell or buy.
Be wary how you place your words,
Talk like the vulgar sort of marketmen,
That come to gather money for their corn. Shakespeare.
The marketman should act as if his master's whole estate ought to be applied to that servant's business. Swift.
MAR'KET-MAID. n. f. [market and maid.] A woman that goes to buy or sell.
You are come
A marketmaid to Rome, and have prevented
The ostentation of our love. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
MAR'KET-PLACE. n. f. [market and place.] Place where the market is held.
The king, thinking he had put up his sword, because of the noise, never took leisure to hear his answer, but made him prisoner, meaning the next morning to put him to death in the marketplace. Sidney, b. ii.

Socrates, Truth's early champion, martyr for his God. Thomson.
To MARTYR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To put to death for virtue.
2. To murder; to destroy.
You could not beg for grace.
Hark wretches, how I mean to martyr you:
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats. Shakespeare.
If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud. Suckling.
MARTYRDOM. n. f. [from martyr.] The death of a martyr;
the honour of a martyr.
If an infidel should pursue to death an heretick professing Christianity only for Christian profession sake, could we deny unto him the honour of martyrdom? Hooker, b. v.
Now that he hath left no higher degree of earthly honour, he intends to crown their innocency with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.
Herod, whose unblest
Hand, O! what darest not jealous greatness? tore
A thousand sweet babes from their mother's breast,
The blooms of martyrdom. Crashaw.
What mists of providence are these,
So faints, by supernatural pow'r set free,
Are left at last in martyrdom to die. Dryden.
MARTYROLOGY. n. f. [martyrologie, Fr. martyrologium, Lat.]
A register of martyrs.
In the Roman martyrology we find at one time many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian, being met together in a church, rather than escape by offering a little incense at their coming out. Stillington.
MARTYROLOGIST. n. f. [martyrologiste, French.] A writer of martyrology.
MARVEL. n. f. [merveille, French.] A wonder; any thing astonishing. Little in use.
A marvel it were, if a man could spy, in the whole scripture, nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.
I am scarce in breath, my lord.
—No marvel, you have so bestir'd your valour; you cowardly scall! Shakespeare's King Lear.
No marvel
My lord protector's hawks do towre so well. Shakespeare.
MARVEL of Peru. A flower. Ains.
To MARVEL. v. n. [merveille, French.] To wonder; to be astonished. Disused.

The encouragement of his two late successes, with which he was marvellously elated. Clarendon, b. viii.
MARVELLOUSNESS. n. f. [from marvellous.] Wonderfulness;
strangeness; astonishingness.
MA'SCULINE. adj. [masculin, Fr. masculinus, Latin.]
1. Male; not female.
Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long! Shakespeare.
His long beard noteth the air and fire, the two masculine elements exercising their operation upon nature being the feminine. Peacham on Drawing.
O! why did God,
Creator wife! that peopl'd highest heav'n
With spirits masculine, create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
2. Resembling man; virile; not soft; not effeminate.
You find something bold and masculine in the air and posture of the first figure, which is that of virtue. Addison.

knit with so small meshes, that a bee cannot get through.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. Any thing mingled or beaten together into an undistinguish-ed or confused body. [from mischen, Dutch, to mix, or mas-cher, French.]
3. A mixture for a horse.
Put half a peck of ground malt into a pale, then put to it as much scalding water as will wet it well; stir it about for half an hour till the water is very sweet, and give it the horse lukewarm: this mash is to be given to a horse after he has taken a purge, to make it work the better; or in the time of great sickness, or after hard labour. Farrier's Dict.
When mares foal, they feed them with mashes, and other moist food. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To MASH. v. a. [mascher, French.]
1. To beat into a confused mass.
The pressure would be intolerable, and they would even mash themselves and all things else apices. More.
To break the claw of a lobster, clap it between the sides of the dining-room door: thus you can do it without mashing the meat. Swift's Directions to the Postman.
2. To mix malt and water together in brewing.
What was put in the first mashing-tub draw off, as also that liquor in the second mashing-tub. Mortimer's Husbandry.
MASK. n. f. [masque, French.]
1. A cover to disguise the face; a visor.
Now love pulled off his mask, and shewed his face unto her, and told her plainly that he was his prisoner. Sidney.
Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And throw her sun-expelling mask away;
The air hath star'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shakespeare.
Could we suppose that a mask represented never to naturally the general humour of a character, it can never suit with the variety of passions that are incident to every single person in the whole course of a play. Addison on Italy.
2. Any pretence or subterfuge.
Too plain thy nakedness of soul spy'd,
Why dost thou strive the conscious shame to hide,
By masks of eloquence, and veils of pride? Prior.
3. A festive entertainment, in which the company is masked.
Will you prepare for this masque to-night. Shakespeare.
4. A revel; a piece of mummery; a wild buffle.
They in the end agreed,
That at a masque and common revelling,
Which was ordain'd, they should perform the deed. Daniel.
This thought might lead me through this world's vain mask,
Content, though blind, had I no other guide. Milton.
5. A dramatick performance, written in a tragick stile without attention to rules or probability.
Thus I have broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets in their pictures, poems, comedies, and masks. Peacham.
To MASK. v. a. [masquer, French.]
1. To disguise with a mask or visor.
What will grow out of such errors as go masked under the cloke of divine authority, impossible it is that ever the wit of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them. Hooker.
'Tis not my blood
Wherein thou see'st me masked. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she;
But being mask'd he was not sure. Shakespeare.
The old Vatican Terence has, at the head of every scene, the figures of all the persons, with their particular disguises; and I saw in the Villa di Mattheo an antique statue masked, which was perhaps designed for Gnatho in the cunuch, for it agrees exactly with the figure he makes in the manuscript. Addison.
2. To cover; to hide.
I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
As when a piece of wanton lawn,
A thin aerial veil is drawn O'er beauty's face, seeming to hide,
More sweetly shows the blushing hide:
A foul whole intellectual beams
No mists do masks, no lazy freams. Crashaw.
To MASK. v. n.
1. To revel; to play the mummer.
Thy gown? Why, ay; come, taylor, let us see't;
What masking stuff's here! Shakespeare.
Masking habits, and a borrow'd name,
Contrive to hide my plenitude of shame. Prior.
2. To be disguised any way. MA'SKER.

M A S

MA'SKER. n. f. [from masker.] One who revels in a mask; a mummer.
Tell false Edward,
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
To revel it with him and his new bride. Shakespeare.
Let the scenes abound with light, and let the maskers that are to come down from the scene have some motions upon the scene before their coming down. Bacon.
The maskers come late, and I think will stay,
Like fairies, till the cock crow them away. Donne.
MA'SON. n. f. [maçon, French; mactio, low Latin.] A builder with stone.
Many find a reason very wittily before the thing be true; that the materials being left rough, are more manageable in the mason's hand than if they had been smooth. Watson.
A mason that makes a wall meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and places it in his work. More.
MA'SONRY. n. f. [maçonnerie, Fr.] The craft or performance of a mason.
MASQUERA'DE. n. f. [from masque.]
1. A diversion in which the company is masked.
What guards the purity of melting maids,
In costly balls, and midnight masquerades,
Safe from the treach'rous friend, and daring spark,
The glance by day, the whisper in the dark. Pope.
2. Disguise.
I was upon the frolic this evening, and came to visit thee in masquerade. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Truth, of all things the plainest and sincerest, is forced to gain admittance to us in disguise, and court us in masquerade.
Fulton on the Clocks.
To MASQUERA'DE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To go in disguise.
A freak took an ass in the head, and away he goes into the woods, masquerading up and down in a lion's skin.
L'Estrange's Fables.
2. To assemble in masks.
I find that our art hath not gained much by the happy revival of masquerading among us. Swift.
MASQUERA'DER. n. f. [from masquerade.] A person in a mask.
The most dangerous sort of cheats are but masqueraders under the vizor of friends. L'Estrange.
MASS. n. f. [masse, Fr. massa, Latin.]
1. A body; a lump; a continuous quantity.
If it were not for these principles the bodies, of the earth, planets, comets, sun, and all things in them, would grow cold and freeze, and become inactive masses. Newton's Opt.
Some passing into their pores, others adhering in lumps or masses to their outides, so as wholly to cover and involve it in the mass they together constituted. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
2. A large quantity.
Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
He had spent a huge mass of treasure in transporting his army. Davies on Ireland.
3. Bulk; vast body.
The Creator of the world would not have framed so huge a mass of earth but for some reasonable creatures to have their habitation. Abbot's Description of the World.
This army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
He discovered to me the richest mines which the Spaniards have, and from whence all the mass of gold that comes into Spain is drawn. Raleigh's Essays.
4. Congeries; assemblage indistinct.
The whole knowledge of groups, of the lights and shadows, and of those masses which Titian calls a bunch of grapes, is, in the prints of Rubens, exposed clearly to the light. Dryden.
At distance, through an artful glass,
To the mind's eye things well appear;
They lose their forms, and make a mass
Confus'd and black, if brought too near. Prior.
Where flowers grow, the ground at a distance seems covered with them, and we must walk into it before we can distinguish the several weeds that spring up in such a beautiful mass of colours. Addison's Freeholder.
5. Gross body; the general.
Comets have power over the gross and mass of things; but they are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects. Bacon's Essays.
Where'er thou art, he is; th' eternal mind
Acts through all places; is to none confin'd:
Fills ocean, earth, and air, and all above,
And through the universal mass does move. Dryden.
The mass of the people have opened their eyes, and will not be governed by Clodius and Curio at the head of their myrmidons. Swift.
If there is not a sufficient quantity of blood and strength of circulation, it may infect the whole mass of the fluids.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
6. [Alissa, Latin.] The service of the Romish church.

Burnished gold is that manner of gilding which we set in old parchment and mass books, done by monks and priests; who were very expert herein. Peacham on Drawing.
He infers, that then Luther must have been unpardonably wicked in using masses for fifteen years. Atterbury.
To MASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To celebrate mass.
All their massing furniture almost they took from the law, least having an altar and a priest they should want vestments.
Hooker, b. iv.
To MASS. v. a. [from the noun.] It seems once to have signified to thicken; to strengthen.
They feared the French might, with filling or massing the house, or else by fortifying, make such a piece as might annoy the haven. Hayward.
MASSACRE. n. f. [massacre, French, from mazzare, Italian.]
1. Carnage; slaughter; butchery; indiscriminate destruction.
Of whom such massacre
Make they, but of their brethren, men of men. Milton.
Slaughter grows murder, when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
2. Murder.
The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
To MASSACRE. v. a. [massacrer, French, from the noun.]
To butcher; to slaughter indiscriminately.
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction, and their family. Shakespeare.
Christian religion, now crumbled into fractions, may, like dust, be irrecoverably dissipated, if God do not countermeus, or we recover so much sobriety as to forbear to massacre what we pretend to love. Decay of Piety.
After the miserable slaughter of the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem, they were scattered into all corners, oppressed and detested, and sometimes massacred and extirpated. Atterbury.
MASSICOT. n. f. [French.]
Massicot is cerus calcined by a moderate degree of fire; of this there are three sorts, the white, the yellow, and that of a golden colour, their difference arising from the different degrees of fire applied in the operation. White massicot is of a yellowish white, and is that which has received the least calcination; yellow massicot has received more, and gold-coloured massicot still more; all of them should be an impalpable powder, weighty and high-coloured: they are used in painting. Trevoux.
MA'SSINESS. } n. f. [from massy, massive.] Weight; bulk;
MA'SSIVENESS. } ponderousness.
It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision which he served in it, than for the massiness of the dish.
Hakewill on Providence.
MA'SSIVE. } adj. [massif, French.] Heavy; weighty; pon-MASSY. } derous; bulky; continuous.
If you would hurt,
Your swords are now too massy for your strength,
And will not be uplifted. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Perhaps these few stones and sling, used with invocation of the Lord of Hosts, may countervail the massive armour of the uncircumcised Philistine. Government of the Tongue.
No sideboards then with gilded plate were press'd,
No sweating slaves with massy dishes dress'd. Dryden.
The more gross and massy parts of the terrestrial globe, the strata of stone, owe their present order to the deluge.
Woodward's Nat. Hist.
If these liquors or glasses were so thick and massy that no light could get through them, I question not but that they would, like all other opaque bodies, appear of one and the same colour in all positions of the eye. Newton's Opticks.
Th' intrepid Theban hears the bursting sky,
Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
And views astonish'd from the hills afar,
The floods descending, and the wat'ry war. Pope's Statius.
Swift the signal giv'n,
They start away, and sweep the massy mound
That runs around the hill. Thomson's Spring.
MAST. n. f. [mast, mât, French; mæste, Saxon.]
1. The beam or post raised above the vessel, to which the sail is fixed.
Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude
That thou hast perpendicularly fallen. Shakespeare's King Lear.
He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,
His vessel moor'd. Dryden's Homer.
2. The fruit of the oak and beech.
The oaks bear masts, the briars scarlet hips;
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush Lays her full masts before you. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
Trees that bear mast, and nuts, are more lasting than those that bear fruits; as oaks and beeches last longer than apples and pears. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 583.
When sheep fed like men upon acorns, a shepherd drove his flock into a little oak wood, and up he went to shake them down some masts. L'Estrange's Fables.

The breaking down an old frame of government, and erecting a new, seems like the cutting down an old oak and planting a young one: it is true, the grandson may enjoy the shade and the mast, but the planter, besides the pleasure of imagination, has no other benefit.

As a savage boar,
With forest mast and fatning marshes fed,
When once he fees himself in toils inclos'd,
Whets his tusks.
Wond'ring dolphins o'er the palace glide;
On leaves and mast of mighty oaks they brouze,
And their broad fins entangle in the boughs.

MA'STER. n. f. [from maſt.] Furnished with masts. Latin.]

1. One who has servants; opposed to man or servant. But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself
Are yours my lord.

2. A director; a governor. If thou be made the master of a feast, be among them as one of the rest.
My friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet, and the song.

3. Owner; proprietor. An orator, who had undertaken to make a panegyric on Alexander the Great, and who had employed the strongest figures of his rhetoric in the praise of Bucephalus, would do quite the contrary to that which was expected from him; because it would be believed, that he rather took the horse for his subject than the master.

4. A lord; a ruler. Wisdom and virtue are the proper qualifications in the master of a house.
There Caesar, grac'd with both Minerva's, throne,
Caesar, the world's great master, and his own.

The pride of royal blood, that checks my soul;
You know, alas! I was not born to kneel,
To sue for pity, and to own a master.

5. Chief; head. Chief master-gunner am I of this town,
Something I must do to procure me grace.
As a wife master-builder I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon.

The best sets are the heads got from the very tops of the root; the next are the runners, which spread from the master roots.

6. Possessor. When I have thus made myself master of a hundred thousand drachms, I shall naturally set myself on the foot of a prince, and will demand the grand vizier's daughter in marriage.

7. Commander of a trading ship. The duke of Savoy may make himself master of the French dominions on the other side of the Rhone.

An unhappy master is he that is made cunning by many shipwrecks; a miserable merchant, that is neither rich nor wife, but after some bankrupts.

8. One uncontrolled. Let ev'ry man be master of his time Till seven at night.
Great, and increasing; but by sea
He is an absolute master.

9. A compellation of respect. Master doctor, you have brought those drugs.
Stand by, my masters, bring him near the king.
Masters play here, I will content your pains,
Something that's brief; and bid, good morrow, general.

10. A young gentleman. If gaming does an aged fire entice,
Then my young master swiftly learns the vice.
Master lay with his bedchamber towards the south sun;
mis lodged in a garret, exposed to the north wind.

11. One who teaches; a teacher. Vary few n en are wise by their own counsel, or learned by their own teaching; for he that was only taught by himself had a fool to his master.

12. A man eminently skilful in practice or science. The great mocking master mock'd not then,
When he said, Truth was buried here below.
Spenser and Fairfax, great masters of our language, saw much farther into the beauties of our numbers than those who followed.

A man must not only be able to judge of words and style, but he must be a master of them too; he must perfectly understand his author's tongue, and absolutely command his own.

He that does not pretend to painting, is not touched at the commendation of a master in that profession.

13. A title of dignity in the universities; as, master of arts. To MA'STER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To be a master to; to rule; to govern.
Ay, good faith,
And rather father thee, than master thee.

2. To conquer; to overpower; to subdue. Thrice blessed they that master to their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage.
The princes of Germany did not think him sent to command the empire, who was neither able to rule his insolent subjects in England, nor master his rebellious people of Ireland.

Then comes some third party, that masters both plaintiff and defendant, and carries away the booty.
Honour burns in me, not so fiercely bright,
But pale as fires when master'd by the light.

Obstinacy and wilful neglects must be mastered, even though it cost blows.
A man can no more justly make use of another's necessity, than he that has more strength can seize upon a weaker, master him to his obedience, and, with a dagger at his throat, offer him death or slavery.

The reformation of an habitual sinner is a work of time and patience; evil customs must be mastered and subdued by degrees.

3. To execute with skill. I do not take myself to be so perfect in the transactions and privileges of Bohemia, as to be fit to handle that part: and I will not offer at that I cannot master.

MA'STERDOM. n. f. [from maſter.] Dominion; rule. Not in use.

MA'STER-HAND. n. f. The hand of a man eminently skilful. Music resembles poetry, in each
Are nameless graces which in methods teach,
And which a master-hand alone can reach.

MA'STER-KEY. n. f. The key which opens many locks, of which the subordinate keys open each only one.

MA'STER-LEAF. n. f. One that leaves or defects his master.

MA'STER-SINEW. n. f. The master-sinew is a large sinew that furrounds the hough, and divides it from the bone by a hollow place, where the wind-galls are usually seated, which is the largest and most visible sinew in a horse's body; this oftentimes is relaxed or retrained.

MA'STER-STRING. n. f. Principal string. He touch'd me
Ev'n on the tend'rest point; the master-string
That makes most harmony or discord to me.
I own the glorious subject fires my breast.

MA'STER-STROKE. n. f. Capital performance. Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's mazy intricacies trace;
Tell how your search has here eluded been,
How oft amaz'd, and ravish'd you have seen,
The conduct, prudence, and stupendous art,
And master-strokes in each mechanic part.

MA'STERLESS. adj. [from maſter.]
1. Wanting a master or owner. When all was past took up his forlorn weed,
His silver shield now idle masterless.

2. Ungoverned; unflubbued. You had of her pure honour, gains, or loses,
Your sword or mine; or masterless leaves both
To who shall find them.

MA'STERLY. adv. [from maſterly.] Eminent skill. Thou dost speak masterly Young though thou art.
I read a book; I think it very masterly written.

MA'STERLY. adj. [from maſter.] Suitable to a master; artful; skilful. As for the warmth of fancy, the masterly figures, and the copiousness of imagination, he has exceeded all others.

2. Imperious; with the sway of a master. MA'STERPIECE. n. f. [from maſter and piece.] 1. Capital performance; any thing done or made with extraordinary skill.
This is the masterpiece, and most excellent part, of the work of reformation, and is worthy of his majesty's pains.

'Tis done; and 'twas my masterpiece, to work
My safety, 'twixt two dangerous extremes:
Scylla and Charybdis.

Let those consider this who look upon it as a piece of art, and the masterpiece of conversation, to deceive, and make a prey of a credulous and well-meaning honesty.

2. Chief excellence. Beating up of quarters was his masterpiece.
Diffimulation was his masterpiece; in which he so much excelled, that men were not ashamed with being deceived but twice by him.

MA'STERSHIP. n. f. [from maſter.] 1. Dominion; rule; power.
2. Superiority; pre-eminence.
For Python slain he Pythian games decreed,
Where noble youths for mastery should strive,
To quito, to ruin, and fleets and chariots drive.

3. Chief work. Two youths of royal blood, renew'd in fight,
The mastery of heav'n in face and mind.

4. Skill; knowledge. You were used To say extremity was the trier of spirits;
That when the sea was calm all boats alike
Shew'd mastery in floating.

5. A title of ironical respect. How now, Signior Launce? what news with your master-ship?

MA'STER-TEETH. n. f. [from maſter and teeth.] The principal teeth. Some living creatures have their master-teeth indented one within another like faws; as lions and dogs.

MA'STERWORT. n. f. [from maſter, and wort, Saxon.] The masterwort is a plant with a rose and umbellated flower, consisting of several petals, which are sometimes heart-shaped, and sometimes intire, ranged in a circle, and resting on the empalement; which afterward becomes a fruit, composed of two seeds, which are plain, almost oval, gently ftreaked and bordered, and generally casting their cover; to these marks must be added, that their leaves are winged, and pretty large: the root is used in medicine.

MA'STERWORT is raised of seeds, or runners from the roots.

MA'STERY. n. f. [from maſter, French, from maſter.] 1. Dominion; rule.
If divided by mountains, they will fight for the mastery of the passages of the tops, and for the towns that stand upon the roots.

2. Superiority; pre-eminence. If a man strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully.
This is the case of those that will try masteries with their superiors, and bite that which is too hard.

MAT

Good men I suppose to live in a state of mortification; under a perpetual conflict with their bodily appetites, and struggling to get the mastery over them.

3. Skill. Chief mastery to dissect,
With long and tedious havock, fabled knights,
In battles feign'd.

4. Attainment of skill or power. The learning and mastery of a tongue being unpleasant in itself, should not be cumbered with any other difficulties.

MA'STEFUL. adj. [from maſt.] Abounding in mast, or fruit of oak, beech or chefnut. Some from seeds inclos'd on earth arise,
For thus the mastful chefnut mates the skies.

MASTICATION. n. f. [from maſticatio, Lat.] The act of chewing. In birds there is no mastication, or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw, and thence transferred into the gizzard.

MASTICATION. n. f. [from maſticatio, French.] A medicine to be chewed only, not swallowed. Remember masticatories for the mouth.
Salivation and masticatories evacuate considerably; salivation many pints of phlegm in a day, and very much by chewing tobacco.

MA'STICH. n. f. [from maſtic, French.] 1. A kind of gum gathered from trees of the same name in Scio.
We may apply intercipients upon the temples of mastich; frontals may also be applied.

2. A kind of mortar or cement. As for the small particles of brick and stone, the least moistness would join them together, and turn them into a kind of mastich, which those insects could not divide.

MA'STICOT. n. f. [from maſtic, Latin.] See MASSICOT. Grind your masticot with a small quantity of saffron in gum water.
Masticot is very light, because it is a very clear yellow, and very near to white.

MA'STIVE. n. f. [from maſt, plural. [from maſt, French; maſtino, Italian.] A dog of the largest size; a bandog; dogs kept to watch the house.
As savage bull, whom two fierce mastives bait,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore, Forgets with wary ward them to await,
But with his dreadful horns them drives afore.

MA'STIVE. n. f. [from maſt, plural. [from maſt, French; maſtino, Italian.] A dog of the largest size; a bandog; dogs kept to watch the house.
When we knock at a farmer's door, the first answer shall be his vigilant mastiff.
Soon as Ulysses near th' enclosure drew,
With open mouths the furious mastives flew.

MA'STIVE. n. f. [from maſt, plural. [from maſt, French; maſtino, Italian.] A dog of the largest size; a bandog; dogs kept to watch the house.
Let the mastiffs amuse themselves about a sheep's skin stuff'd with hay, provided it will keep them from worrying the flock.

MA'STIVE. n. f. [from maſt, plural. [from maſt, French; maſtino, Italian.] A dog of the largest size; a bandog; dogs kept to watch the house.
Her shining hair, uncomb'd, was loosely spread,
A crown of mastives oak adorn'd her head.

MA'STIVE. n. f. [from maſt, plural. [from maſt, French; maſtino, Italian.] A dog of the largest size; a bandog; dogs kept to watch the house.
The women and children in the west of Cornwall make mats of a small and fine kind of bents there growing, which serve to cover floors and walls.

MA'STIVE. n. f. [from maſt, plural. [from maſt, French; maſtino, Italian.] A dog of the largest size; a bandog; dogs kept to watch the house.
The floors of plaster, and the walls of dung.
To MAT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To cover with mats.
Keep the doors and windows of your conservatories well matted, and guarded from the piercing air.

2. To twist together; to join like a mat. On a fountain light, Whole brim with pinks was platted;
The banks with daffodillies dight,
With grass like sleeve was matted.

MA'STIVE. n. f. [from maſt, plural. [from maſt, French; maſtino, Italian.] A dog of the largest size; a bandog; dogs kept to watch the house.
No god of sleep he did invoke,
The stream that o'er the pebbles flies,
With gentle slumber crowns his eyes.

MA'STIVE. n. f. [from maſt, plural. [from maſt, French; maſtino, Italian.] A dog of the largest size; a bandog; dogs kept to watch the house.

MA'TADORE. n. f. [matador, a murderer, Spanish.] A hand of cards so called from its efficacy against the adverse player.
Now move to war her fable matadores.
In show like leaders of the swarthy Moors.
MA'TACHIN. n. f. [French.] An old dance.
Who ever saw a matachin dance to imitate fighting: this was a fight that did imitate the matachin; for they being but three that fought, every one had two adversaries striking him who struck the third.
MATCH. n. f. [meche, French; miccia, Italian; probably from mico, to shine, Latin: surely not, as Skinner conjectures, from the Saxon maca, a companion, because a match is companion to a gun.] Any thing that catches fire; generally a card, rope, or small chip of wood dipped in melted sulphur.
Tie them in several bottles matchers, and see which of them last longest without stench.
He made use of her trees as of matches to set Drina a fire.
Being willing to try something that would not cherish much fire at once, and would keep fire much longer than a coal, we took a piece of match, such as soldiers use.
2. [From μαχη, a fight, or from maca, Saxon, one equal to another.] A contest; a game; any thing in which there is contest or opposition.
Shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears? Shaksp.
The goat was mine, by singing fairly won.
A solemn match was made; he lost the prize.
3. [From maca, Saxon.] One equal to another; one able to contest with another.
Government mitigates the inequality of power among particular ranks, and makes an innocent man, though of the lowest rank, a match for the mightiest of his fellow-subjects.
The old man has met with his match.
The natural flame that attends vice, makes them zealous to encourage themselves by numbers, and form a party against religion: it is with pride they survey their increasing strength, and begin to think themselves a match for virtue.
4. One that suits or tallies with another.
5. A marriage.
The match
Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities, Beseeming such a wife as your fair daughter. Shaksp.
Love doth seldom suffer itself to be confined by other matches than those of its own making.
With him she strove to join Lavinia's hand,
But dire portents the purpos'd match withstand. Dryden.
6. One to be married.
She inherited a fair fortune of her own, and was very rich in a personal estate, and was looked upon as the richest match of the West.
To MATCH. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To be equal to.
No settled senses of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
O thou good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short,
And every measure fail me. Shaksp. King Lear.
2. To shew an equal.
No history or antiquity can match his policies and his conduct. South's Sermons.
3. To equal; to oppose.
Eternal might
To match with their inventions they presum'd
So easy, and of his thunder made a scorn. Milton.
What though his heart be great, his actions gallant,
He wants a crown to poise against a crown,
Birth to match birth, and power to balance power. Dryden.
The shepherd's calendar of Spenser is not to be matched in any modern language. Dryden.
4. To suit; to proportion.
Let poets match their subject to their strength,
And often try what weight they can support. Recommen.
Mine have been still
Match'd with my birth; a younger brother's hopes. Rowe.
Employ their wit and humour in chusing and matching of patterns and colours. Swift's Miscel.
5. To marry; to give in marriage.
Great king,
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate. Shaksp. King Lear.
Thou dost protest thy love, and would'st it show
By matching her, as she would match her foe. Donne.

MAT

Them willingly they would have still retain'd,
And match'd unto the prince. Daniel's Civil War.
When a man thinks himself match'd to one who should be a comfort to him, instead thereof he finds in his bosom a beast. South's Sermons.
A senator of Rome, while Rome surviv'd,
Would not have match'd his daughter with a king. Addison.
To MATCH. v. n.
1. To be married.
A thing that may luckily fall out to him that hath the blef-sing to match with some heroic-minded lady. Sidney, b. ii.
I hold it a sin to match in my kindred. Shaksp.
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,
And every creature couple with his foe. Dryd. Sp. Fryar.
All creatures else are much unworthy thee,
They match'd, and thou alone art left for me. Dryden.
2. To suit; to be proportionate; to tally.
MATCHABLE. adj. [from match.]
1. Suitable; equal; fit to be joined.
Ye, whose high worths surpassing Paragon,
Could not on earth have found one fit for mate,
Ne but in heaven matchable to none,
Why did ye stoop unto so lowly state? Spenser, Sonnet 66.
2. Correspondent.
Those at land that are not matchable with any upon our shores, are of those very kinds which are found no where but in the deepest parts of the sea. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
MATCHLESS. adj. [from match.] Without an equal.
This happy day two lights are seen,
A glorious faint, a matchless queen. Waller.
Much less, in arms, oppose thy matchless force,
When thy sharp spurs shall urge thy foaming horse. Dryd.
MATCHLESSLY. n. f. In a manner not to be equalled.
MATCHLESSNESS. n. f. [from matchless.] State of being without an equal.
MATCHMAKER. n. f. [match and make.]
1. One who contrives marriages.
You came to him to know
If you should carry me, or no;
And would have hir'd him and his imps,
To be your matchmakers and pimps. Hudibras, p. iii.
2. One who makes matches to burn.
MATE. n. f. [maca, Saxon; maet, Dutch.]
1. A husband or wife.
I that am frail flesh and earthly wight,
Unworthy mate for such immortal mate,
Myself well wote, and mine unequal fate. Fairy Queen.
2. A companion, male or female.
Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shaksp.
My competitor.
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war. Shaksp.
You knew me once no mate
For you; there sitting where you durst not soar. Milton.
Damon, behold you breaking purple cloud;
Hear'st thou not hymns and songs divinely loud:
There mounts Amyntas, the young cherubs play
About their godlike mate, and sing him on his way. Dryd.
Leave thy bride alone:
Go, leave her with her maiden mates to play
At sports more harmless, till the break of day. Dryden.
3. The male or female of animals.
Part single, or with mate;
Graze the sea-weed their pasture, and through groves
Of coral stray. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
Pliny tells us, that elephants know no copulation with any other than their own proper mate. Ayliffe's Parergon.
4. One that falls in the same ship.
What vengeance on the passing fleet she pour'd,
The master frighted, and the mates devour'd. Recommen.
5. One that eats at the same table.
6. The second in subordination; as, the master's mate; the chirurgion's mate.
To MATE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To match; to marry.
Ensample make of him your hapless joy,
And of myself now mated as you see,
Whose prouder vaunt, that proud avenging boy,
Did soon pluck down, and curb'd my liberty. Fairy Q.
The hind, that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.
2. To be equal to.
Some from seeds inclos'd on earth arise,
For thus the fruitful chestnut mates the skies. Dryden.
Parnassus is its name; whose forked rise
Mounts through the clouds, and mates the lofty skies:
High on the summit of this dubious cliff,
Deucalion wafting moor'd his little skiff. Dryden.
3. To

MAT

To oppose; to equal.
I i' th' way of loyalty and truth,
Dare mate a founder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
4. [Mater, French; matar, Spanish.] To subdue; to confound; to crush.
That is good deceit. Shaksp.
Which mater him first, that first intends deceit.
The great effects that may come of industry and perseverance who knoweth not? For audacity doth almost bind and mater the weaker sort of minds. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
My sense the 'as mated, and amaz'd my fight. Shaksp.
Why this is strange; go call the abbess hither;
I think you are all mated, or stark mad. Shaksp.
MATERIAL. adj. [materiel, French; materialis, Latin.]
1. Consisting of matter; corporeal; not spiritual.
When we judge, our minds we mirrors make;
And as those glasses which material be,
Forms of material things do only take,
For thoughts or minds in them we cannot see. Davies.
That these trees of life and knowledge were material trees, though figures of the law and the gospel, it is not doubted by the most religious and learned writers. Raleigh.
2. Important; momentous; essential.
We must propose unto all men certain petitions incident, and very material in causes of this nature. Hooker, b. v.
Hold them for catholics or heretics, it is not a thing either one way or another, in this present question, material.
Hooker, b. iv.
What part of the world forever we fall into, the ordinary use of this very prayer hath, with equal continuance, accompanied the fame, as one of the principal and most mate- rial duties of honour due to Christ. Hooker, b. v.
It may discover some secret meaning and intent therein, very material to the state of that government. Spenser.
The question is not, whether you allow or disallow that book, neither is it material. Whitgift.
He would not stay at your petitions made;
His business more material. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
Neither is this a question of words, but infinitely material in nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 98.
I pass the rest, whose every race and name,
And kinds are left material to my theme. Dryden's Virg.
As for the more material faults of writing, though I see many of them, I want leisure to amend them. Dryden.
I shall, in the account of simple ideas, set down only such as are material to our present purpose. Locke.
In this material point, the constitution of the English government far exceeds all others. Swift.
MATERIALS. n. f. [this word is scarcely used in the singular;
materialia, French.] The substance of which any thing is made.
The West-Indians, and many nations of the Africans, finding means and materials have been taught, by their own necessities, to pass rivers in a boat of one tree. Raleigh.
Intending an accurate enumeration of medical materials, the omission hereof affords some probability it was not used by the ancients. Brown's Vulg. Errors, b. i.
David, who made such rich provision of materials for the building of the temple, because he had dip't his hands in blood, was not permitted to lay a stone in that sacred pile. South.
That lamp in one of the heathen temples the art of man might make of some such material as the stone asbestos, which being once kindled will burn without being consumed. Wilk.
The materials of that building very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them. Tillotson.
Simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested to the mind only by sensation and reflection. Locke.
Such a fool was never found,
Who pull'd a palace to the ground,
Only to have the ruins made Materials for an house decay'd. Swift's Miscel.
MATERIALIST. n. f. [from material.] One who denies spiritual substances.
He was bent upon making Memmius a materialist. Dryd.
MATERIALITY. n. f. [materialité, Fr. from material.] Coe-poreity; material existence; not spirituality.
Considering that corporeity could not agree with this universal subsistent nature, abstracting from all materiality in his ideas, and giving them an actual subsistence in nature, he made them like angels, whose essences were to be the essence, and to give existence to corporeal individuals; and so each idea was embodied in every individual of its species. Digby.
MATERIALLY. adv. [from material.]
1. In the state of matter.
I do not mean, that any thing is separable from a body by fire that was not materially pre-existent in it. Boyle.
2. Not formally.
Though an ill intention is certainly sufficient to spoil and corrupt an act in itself materially good, yet no good intention whatsoever can rectify or infuse a moral goodness into an act otherwise evil. South's Sermons.

MAT

3. Importantly; essentially.
All this concerneth the customs of the Irish very materially;
as well to reform those which are evil, as to confirm and continue those which are good. Spenser on Ireland.
MATERIALNESS. n. f. [from material.] State of being material; importance.
MATERIATE. } adj. [materiatus, Latin.] Consisting of mat-MATERIATED. } ter.
After long enquiry of things immerse in matter, interpose some subject which is immaterial or less material, such as this of sounds, to the end that the intellect may be rectified, and become not partial. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 114.
MATERIATION. n. f. [from materia, Lat.] The act of forming matter.
Creation is the production of all things out of nothing; a formation not only of matter but of form, and a materiation even of matter itself. Brewster.
MATERNAL. adj. [maternus, Fr. maternus, Lat.] Motherly; befitting or pertaining to a mother.
The babe had all that infant care beguiles,
And early knew his mother in her smiles:
At his first aptness the maternal love
Those rudiments of reason did improve. Dryden.
MATERNITY. n. f. [maternité, French, from materius, Lat.]
The character or relation of a mother.
MAT-FELON. n. f. [mater, to kill, and felon, a thief.] A species of knap-weed growing wild.
MATHEMATICAL. } adj. [mathematicus, Lat.] Considered MATHEMATICK. } according to the doctrine of the mathematicians.
The East and West,
Upon the globe, a mathematick point
Only divides: thus happiness and misery,
And all extremes, are still contiguous. Denham's Sophy.
It is as impossible for an aggregate of finites to comprehend or exhaust one infinite, as it is for the greatest number of ma- thematick points to amount to, or constitute a body. Boyle.
I suppose all the particles of matter to be situated in an exact and mathematical evenness. Bentley's Serm.
MATHEMATICALLY. adv. [from mathematick.] According to the laws of the mathematical sciences.
We may be mathematically certain, that the heat of the sun is according to the density of the sun-beams, and is reci-procally proportional to the square of the distance from the body of the sun. Bentley's Sermons.
MATHEMATICIAN. n. f. [mathematicus, Lat. mathematicien, French.] A man versed in the mathematics.
One of the most eminent mathematicians of the age assured me, that the greatest pleasure he took in reading Virgil was in examining Aeneas's voyage by the map. Addison's Spect.
MATHEMATICKS. n. f. [μαθηματικα.] That science which contemplates whatever is capable of being numbered or measured; and it is either pure or mixt: pure considers abstracted quantity, without any relation to matter; mixt is interwoven with physical considerations. Harris.
The mathematick and the metaphysicks
Fall to them, as you find your stomach serves you. Shak.
See mystery to mathematick fly. Pope.
MATHE'S. n. f. An herb. Alm.
MATHE'SIS. n. f. [μαθησις.] The doctrine of mathematics.
Mad Mathe'sis alone was unconfin'd. Pope.
MATIN. adj. [matine, French; matutinus, Latin.] Morning; used in the morning.
Up rose the victor angels, and to arms
The matin trumpet rung. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
I waste the matin lamp in sighs for thee;
Thy image steals between my god and me. Pope.
MATIN. n. f. Morning.
The glow-worm shews the matin to be near,
And gins to pale his uneffectual fire. Shaksp.
MATINS. n. f. [matines, French.] Morning worship.
The winged choristers began
To chirp their matins. Claveland.
By the pontifical, no altar is consecrated without reliques:
the vigils are celebrated before them, and the nocturn and matins, for the saints whose the reliques are. Stillingfleet.
That he should raise his mix'd crest on high,
And clap his wings, and call his family
To sacred rites; and vex th' etherial powers
With midnight matins, at uncivil hours. Dryden.
MATRASS. n. f. [matras, French.]
Matrasi is the name of a chemical glass vessel made for digestion or distillation, being sometimes bellied, and sometimes rising gradually taper into a conical figure. Quincy.
Protect from violent storms, and the too parching darts of the sun, your pennach'd tulips and ranunculus, covering them with matrasses. Evelyn's Calendar.
MATRICE.

MAT

MA'TRICE. n. f. [matrix, Latin.]
 1. The womb; the cavity where the fetus is formed.
 If the time required in vivification be of any length, the spirit will exhale before the creature be mature, except it be enclosed in a place where it may have continuance of the heat, and closeness that may keep it from exhaling; and such places are the wombs and matrices of the females. Bacon.
 2. A mould; that which gives form to something inclosed.
 Stones that carry a resemblance of cockles, were formed in the cavities of shells; and these shells have served as matrices or moulds to them. Woodward.
MA'TRICIDE. n. f. [matricidium, Latin.]
 1. Slaughter of a mother.
 Nature compensates the death of the father by the matricide and murder of the mother. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 2. [Matricida, Latin; matricide, Fr.] A mother killer. Ainsl.
MA'TRICULATE. v. a. [from matricula: a matrix, quod ea velut matrice continetur militum nomina. Ainsl.] To enter or admit to a membership of the universities of England; to enlist; to enter into any society by setting down the name.
 He, after some trial of his manners and learning, thought fit to enter himself of that college, and after to matriculate him in the university. Walton's Life of Sanderson.
MA'TRICULATE. n. f. [from the verb.] A man matriculated.
 Suffer me, in the name of the matriculates of that famous university, to ask them some plain questions. Arbutnot.
MA'TRICULATION. n. f. [from matriculate.] The act of matriculating.
 A scholar absent from the university for five years, is struck out of the matriculation book; and, upon his coming de novo to the university, ought to be again matriculated. Ayliffe.
MATRIMONIAL. adj. [matrimonial, Fr. from matrimonium, Latin.] Suitable to marriage; pertaining to marriage; conubial; nuptial; hymeneal.
 If he relied upon that title, he could be but a king at curtesy, and have rather a matrimonial than a regal power, the right remaining in his queen. Bacon's Henry VII.
 So spake domestic Adam in his care,
 And matrimonial love. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
 Since I am turn'd the husband, you the wife;
 The matrimonial victory is mine, I will resign. Dryden.
MATRIMONIALLY. adv. [from matrimonial.] According to the manner or laws of marriage.
 He is so matrimonially wedded unto his church, that he cannot quit the same, even on the score of going unto a religious house. Ayliffe's Paragon.
MATRIMONY. n. f. [matrimonium, Lat.] Marriage; the nuptial state; the contract of man and wife; nuptials.
 If any know cause why this couple should not be joined in holy matrimony, they are to declare it. Common Prayer.
MA'TRIX. n. f. [Lat. matrice, Fr.] Womb; a place where any thing is generated or formed.
 If they be not lodged in a convenient matrix, they are not excited by the efficacy of the fun. Brown's Vulgar Err.
MA'TRON. n. f. [matrone, French; matrona, Latin.]
 1. An elderly lady.
 Come, civil night,
 Thou sober-suited matron, all in black. Shakespeare.
 Your wives, your daughters,
 Your matrons and your maids, could not fill up
 The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 She was in her early bloom, with a discretion very little inferior to the most experienced matrons. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 53.
 2. An old woman.
 A matron sage Supports with homely food his drooping age. Pope's Odyf.
MA'TRONAL. adj. [matronalis, Latin.] Suitable to a matron; constituting a matron.
 He had heard of the beauty and virtuous behaviour of the queen of Naples, the widow of Ferdinand the younger, being then of matronal years of seven and twenty. Bacon.
MA'TRONLY. adj. matron and like.] Elderly; ancient.
 The matronly wife plucked out all the brown hairs, and the younger the white. L'Estrange's Fables.
MATROSS. n. f.
Matrosses, in the train of artillery, are a sort of soldiers next in degree under the gunners, who assist about the guns in traversing, spunging, firing, and loading them: they carry firelocks, and march along with the store-waggons as a guard, and as assistants, in case a waggon should break. Bailey.
MA'TTER. n. f. [matiere, French; materia, Latin.]
 1. Body; substance extended.
 If then the foul another foul do make,
 Because her pow'r is kept within a bound,
 She must some former stuff or matter take,
 But in the foul there is no matter found. Davies.
 It seems probable to me, that God in the beginning formed matter in solid, maffy, hard, impenetrable, moveable particles, of such sizes and figures, and with such other propert-

MAT

ties, and in such proportion to space, as most conduced to the end for which he formed them; and that those primitive particles being solids are incomparably harder than any porous bodies compounded of them, even so very hard as never to wear or break in pieces, no ordinary power being able to divide what God himself made one in the first creation. Newt.
 Some have dimensions of length, breadth, and depth, and have also a power of resistance, or exclude every thing of the same kind from being in the same place: this is the proper character of matter or body. Watts's Logic.
 2. Materials; that of which any thing is composed.
 The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air here below. Bacon.
 3. Subject; thing treated.
 The subject or matter of laws in general is thus far forth constant, which matter is that for the ordering whereof laws were instituted. Hooker, b. i.
 I have words to speak in thy ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the matter. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 Son of God, Saviour of men! Thy name
 Shall be the copious matter of my song. Milt. Par. Lost.
 It is matter of the greatest astonishment to observe the common boldness of men. Decay of Piety.
 I shall turn
 Full fraught with joyful tidings of these works,
 New matter of his praise, and of our songs. Dryden.
 He grants the deluge to have come so very near the matter, that but very few escaped. Tilleyson.
 This is so certain in true philosophy, that it is matter of astonishment to me how it came to be doubted. Cheyne.
 Be thou the copious matter of my song. Phillips.
 4. The whole; the very thing supposed.
 5. Affair; business: in a familiar sense.
 To help the matter, the alchemists call in many vanities out of astrology. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Matters succeeded so well with him, that every-body was in admiration to see how mighty rich he was grown. L'Estr.
 Never was any thing gotten by sensuality and sloth in matter of profit or reputation. L'Estrange's Fables.
 A fawn was reasoning the matter with a stag, why he should run away from the dogs. L'Estrange's Fables.
 Some young female seems to have carried matters so far, that she is ripe for asking advice. Spectator.
 If chance herself should vary,
 Observe how matters would miscarry. Prior.
 6. Cause of disturbance.
 Where art thou? What's the matter with thee? Shak.
 What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,
 That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
 Make yourselves scabs. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 7. Subject of suit or complaint.
 Slender, I broke your head; what matter have you against me?
 —Marry, Sir, I have matter in my head against you. Shak.
 If the craftsmen have a matter against any man, the law is open; let them implead one another. Acts xix. 38.
 In armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet if tried by the goss, it would go on the other. Bacon.
 8. Import; consequence; importance; moment.
 If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor flew doth better. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 And please yourselves this day;
 No matter from what hands you have the play. Dryden.
 A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
 No matter which, so neither of them lye,
 From steepy Othrys' top to Pilus drove His herd. Dryden.
 Pleas'd or displeas'd, no matter now 'tis past;
 The first who dares be angry breaths his last. Granville.
 9. Thing; object; that which has some particular relation, or is subject to particular consideration.
 The king of Armenia had in his company three of the most famous men for matters of arms. Sidney, b. ii.
 Plato reprehended a young man for entering into a dissolute house; the young man said, Why for so small a matter? Plato replied, But custom is no small matter? Bacon.
 Many times the things deduced to judgment may be mumm and tum, when the reason and consequence thereof may trench to point of estate. I call matter of estate not only the parts of sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent. Bacon's Essays.
 It is a maxim in state, that all countries of new acquell, till they be settled, are rather matters of burden than of strength. Bacon's War with Spain.
 10. Question considered.
 Upon the whole matter, it is absurd to think that confidence can be kept in order without frequent examination. South.
 11. Space or quantity nearly computed.
 Away he goes to the market-town, a matter of seven miles off, to enquire if any had seen his ass. L'Estrange.
 I have thoughts to tarry a small matter in town, to learn somewhat of your lingo. Congreve's Way of the World.
 12. Purulent running; that which is formed by suppuration.
 In an inflamed tubercle in the great angle of the left eye, the matter being suppurated I opened it. Wifeman's Surgery.
 13. Upon the MATTER. A low phrase now out of use, importing, considering the whole; with respect to the main; nearly. In their superiors it quencheth jealousy, and layeth their competitors asleep; so that upon the matter, in a great wit deformity is an advantage to ruling. Bacon's Essays.
 Upon the matter, in these prayers I do the same thing I did before, save only that what before I spake without book I now read. Bishop Sanderson.
 The elder, having consumed his whole fortune, when forced to leave his title to his younger brother, left upon the matter nothing to support it. Clarendon.
 Waller, with Sir William Balfour, exceeded in horse, but were, upon the matter, equal in foot. Clarendon, b. viii.
 If on one side there are fair proofs, and no pretence of proof on the other, and that the difficulties are most pressing on that side which is destitute of proof, I desire to know, whether this be not upon the matter as satisfactory to a wife man as a demonstration. Tillotson's Sermons.
MA'TTER. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To be of importance; to import.
 It matters not, so they deny it all;
 And can but carry the lye constantly. Benj. Johnson's Catal.
 It matters not how they were called, for we know who they are. Locke.
 If Petrarch's muse did Laura's wit rehearse;
 And Cowley flatter'd dear Orinda's verse;
 She hopes from you—Pox take her hopes and fears,
 I plead her sex's claim: what matters hers? Prior.
 2. To generate matter by suppuration.
 Deadly wounds inward bleed, each flight fore mattered. Sidney, b. i.
 The herpes beneath mattered, and were dried up with common emollients. Wifeman's Surgery.
TO MA'TTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To regard; not to neglect: as, I matter not that calumny.
MATTEY. adj. [from matter.] Purulent; generating matter.
 The putrid vapours colliquate the phlegmatick humours of the body, which transcending to the lungs, causes their mattey cough. Harvey on Consumptions.
MA'TTOCK. n. f. [matruc, Saxon.]
 1. A kind of toothed instrument to pull up wood.
 Give me that mattock, and the wrenching iron. Shakespeare.
 2. A pickaxe.
 You must dig with mattock and with spade,
 And pierce the inmost centre of the earth. Shakespeare.
 The Turks laboured with mattocks and pick-axes to dig up the foundation of the wall. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
 To destroy mountains was more to be expected from earthquakes than corrosive waters, and condemneth the judgment of Xerxes, that wrought through mount Athos with mattocks. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.
MAT'TRESS. n. f. [matras, French; attras, Welsh.] A kind of quilt made to lie upon.
 Their matresses were made of feathers and straw, and sometimes of furs from Gaul. Arbutnot.
 Nor will the raging fever's fire abate,
 With golden canopies and beds of state;
 But the poor patient will as soon be found
 On the hard matress, or the mother ground. Dryden.
MAT'URATION. n. f. [from mature, Latin.]
 1. The act of ripening; the state of growing ripe.
 One of the causes why grains and fruits are more nourishing than leaves is, the length of time in which they grow to maturation. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 466.
 There is the maturation of fruits, the maturation of drinks, and the maturation of impostumes; as also other maturations of metals. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 312.
 We have no heat to spare in Summer; it is very well if it be sufficient for the maturation of fruits. Bentley's Sermon.
 2. [In physics.] Maturation, by some physical writers, is applied to the supuration of excrementitious or extravasated juices into matter, and differs from concoction or digestion, which is the raising to a greater perfection the alimentary and natural juices in their proper canals. Quincy.
MAT'URATIVE. adj. [from mature, Latin.]
 1. Ripening; conducive to ripeness.
 Between the tropics and the equator their second Summer is hotter, and more maturation of fruits than the former. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
 2. Conducive to the supuration of a sore.
 Butter is maturation, and is profitably mixed with anodynes and suppuratives. Wifeman's Surgery.
MAT'URE. adj. [maturus, Latin.]
 1. Ripe; perfected by time.

MAT

When once he was mature for man:
 In Britain where was he,
 That could stand up his parallel,
 Or rival object be? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 Their prince is a man of learning and virtue, mature in years and experience, who has seldom any vanity to gratify. Addison on Italy.
Mature the virgin was of Egypt's race,
 Grace shap'd her limbs, and beauty deck'd her face. Prior.
 How shall I meet, or how account the sage,
 Unskill'd in speech, nor yet mature of age. Pope's Odyf.
 2. Brought near to completion.
 This lies glowing, and is mature for the violent breaking out. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Here i' th' lands
 Three I'll rake up; and in the mature time,
 With this ungracious paper strike the fight
 Of the death-practis'd duke. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 3. Well-disposed; fit for execution; well-digested.
TO MA'TURE. v. a. [mature, Latin.] To ripen; to advance to ripeness.
 Pick an apple with a pin full of holes, not deep, and smear it a little with sack, to see if the virtual heat of the wine will not mature it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Love indulg'd my labours past,
Matures my present, and shall bound my last. Pope.
MAT'URELY. adv. [from mature.]
 1. Ripely; completely.
 2. With counsel well-digested.
 A prince ought maturely to consider, when he enters on a war, whether his coffers be full, and his revenues clear of debts. Swift.
 3. Early; soon.
 We are so far from repining at God, that he hath not extended the period of our lives to the longevity of the antediluvians; that we give him thanks for contracting the days of our trial, and receiving us more maturely into those everlasting habitations above. Bentley's Sermons.
MAT'URITY. n. f. [maturité, French; maturitas, Lat.] Ripe-ness; completion.
 It may not be unfit to call some of young years to train up for those weighty affairs, against the time of greater maturity. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
 Impatient nature had taught motion
 To start from time, and cheerfully to fly
 Before, and seize upon maturity. Cresshaw.
 Various mortifications must be undergone, many difficulties and obstructions conquered, before we can arrive at a just maturity in religion. Rogers's Sermons.
MA'UDLIN. adj. [Maudlin is the corrupt appellation of Magdalen, who being drawn by painters with swollen eyes, and disordered look, a drunken countenance, seems to have been so named from a ludicrous resemblance to the picture of Magdalen.] Drunk; fuddled.
 And the kind maudling crowd melts in her praise. Southern's Spartan Dame.
 And largely, what she wants in words, supplies
 With maudlin eloquence of trickling eyes. Roscommon.
MA'UDLIN. n. f. [ageratum, Latin.] A plant.
 The flowers of the maudlin are digested into loose umbels, but in other respects it is very like the costmary. The species are three. Miller.
MA'UGRE. adj. [malgré, French.] In spite of; notwithstanding. It is now out of use.
Maugre all the world, will I keep safe;
 Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome. Shakespeare.
Maugre thy strength, place, youth, and eminence;
 Thy valour, and thy heart; thou art a traitor. Shakespeare.
 I through the ample air in triumph high Shall lead hell captive; maugre hell! and show
 The pow'rs of darkness bound. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Maugre all which, 'twas to stand fast,
 As long as monarchy should last. Hudibras, p. i.
 He prophesied of the success of his gospel; which, after his death, immediately took root, and spread itself everywhere, maugre all opposition or persecution. Burnet.
MA'VIS. n. f. [mauvais, French.] A thrush. An old word.
 The world that cannot deem of worthy things,
 When I do praise her, say I do but flatter;
 So doth the cuckoo, when the mavis sings,
 Begins his wile's note apace to clear. Spenser's Sonnet.
 In birds, kites have a resemblance with hawks, and black-birds with thrushes and mavises. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
TO MAUL. v. a. [from malleus, Latin.] To beat; to bruise;
 Will he who saw the soldier's mutton fist,
 And saw thee maul'd, appear within the list,
 To witness truth? Dryden's Juvenal.
 Once ev'ry week poor Hannibal is maul'd,
 The theme is given, and strait the council's call'd,
 Whether he should to Rome directly go. Dryden's Juvenal.

 I had

MAY

- I had some repute for prose;
And, till they drove me out of date,
Could maul a minister of state.
But fate with butchers plac'd thy priestly stall,
Meek modern faith to murder, hack and maul.
- MAUL*. n. f. [malleus, Latin.] A heavy hammer.
A man that beareth false witness is a maul, a sword, and sharp arrow.
- MAUND*. n. f. [manb, Saxon; mande, Fr.] A hand-basket.
To MAUNDER. v. n. [maudire, French.] To grumble; to murmur.
- He made me many visits, maundring as if I had done him a discourtesy in leaving such an opening. Wife's Surgery.
- MAUNDERER*. n. f. [from maunder.] A murmurer; a grumbler.
- MAUNDY-THURSDAY*. n. f. [derived by Spelman from mande, a hand-basket, in which the king was accustomed to give alms to the poor.] The Thursday before Good-friday.
- MAUSOLEUM*. n. f. [Latin; mausoleus, French.] A name which was first given to a stately monument erected by his queen Artimisia to her husband Mausolus, king of Caria. A pompous funeral monument.
- MAW*. n. f. [maga, Saxon; maeghe, Dutch.]
- The stomach of animals, and of human beings, in contempt.
So oft in feasts with costly changes clad,
To crammed maus a sprat new stomach brings.
We have heats of dungs, and of bellies and maus of living creatures, and of their bloods.
  - Though plenteous, all too little seems,
To stuff this mau, this vast unhidebound corps.
The serpent, who his mau obscene had fill'd,
The branches in his curl'd embraces held.
- MAW-WORM*. n. f. [mau and worm.]
Ordinary gut-worms loosen, and slide off from, the intern tunick of the guts, and frequently creep into the stomach for nutriment, being attracted thither by the sweet chyle; whence they are called stomach or mau-worms.
- MA'XILLAR*. n. f. [maxillaris, Latin.] Belonging to the jaw-bone.
- The greatest quantity of hard substance continued is towards the head; there is the skull, the teeth, and the maxillary bones.
- MA'XIM*. n. f. [maxime, French; maximum, Lat.] An axiom; a general principle; a leading truth.
- This maxim out of love I teach.
- It is a maxim in state, that all countries of new conquest, till settled, are rather matters of burden than of strength.
- Yet, as in duty bound, they serve him on;
Nor care, nor wealth, nor life itself regard,
For 'tis their maxim, love is love's reward.
- That the temper, the sentiments, the morality of men, is influenced by the example and disposition of those they converse with, is a reflexion which has long since passed into proverbs, and been ranked among the standing maxims of human wisdom.
- MAY*, auxiliary verb, preterite might. [magan, Saxon; mighen, Dutch.]
- To be at liberty; to be permitted; to be allowed; as, you may do for me [per me licet] all you can.
He that is sent out to travel with the thoughts of a man, designing to improve himself, may get into the conversation of persons of condition.
  - To be possible; with the words may be.
To be the workmen what they may be, let us speak of the work.
  - To be by chance.
It may be, I shall otherwise bethink me.
How old may Phyllis be, you ask,
Whole beauty thus all hearts engages?
To answer is no easy task,
For she has really two ages.

MAY

- To have power.
This also tendeth to no more but what the king may do: for what he may do is of two kinds; what he may do as just, and what he may do as possible.
Make the most of life you may.
A word expressing desire.
May you live happily and long for the service of your country.
  - Perhaps.
May-be, that better reason will assuage
The rash revenger's heart, words well dispos'd
Have secret pow'r to appease inflamed rage.
May-be, the am'rous count solicits her
In the unlawful purpose.
'Tis nothing yet, yet all thou hast to give;
Then add those may-be years thou hast to live.
What they offer is bare may-be and shift, and scarce ever amounts to a tolerable reason.
- MAY*. n. f. [Maius, Latin.] The fifth month of the year; the confine of Spring and Summer; the early or gay part of life.
- On a day, alack the day!
Love, whose month is ever May,
Spied a blossom passing fair,
Playing in the wanton air.
Maidens are May when they are maids,
But the sky changes when they are wives.
- Is in the very May-morn of his youth, Ripe for exploits.
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare;
Despight his nice fence, and his active practice,
His May of youth, and bloom of lufthood.
May must be drawn with a sweet and amiable countenance, clad in a robe of white and green, embroidered with daisies, hawthorns, and blue-bottles.
Hail! bounteous May, that dost inspire
Mirth and youth, and warm desire;
Woods and groves are of thy dressing,
Hill and dale doth boast thy blessing.
- To MAY. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather flowers on May morning.
When merry May first early calls the morn,
With merry maids a *may*ing they do go.
Cupid with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a *may*ing.
- MAY-BUG*. n. f. [May and bug.] A chaffer.
- MAY-DAY*. n. f. [May and day.] The first of May.
'Tis as much impossible,
Unless we sweep them from the door with cannons,
To scatter 'em, as 'tis to make 'em sleep
On May-day morning.
- MAY-FLOWER*. n. f. [May and flower.] A plant.
The plague, they report, hath a scent of the May-flower.
- MAY-FLY*. n. f. [May and fly.] An insect.
He loves the May-fly, which is bred of the cod-worm or caddis.
- MAY-GAME*. n. f. [May and game.] Diversion; sport; such as are used on the first of May.
The king this while, though he seem'd to account of the designs of Perkin but as a May-game, yet had given order for the watching of beacons upon the coasts.
- Like early lovers, whose unpractis'd hearts
Were long the May-game of malicious arts,
When once they find their jealousies were vain,
With double heat renew their fires again.
- MAY-LILY*. n. f. The same with lily of the valley.
- MAY-POLE*. n. f. [May and pole.] Pole to be danced round in May.
Amid the area wide she took her stand,
Where the tall May-pole once o'er-look'd the strand.
- MAY-WEED*. n. f. [May and weed.] A species of chamomile, called also flinking chamomile, which grows wild.
The May-weed doth burne, and the thistle doth treat,
The fitches pul downward both rie and the wheat.
- MAYOR*. n. f. [major, Lat.] The chief magistrate of a corporation, who, in London and York, is called Lord Mayor.
My Lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you.
- When the king once heard it; out of anger,
He sent command to the lord mayor straight
To stop the rumour.
- The mayor of this town looked up the gates of the city.
Would'st thou not rather chuse a small renown,
To be the mayor of some poor, paltry town.
- MAYORALTY*. n. f. [from mayor.] The office of a mayor.
It is incorporated with a mayoralty, and nameth burgesses to the parliament.
- There was a sharp prosecution against Sir William Capel, for misgovernment in his mayoralty.
MAYORESS. n. f. [from mayor.] The wife of the mayor.

MEA

- MA'ZARD*. n. f. [maichaire, French.] A jaw. Hammer.
Now my lady Worm's chapels, and knockt about the mazard with a sexton's spade.
- Where thou might'st stickle without hazard
Of outrage to thy hide and mazard.
- MAZE*. n. f. [missen, Dutch, to mistake; maze, a whirlpool, Skimmer.]
1. A labyrinth; a place of perplexity and winding passages.
He, like a copious river, pour'd his song
O'er all the mazes of enchanted ground.
2. Confusion of thought; uncertainty; perplexity.
He left in himself nothing but a maze of longing, and a dungeon of sorrow.
While they study how to bring to pass that religion may seem but a matter made, they lose themselves in the very maze of their own discourses, as if reason did even purposely forsake them, who of purpose forsake God, the author thereof.
- I have thrust myself into this maze, Haply to wive and thrive as best I may.
- To MAZE. v. a. [from the noun.] To bewilder; to confuse.
Much was I maz'd to see this monster kind,
In hundred forms to change his fearful hue.
- MA'ZY*. adj. [from maze.] Perplexed; confused.
The Lapithae to chariots add the state
Of bits and bridles, taught the steed to bound,
To run the ring, and trace the mazy round.
- MA'ZER*. n. f. [maiser, Dutch, a knot of maple.] A maple cup.
Then, lo! Perigot, the pledge which I plight,
A mazer ywrought of the maple ware,
Wherein is enchafted many a fair sight
Of bears and tigers that make fierce war.
Virgil observes, like Theocritus, a just decorum, both of the subject and the persons, as particularly in the third pastoral, where one of his shepherds describes a bowl, or mazer, curiously carved.
- M. D.* Medicina doctor, doctor of physick.
- Me*,
1. The oblique case of I.
Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread an interdicted shore.
For me the fates severely kind, ordain
A cool suspense.
2. Me is sometimes a kind of ludicrous expletive.
He thrusts me himself into the company of three or four gentlemanlike dogs, under the duke's table.
He presently, as greatness knows itself,
Steps me a little higher than his vow
Made to my father, while his blood was poor.
I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs.
- I followed me close, came in foot and hand, and, with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid.
3. It is sometimes used ungrammatically for I; as, methinks.
Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.
- ME'ACOCK*. n. f. [mes coq, Skimmer.] An uxorious or effeminate man.
- ME'ACOCK*. adj. Tame; timorous; cowardly.
'Tis a world to see,
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacock wretch can make the curfeste shrew.
- MEAD*. n. f. [maeo, Saxon; maethe, Dutch; meth, German; bydromeli, Lat.] A kind of drink made of water and honey.
Though not so solutive a drink as mead, yet it will be more grateful to the stomach.
- He sneers his over-burden'd sheep;
Or mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars.
- MEAD*. n. f. [maeo, Sax.] Ground somewhat watery, not plowed, but covered with grass and flowers.
Where all thing in common do rest,
Come feed with the pasture and mead,
Yet what doth it stand you in need?
A hand select from forage drives
A herd of bees, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground.
Paints her, 'tis true, with the same hand which spreads,
Like glorious colours, through the flow'ry meads,
When lavish nature with her best attire
Cloaths the gay spring, the season of desire.
Yet ere to-morrow's sun shall shew his head,
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread,
For crowns and chaplets to adorn thy bed.
- MEADOW-SAFFRON*. n. f. [calchicum, Lat.] A plant.
The meadow-saffron hath a flower consisting of one leaf, shaped like a lily, rising in form of a small tube, and is gradually widened into six segments: it has likewise a solid, bulbous root, covered with a membranous skin.
- MEADOW-SWEET*. n. f. [ulmaria, Lat.] A plant.

MEA

- The meadow-sweet hath a flower composed of several leaves placed in a circular order, and expanding in form of a rose, out of whose empaiement rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit composed of many little membranous crooked huffs gathered into an head, each of which generally contains one seed.
- ME'AGER*. adj. [maigre, French; macer, Latin.]
- Lean; wanting flesh; starven.
Thou art lo lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gate.
Now will the canker sorrow eat my bud,
And chafe the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost,
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit.
Meagre were his looks,
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones.
Whatsoever their neighbour gets, they lose, and the very bread that one eats makes t'other meagre.
The reeking entrails
He to his meagre maffiffs made a prey.
Fierce famine with her meagre face,
And fevers of the fiery race,
In swarms th' offending wretch furrow,
All brooding on the blasted ground:
And limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date.
  - Poor; hungry.
Canaan's happy land, when worn with toil,
Requir'd a Sabbath year to mend the meagre soil.
To ME'AGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To make lean.
It cannot be, that I should be so shamefully betrayed, and as a man meagered with long watching and painful labour, laid himself down to sleep.
- ME'AGERNESS*. n. f. [from meager.]
- Leanness; want of flesh.
  - Scantness; bareness.
Poynings, the better to make compensation of the meagerness of his service in the wars by acts of peace, called a parliament.
- MEAK*. n. f. A hook with a long handle.
A meake for the pease, and to swing up the brake.
- MEAL*. n. f. [male, Saxon, repast or portion.]
- The act of eating at a certain time.
Boaz said unto her at meal time, Come eat, and dip thy morsel.
The quantity of aliment necessary to keep the animal in a due state of vigour, ought to be divided into meals at proper intervals.
  - A repast.
What strange fish
Hath made his meal on thee?
Give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils.
They made m' a miser's feast of happiness,
And cou'd not furnish out another meal.
3. A part; a fragment.
That yearly rent is still paid into the hanaper, even as the former casualty itself was wont to be, in parcel meals brought in, and answered there.
4. [Maieye, Saxon; meal, Dutch; mahlen, to grind, German.] The flower or edible part of corn.
In the bolting and sifting of near fourteen years of such power and favour, all that came out could not be expected to be pure and fine meal, but must have a mixture of padar and bran in this lower age of human fragility.
An old weazel conveys himself into a meal-tub for the mice to come to her, since she could not go to them.
- To MEAL. v. a. [meler, French.] To sprinkle; to mingle.
Were he meal'd
With that which he corrects, then were he tyrannous.
- ME'ALMAN*. n. f. [meal and man.] One that deals in meal.
- ME'ALY*. adj. [from meal.]
- Having the taste or soft insipidity of meal; having the qualities of meal.
The meal parts of plants dissolved in water make too viscid an aliment.
  - Besprinkled, as with meal.
With four wings, as all farinaceous and meal-winged animals, as butterflies and moths.
Like a gay insect, in his summer shine,
The sop light fluttering spreads his meal wings.
- MEALY-MOUTHED*. adj. [imagined by Skinner to be corrupted from mild-mouthed or mellow-mouthed: but perhaps from the fore mouths of animals, that, when they are unable to communicate their grain, must be fed with meal.] Soft mouthed; unable to speak freely.
She was a fool to be meal-mouthed where nature speaks so plain.
- MEALY-MOUTHEDNESS*. n. f. [from the adjective.] Bathfulness; restraint of speech.

MEAN. adj. [incane, Saxon.]

1. Wanting dignity; of low rank or birth.
She was stricken with most obstinate love to a young man but of mean parentage, in her father's court, named Antiphus; so mean, as that he was but the son of her nurse, and by that means, without other desert, became known of her. Sidney, b. ii.

This fairest maid of fairer mind;
By fortune mean, in nature born a queen. Sidney.
Let pale-fac'd fear keep with the mean-born man,
And find no harbour in a royal heart. Shaksp. Henry VI.
True hope is swift, and flies with swallow wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures, kings. Shak.

2. Low-minded; base; ungenerous; spiritless.
The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor,
More than I know the sound of Marcia's tongue
From every meaner man. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Can you imagine I so mean could prove,
To save my life by changing of my love? Dryden.
We fast not to please men, nor to promote any mean, worldly interest. Smalridge's Sermons.

3. Contemptible; despicable.
The Roman legions, and great Cæsar found
Our fathers no mean foes. Philips.
I have sacrific'd much of my own self-love, in preventing not only many mean things from seeing the light, but many which I thought tolerable. Pope.

4. Low in the degree of any property; low in worth; low in power.
Some things are good, yet in so mean a degree of goodness, that many are only not disproved nor disallowed of God for them. Hooker, b. ii.
The lands he not holden of her majesty in chief, but by a mean tenure in fockage, or by knight's service at the most.
Bacon's Office of Alienation.
By this extortion he suddenly grew from a mean to a mighty estate, inasmuch that his ancient inheritance being not one thousand marks yearly, he became able to dispense ten thousand pounds. Davies on Ireland.

5. [Moyen, French.] Middle; moderate; without excess.
To peaceful Rome new laws ordain;
Call'd from his mean abode a sceptre to sustain. Dryden.
He saw this gentleman, one of the properest and best-graced men that ever I saw, being of middle age and a mean figure. Sidney, b. ii.

6. Intervening; intermediate.
Now read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton on Education.

7. In the mean while the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. 1 Kings xviii. 45.
There is French wheat, which is bearded, and requireth the best soil, recompensing the same with a profitable plenty; and not wheat, so termed because it is unbearded, is contented with a meaner earth, and contenting with a suitable gain.
Carriv on Cornwall.

8. By all MEANS. Without doubt; without hesitation; without fail.
By no MEANS. Not in any degree; not at all.
The wine on this side of the lake is by no means so good as that on the other. Addison on Italy.

9. MEANS are likewise used for revenue; fortune; probably from desinenes.
Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.
Shaksp. Henry IV.
Rust sword; cool bluffs; and, parolles, live
Safe in flame! being fool'd, by foolry thrive;
There's place and means for every man alive. Shaksp.
For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil;
And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,
Give you advancement. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Effix did not build or adorn any house; the queen perchance spending his time, and himself his means. Watson.

- MEAN-TIME. In the intervening time: sometimes an adverbial mode of speech.
The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring
New heav'n and earth. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
Mean-time the rapid heav'n's rowl'd down the light,
And on the shaded ocean rush'd the night. Dryden.
Mean-time her warlike brother on the seas,
His waving streamers to the winds displays. Dryden.
Mean time, in shades of night Æneas lies;
Care seiz'd his soul, and sleep forsook his eyes. Dryden.
Mean-while I'll draw up my Numidian troops,
And, as I see occasion, favour thee. Addison's Cato.
The Roman legions were all recalled to help their country against the Goths; mean-time the Britons, left to shift for themselves, and daily harraßed by cruel inroads from the Picts, were forced to call in the Saxons for their defence. Swift.

- MEAN-WHILE. I'll draw up my Numidian troops,
And, as I see occasion, favour thee. Addison's Cato.

He tempering goodly well
Their contrary dislikes with loved means,
Did place them all in order, and compell
To keep themselves within their fundry reins,
Together link'd with adamant chains. Spenser.
I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free. Shaksp. Othello.
No place will please me so, no mean of death,
As here by Cæsar and by you cut off. Shaksp.
Nature is made better by no mean,
But nature makes that mean; so over that art
Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art
That nature makes. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
Your doctrine leads them to look on this end as essential, and on the means as indifferent. Lord Bolingbroke to Swift.

5. It is often used in the plural, and by some not very grammatically with an adjective singular.
The more base art thou,
To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slight conditions. Shaksp.
By this means he had them the more at vantage, being tired and harraßed with a long march. Bacon's Henry III.
Because he wanted means to perform any great action, he made means to return the sooner. Davies on Ireland.

Strong was their plot,
Their parties great, means good, the season fit,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not. Daniel.
By this means not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation will be bred up not perverted by any other hopes. Sprar's Sermons.
Who is there that hath the leisure and meant to collect all the proofs concerning most of the opinions he has, so as safely to conclude that he hath a clear and full view. Locke.
A good character, when established, should not be rested in as an end, but only employed as a means of doing still farther good. Atterbury's Sermons.
It renders us careless of approving ourselves to God by religious duties, and, by that means, securing the continuance of his goodness. Atterbury's Sermons.

6. By all MEANS. Without doubt; without hesitation; without fail.
By no MEANS. Not in any degree; not at all.
The wine on this side of the lake is by no means so good as
that on the other. Addison on Italy.

2. To intend; to hint covertly; to understand.
I more easily forfake an argument on which I could delight to dwell; I mean your judgment in your choice of friends.
Dryden's Avengezebe.

Whatever was meant by them, it could not be that Cain, as elder, had a natural dominion over Abel. Locke.
MEAN'DER. n. f. [Meander is a river in Phrygia remarkable for its winding course.] Maze; labyrinth; flexuous passage; serpentine winding; winding course.

Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, and integrals of the body. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
'Tis well, that while mankind
Through fate's perverse meander errs,
He can imagin'd pleasures find,
To combat against real cares. Prior.

While ling'ring rivers in meanders glide,
They scatter verdant life on either side;
The vallies smile, and with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births confess the floods embrace. Blackmore.
Law is a bottomless pit: John Bull was flattered by the lawyers, that his suit would not last above a year; yet ten long years did Hocus steer his cause through all the meanders of the law, and all the courts. Arbutnot.

MEANDROUS. adj. [from meander.] Winding; flexuous.
MEANING. n. f. [from mean.]
1. Purpose; intention.
I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning toward
you. Shaksp. King Lear.

2. Habitual intention.
Some whole meaning hath at first been fair,
Grow knaves by use, and rebels by despair. Rafcomen.
3. The sense; the thing understood.

The meaning, not the name, I call: for thou,
Not of the Muses nine. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
These lost the sense their learning to display,
And those explain'd the meaning quite away. Pope.
No word more frequently in the mouths of men than conscience; and the meaning of it is, in some measure, understood: however, it is a word extremely abused by many, who apply other meanings to it which God Almighty never intended. Swift's Miscel.

MEANLY. adv. [from mean.]
1. Moderately; not in a great degree.
Dr. Metcalfe, master of St. John's College, a man meanly learned himself, but not meanly affectioned to set forward learning in others. Afham's Schoolmaster.

In the reign of Domitian, poetry was but meanly cultivated, but painting eminently flourished. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. Without dignity; poorly.
It was the winter wild,
While the heav'n-born child,
All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies. Milton.
The Persian state will not endure a king
So meanly born. Denham's Sophy.

3. Without greatness of mind; ungenerously.
Would you meanly thus rely On power, you know I must obey. Prior.
4. Without respect.
Our kindred, and our very names, seem to have something desirable in them; we cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts's Logick.

MEANNESS. n. f. [from mean.]
1. Want of excellence.
The minister's greatness or meanness of knowledge to do other things, standeth in this place as a stranger, with whom our form of common prayer hath nothing to do. Hooker.
This figure is of a later date by the meanness of the workmanship. Addison on Italy.

2. Want of dignity; low rank; poverty.
No other nymphs have title to mens hearts,
But as their meanness larger hopes imparts. Waller.
Poverty, and meanness of condition, expose the wisest to scorn, it being natural for men to place their esteem rather upon things great than good. South's Sermons.

3. Lowness of mind.
The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowness of condition. South's Sermons.

4. Sordidness; nigardiness.
MEANLY, perf. and part. pass. of to mean.
By Silvia if thy charming self be meant;
If friendship be thy virgin vows extent:
O! let me in Aminta's praises join;
Her's my esteem shall be, my passion thine. Prior.

MEASURE. n. f. [probably a corruption of measure: as, a measure of herrings is five hundred.]
MEASLES. n. f. [from melle, Latin.] Measles are a critical eruption in a fever, well known in the common practice, and bear this name, which is a diminutive of morbus, because it hath been accounted a species of such malignant and peffilential fevers, to which comparatively this is so in a much inferior degree. Quincy.

My lungs
Coin words till their decay, against those measles,
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
The very way to catch them. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Before the plague of London, inflammations of the lungs were rife and mortal, as likewise the measles. Arbutnot.

2. A disease of swine.
One, when he had an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it, and proclaimed the virtues of it; nothing ever thrived on it, no owner of it ever died in his bed; the swine died of the measles, and the sheep of the rot. B. Johnson's Discovery.

3. A disease of trees.
Fruit-bearers are often infected with the measles, by being scorched with the sun. Mortimer's Husbandry.
MEASLED. adj. [from measles.] Infected with the measles.
Thou vermin wretched,
As e'er in measles pork was hatched;
Thou tail of worship, that dost grow
On rump of justice as of cow. Hudibras, p. i.

MEASLY. adj. [from measles.] Scabbed with the measles.
Last trotted forth the gentle swine,
To ease her against the stump,
And dimally was heard to whine,
All as the scrubb'd her measly rump. Swift.

MEASURABLE. adj.
1. Such as may be measured; such as may admit of computation.
God's eternal duration is permanent and indivisible, not measurable by time and motion, nor to be computed by number of successive moments. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Moderate; in small quantity.
MEASURABLENESS. n. f. [from measurable.] Quality of admitting to be measured.
MEASURABLY. adv. [from measurable.] Moderately.
Wine measurably drunk, and in season, bringeth gladness
of the heart. Ecclus. xxxi. 28.
MEASURE. n. f. [measure, French; mensura, Latin.]
1. That by which any thing is measured.
A taylor's news,
Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble halfe
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet,
Told of many a thousand. Shaksp. King John.
A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity,
serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. Holder.
All magnitudes are capable of being measured; but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measures. Holder on Time.
When Moses speaks of measures, for example, of an ephah, he presumes they knew what measure he meant: that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetic and geometry, there is no reason to doubt. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.
God's goodness is the measure of his providence. Mare.
I expect, from those that judge by first sight and rash measures, to be thought fond or insolent. Glanville's Scep.
3. Proportion; quantity settled.
Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereunto; and to proportion as well excesses as defects are opposite. Hooker.
I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment; yet it is certain there is such a law. Locke.

4. A stated quantity; as, a measure of wine.
Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure
The table round. Shaksp. Macbeth.
5. Sufficient quantity.
I'll never pause again,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shaksp.
Good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short,
And ev'ry measure fail me. Shaksp. King Lear.
We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 2 Cor. x. 13.
If else thou seek'st
Ought, not surpassing human measure, say. Milton.
Our religion sets before us not the example of a stupid fool, who had, by obstinate principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves. Tillotson's Sermons.

7. Degree.
I have laid down, in some measure, the description of the old world. Abbot's Description of the World.
There is a great measure of discretion to be used in the performance of confession, so that you neither omit it when your

Wine measurably drunk, and in season, bringeth gladness
of the heart. Ecclus. xxxi. 28.
MEASURE. n. f. [measure, French; mensura, Latin.]
1. That by which any thing is measured.
A taylor's news,
Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble halfe
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet,
Told of many a thousand. Shaksp. King John.
A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity,
serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. Holder.
All magnitudes are capable of being measured; but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measures. Holder on Time.
When Moses speaks of measures, for example, of an ephah,
he presumes they knew what measure he meant: that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetic and geometry, there is no reason to doubt. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.
God's goodness is the measure of his providence. Mare.
I expect, from those that judge by first sight and rash measures, to be thought fond or insolent. Glanville's Scep.
3. Proportion; quantity settled.
Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereunto; and to proportion as well excesses as defects are opposite. Hooker.
I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment; yet it is certain there is such a law. Locke.

4. A stated quantity; as, a measure of wine.
Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure
The table round. Shaksp. Macbeth.
5. Sufficient quantity.
I'll never pause again,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shaksp.
Good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short,
And ev'ry measure fail me. Shaksp. King Lear.
We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 2 Cor. x. 13.
If else thou seek'st
Ought, not surpassing human measure, say. Milton.
Our religion sets before us not the example of a stupid fool, who had, by obstinate principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves. Tillotson's Sermons.

7. Degree.
I have laid down, in some measure, the description of the old world. Abbot's Description of the World.
There is a great measure of discretion to be used in the per-
own

MEASURABLE. adj.
1. Such as may be measured; such as may admit of computation.
God's eternal duration is permanent and indivisible, not measurable by time and motion, nor to be computed by number of successive moments. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Moderate; in small quantity.
MEASURABLENESS. n. f. [from measurable.] Quality of admitting to be measured.
MEASURABLY. adv. [from measurable.] Moderately.
Wine measurably drunk, and in season, bringeth gladness
of the heart. Ecclus. xxxi. 28.

MEA

- own heart may tell you that there is something amiss, nor over-scrupulously pursue it when you are not conscious to yourself of notable failings. Taylor's Guide to a Penitent.
- The rains were but preparatory in some measure, and the violence and conflagration of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
8. Proportionate time; musical time.
- Amaryllis breathes thy secret pains,
And thy fond heart beats measure to thy strains. Prior.
9. Motion harmonically regulated.
- My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore no dancing, girl, some other sport. Shakespeare.
- As when the stars in their ethereal race,
At length have roll'd around the liquid space,
From the same point of heav'n their course advance,
And move in measures of their former dance. Dryden.
10. A stately dance. This sense is, I believe, obsolete.
- Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hafty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly, modest as a measure, full of state and anchentury. Shakespeare.
- Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures. Shakespeare.
11. Moderation; not excess.
- O love, be moderate, allay thy ecstacy;
In measure rein thy joy, scant this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For fear I surfeit. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
- Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure. Isa. vi. 14.
12. Limit; boundary. In the same sense is
- Τρεῖς ἴστω δακτύλους τριῶντας δύο, μέτρον ἱσταν
Ἡμεῖς τὸν διπλὸν μέτρον αὐτῶν.
Ἀρχαῖα τὸ ποιεῖν.
- Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days what it is, that I may know how frail I am. Psal.
13. Any thing adjusted.
- He only lived according to nature, the other by ill customs, and measures taken by other mens eyes and tongues. Taylor's holy living.
- Christ reveals to us the measures according to which God will proceed in dispensing his rewards. Snalbridge's Sermons.
14. Syllables metrically numbered; metre.
- I addressed them to a lady, and affected the softness of expression, and the smoothness of measure, rather than the height of thought. Dryden.
- The numbers themselves, though of the heroick measure, should be the smoothest imaginable. Pope.
15. Tune; proportionate notes.
- The joyous nymphs and light-foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet,
And to the measures of their melodies
Did learn to move their nimble-shifting feet. Spenser.
16. Mean of action; mean to an end.
- His majesty found what wrong measures he had taken in the conferring that trust, and lamented his error. Clarendon.
17. To have hard measure; to be hardly dealt by.
- TO MEASURE. v. a. [mesurer, French; mensura, Latin.]
1. To compute the quantity of any thing by some settled rule.

MED

MEDIC. n. f. [medica, Latin.] A plant.
The medic hath a papilionaceous or butterfly flower, out of which empalement rises the pointal, which afterward becomes an intorted pod, sometimes like a ram's horn, in which are lodged kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.
MEDICAL. adj. [medicus, Latin.] Physical; relating to the art of healing; medicinal.
In this work attempts will exceed performances, it being composed by snatches of time, as medical vacation would permit. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
MEDICALLY. adv. [from medical.] Physically; medicinally.
That which promoted this consideration, and medically advanced the fame, was the doctrine of Hippocrates. Brown.
MEDICAMENT. n. f. [medicamentum, Fr. medicamentum, Latin.] Any thing used in healing; generally topical applications.
Admonitions, fraternal or paternal, then more publick reprehensions; and, upon the unsuccessfulness of these milder medicaments, the use of that stronger physick, the censure. Hammond's Fundamentals.
A cruel wound was cured by scalding medicaments, after it was putrified; and the violent swelling and bruise of another was taken away by scalding it with milk. Temple's Miscel.
MEDICAMENTAL. adj. [medicamentum, Fr. medicamentum, Latin.] Relating to medicine, internal or topical.
MEDICAMENTALLY. n. f. [from medicamentum.] After the manner of medicine; with the power of medicine.
The substance of gold is invincible by the powerfulllest action of natural heat; and that not only alimentially in a substantial mutation, but also medicamentally in any corporeal conversion. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
TO MEDICATE. v. a. [medico, Latin.] To tincture or impregnate with any thing medicinal.
The fumes, steams, and fenchens of London, do so medicate and impregnate the air about it, that it becomes capable of little more. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
To this may be ascribed the great effects of medicated waters. Arbutnot on Aliments.
She secured the whiteness of my hand by medicated gloves. Rambler.
MEDICATION. n. f. [from medicate.]
1. The act of tincturing or impregnating with medicinal ingredients.
The watering of the plant with an infusion of the medicine may have more force than the rest, because the medication is oft renewed. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. The use of physick.
He advieth to observe the times of the equinoxes and solstices, and to declare medication ten days before and after. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
MEDICINABLE. adj. [medicinalis, Latin.] Having the power of physick.
Old oil is more clear and hot in medicinal use. Bacon.
Accept a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which gives any wine infused therein for four and twenty hours the taste and operation of the Spaw water, and is very medicinal for the cure of the spleen. Watson.
The jaw-bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are medicinal. Walton's Angler.
MEDICINAL. adj. [medicinalis, Latin:] this word is now commonly pronounced medicinal, with the accent on the second syllable; but more properly, and more agreeably to the best authorities, medicinal.
1. Having the power of healing; having physical virtue.
Come with words as medicinal as true,
Honest as either; to purge him of that humour
That presses him from sleep. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Thoughts my tormentors arm'd with deadly stings,
Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts;
Exasperate, exulcerate and raise
Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb Nor medicinal liquor can assuage. Milton's Agonistes.
The second causes took the swift command,
The medicinal head, the ready hand;
All but eternal doom was conquer'd by their art. Dryden.
2. Belonging to physick.
Learn'd he was in medicinal lore,
For by his side a pouch he wore,
Replete with strange hermetick powder,
That wounds nine miles point-blank with folder. Butler.
Such are called medicinal-days by some writers, wherein no crisis or change is expected, so as to forbid the use of medicines: but it is most properly used for those days wherein purging, or any other evacuation, is more conveniently complied with. Quincy.
Medicinal-hours are those wherein it is supposed that medicines may be taken, commonly reckoned in the morning fasting, about an hour before dinner, about four hours after dinner, and going to bed; but times are to be governed by the symptoms and aggravation of the distemper. Quincy.
MEDICINALLY. adv. [from medicinal.] Physically.
The witnesses that leech-like liv'd on blood,
Sucking for them were medicinally good. Dryden.
MEDICINE. n. f. [medicina, Fr. medicina, Latin.] It is generally pronounced as if only of two syllables, med. cin. Physick; any remedy administered by a physician.
O, my dear father! resaturation, hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss Repair those violent harms. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Let's make us medicines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
A merry heart doth good like a medicine; but a broken spirit dieth the bones. Prov. xvii. 22.
I wish to die, yet dare not death endure;
To cure this deadly grief. Dryden.
TO MEDICINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To operate as physick. Not used.
Not all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever medicate thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou owedst yesterday. Shakespeare.
MEDICITY. n. f. [medicitia, Fr. medicitas, Latin.] Middle state; participation of two extremes; half.
They contained no fishy composure, but were made up of man and bird; the human medicity variously placed not only above but below. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
MEDICRITY. n. f. [medicritas, French; medicritas, Latin.] 1. Small degree; middle rate; middle state.
Men of age seldom drive business home to the full period, but content themselves with a medicrity of success. Bacon.
There appeared a sudden and marvellous conversion in the duke's case, from the most exalted to the most depressed, as if his expedition had been capable of no medicrity. Watson.
He likens the medicrity of wit to one of a mean fortune, who manages his store with great parsimony; but who, with fear of running into profusion, never arrives to the magnificence of living. Dryden's State of Innocence.
Getting and improving our knowledge in substances only by experience and history, is all that the weakness of our faculties in this state of medicrity, while we are in this world, can attain to. Locke.
2. Moderation; temperance. Obsolete.
Least appetite, in the use of food, should lead us beyond that which is meet, we owe, in this case, obedience to that law of reason which teacheth medicrity in meats and drinks. Hooker, b. i.
When they urge us to extreme opposition against the church of Rome, do they mean we should be drawn unto it only for a time, and afterwards return to a medicrity. Hooker.
TO MEDITATE. v. a. [meditare, French; meditare, Latin.] To plan; to scheme; to contrive.
Blessed is the man that doth meditate good things in wisdom, and that reasoneth of holy things by his understanding. Ecclesi. xiv. 20.
Some affirmed that I meditated a war; God knows, I did not then think of war.
Like a lion that unheeded lay,
Dissembling sleep, and watchful to betray,
With inward rage he meditates his prey. Dryden.
Before the memory of the flood was lost, men meditated the setting up a false religion at Babel. Forster.
2. To think on; to revolve in the mind.
Then among
There set a man of ripe and perfect age,
Who did them meditate all his life long. Fairy Queen.
TO MEDITATE. v. n. To think; to muse; to contemplate; to dwell on with intense thought. It is commonly used of pious contemplation.
His delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate night and day. Psal. i. 2.
I will meditate also of all thy work, and talk of all thy doings. Psal. lxxvii. 12.
Meditate till you make some act of piety upon the occasion of what you meditate; either get some new arguments against a sin, or some new encouragements to virtue. Taylor.
To worship God, to study his will, to meditate upon him, and to love him; all these being great pleasure and peace. Tillyson's Sermons.
MEDITATION. n. f. [meditation, Fr. meditation, Latin.] 1. Deep thought; close attention; contrivance; contemplation.
I left the meditations wherein I was, and spake to her in anger.
Some thought and meditation are necessary; and a man may possibly be so stupid as not to have God in all his thoughts, or to say in his heart, there is none. Bentley.
2. Thought employed upon sacred objects.
His name was heavenly contemplation;
Of God and goodness was his meditation. Fairy Queen, b. i.
'Tis most true,
That musing meditation most affects
The pensive secrecy of desert cell.
Thy thoughts to nobler meditations give,
And study how to die, not how to live. Granville.
3. A series of thoughts, occasioned by any object or occurrence.
MEDITATIVE. adj. [from meditate.] 1. Addicted to meditation. Ang.
2. Expressing intention or design. Mediteran.

In all that part that lieth on the north side of the mediterranean sea, it is thought not to be the vulgar tongue. Brerewood.
2. Inland; remote from the sea.
It is found in mountains and mediterranean parts; and so it is a fat and unctuous sublimation of the earth. Brown.
We have taken a less height of the mountains than is requisite, if we respect the mediterranean mountains, or those that are at a great distance from the sea. Burnet.
MEDIUM. n. f. [medium, Latin.] 1. Any thing intervening.
Whether any other liquors, being made mediums, cause a diversity of sound from water, it may be tried. Bacon.
I must bring together
All these extremes; and must remove all mediums,
That each may be the other's object. Denham.
Seeing requires light and a free medium, and a right line to the objects; we can hear in the dark, unimured, and by curve lines. Holder.
He, who looks upon the soul through its outward actions, often sees it through a deceitful medium, which is apt to discolour the object. Addison's Spect. No. 257.
The parts of bodies on which their colours depend, are denser than the medium which pervades their interstices. Newt.
Against filling the heavens with fluid mediums, unless they be exceeding rare, a great objection arises from the regular and very lasting motions of the planets and comets in all manner of courses through the heavens. Newton's Opticks.
2. Any thing used in ratiocination, in order to a conclusion; the middle term in an argument, by which propositions are connected.
This cannot be answered by those mediums which have been used. Dryden's Juvenal.
We, whose understandings are short, are forced to collect one thing from another, and in that process we seek out proper mediums. Baker's Reflections on Learning.
3. The middle place or degree; the just temperature between extremes.
The just medium of this case lies betwixt the pride and the abjection, the two extremes. L'Estrange.
MEDLAR. n. f. [medullar, Latin.] 1. A tree.
The leaves of the medlar are either whole, and shaped like those of the laurel, as in the manured forts; or laciniated, as in the wild forts: the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruits are umbilicated, and are not eatable till they decay; and have, for the most part, five hard seeds in each. Miller.
2. The fruit of that tree.
You'll be rotten ere you be half ripe,
And that's the right virtue of the medlar. Shakespeare.
Now will he sit under a medlar tree,
And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit,
Which maids call medlars. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar. Shakespeare.
October is drawn in a garment of yellow and carnation; with a basket of services, medlars, and chefnuts. Peacham.
No rotten medlars, whilst there be Whole orchards in virginity. Cleveland.
Men have gather'd from the hawthorn's branch
Large medlars, imitating regal crowns. Philips.
TO MEDLE. } v. a. To mingle. Spenser.
TO MEDLY. }
MEDLY. n. f. [from meddle for minge.] A mixture; a miscellany; a mingled mass. It is commonly used with some degree of contempt.
Some imagined that the powder in the armory had taken fire; others, that troops of horsemen approached: in which medly of conceits they bare down one upon another, and jostled many into the tower ditch. Hayward.
Love is a medley of endearments, jars,
Suspensions, quarrels, reconcilements, wars;
Then peace again. Walsb.
They count their toilsome marches, long fatigues,
Unusual fastings, and will bear no more
This medley of philosophy and war. Addison's Cato.
Mahomet began to knock down his fellow citizens, and to fill all Arabia with an unnatural medley of religion and bloodshed. Freeholder, No. 50.
There are that a compounded fluid drain
From different mixtures: the blended streams,
Each mutually correcting each, create A pleasurable medley. Philips.
MEDLEY. adj. Mingled; confused.
Qualms at my heart, convulsions in my nerves,
Within my little world make medley war. Dryden.

MEED. n. f. [meb, Saxon; mieste, Teutonic.] Reward; recompence. Now rarely used.
He knows his meed, if he be spide,
To be a thousand deaths, and shame beside. Hubberd.
Whether in beauties glory did exceed,
A rosy garland was the victor's meed. Fairy Queen.
Thanks to men
Of noble minds is honourable meed. Shakespeare.
He must not float upon his wat'ry bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear. Milton.
If so a cloak and vesture be my meed
Till his return, no title shall I plead. Pope's Odyssey.
2. Present; gift.
Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward: no meed but he repays
Seven-fold above itself. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
MEEK. adj. [minke, Islandick.] Mild of temper; not proud; not rough; not easily provoked; soft; gentle. Numb. xii. 3.

My friends, at Ceres' now deserted feat. Dryden.
Not look back to see,
When what we love we never must meet again. Dryden.
3. To close one with another.
The nearer you come to the end of the lake, the mountains on each side grow higher, till at last they meet. Addison.
4. To find; to be treated with; to light on.
Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.
Of vice or virtue, whether blest or curst,
Which meets contempt, or which compassion first. Pope.
To me no greater joy,
Than that your labours meet a prosperous end. Granville.
5. To assemble from different parts.
Their choice nobility and flower Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton.
TO MEET, v. n.
1. To encounter; to close face to face.
2. To encounter in hostility.
3. To assemble; to come together.
They appointed a day to meet in together. 2 Mac. xiv. 21.
The materials of that building happily met together, and very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them. Tillotson.
4. To MEET with. To light on; to find.
When he cometh to experience of service abroad, he maketh as worthy a soldier as any nation he meeteth with. Spenser.
We met with many things worthy of observation. Bacon.
A little sun you mourn, while most have met
With twice the loss, and by as vile a cheat. Creech.
Hercules' meeting with pleasure and virtue, was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates. Addison.
What a majesty and force does one meet with in these short inscriptions: are not you amazed to see so much history garthered into so small a compass? Addison on ancient Medals.
5. To MEET with. To join.
Falls that at that oak shall meet with us. Shakespeare.
6. To MEET with. To encounter; to engage.
He, that hath suffered this disordered spring,
Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf. Shakespeare.
Royal mistress,
Prepare to meet with more than brutal fury
From the fierce prince. Rome's Ambitious Step-mother.
7. A latinism. To obviate; occurrere objecto.
Before I proceed farther, it is good to meet with an objection, which if not removed, the conclusion of experience from the time past to the present will not be found. Bacon.
8. To advance half way.
He yields himself to the man of business with reluctance, but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of desire. South.
Our meeting hearts
Contented soon, and marriage made us one. Rowe.
9. To unite; to join: as, these rivers meet at such a place and join.
MEETERS, n. f. [from meet.] One that accosts another.
There are beside Lascivious meeters, to whose venom'd sound
The open ear of youth doth always listen. Shakespeare.
MEETING, n. f. [from meet.]
1. An assembly; a convention.
If the fathers and husbands of those, whose relief this your meeting intends, were of the household of faith, then their relicts and children ought not to be strangers to the good that is done in it, if they want it. Sprat's Sermons.
Since the ladies have been left out of all meetings except parties at play, our conversation hath degenerated. Swift.
2. A congress.
Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting, and lead him on with a fine baited delay. Shakespeare.
3. A conventicle; an assembly of dissenters.
4. A conflux: as, the meeting of two rivers.
MEETING-HOUSE, n. f. [meeting and house.] Place where Dis-

MELANAGOGUES, n. f. [from μέλας and ἄγος.] Such medicines as are supposed particularly to purge off black choler.
MELANCHOLICK, adj. [from melancholy.] Disordered with melancholy; fanciful; hypochondriacal; gloomy.
The king found himself in the head of his army, after so many accidents and melancholick perplexities. Clovenham.
If he be mad, or angry, or melancholick, or spiteful, he will paint whatever is proportionable to any one. Dryden.
The commentators on old Ari-Stotle, 'tis urg'd, in judgment vary:
They to their own conceits have brought
The image of his general thought:
Just as the melancholick eye
Sees fleets and armies in the sky. Prior.
MELANCHOLY, n. f. [from melancholia, Fr. from μέλας and χολή.]
1. A disease, supposed to proceed from a redundancy of black bile; but it is better known to arise from too heavy and too viscid blood: its cure is in evacuation, nervous medicines, and powerful stimuli. Quincy.
2. A kindness of madness, in which the mind is always fixed on one object.
I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation;
nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness. Shakespeare. As you like it.
3. A gloomy, pensive, discontented temper.
He protested unto them, that he had only been to seek solitary places by an extreme melancholy that had possessed him.
Sidney, b. ii.
All these gifts come from him; and if we murmur here, we may at the next melancholy be troubled that God did not make us angels. Taylor's holy Living.
This melancholy flatters, but unmans you;
What is it else but penury of soul,
A lazy froth, a numbness of the mind? Dryden.
MELANCHOLY, adj. [melancholique, French.]
1. Gloomy; dismal.
Think of all our miseries
But as some melancholy dream, which has awak'd us
To the renewing of our joys. Denham's Sophy.
If in the melancholy shades below,
The flames of friends and lovers cease to glow;
Yet mine shall sacred last, mine undecay'd,
Burn on through death, and animate my shade. Pope.
2. Diseased with melancholy; fanciful; habitually dejected.
How now, sweet Frank; art thou melancholy. Shakespeare.
He observes Lamech more melancholy than usual, and imagines it to be from a suspicion he has of his wife Adah, whom he loved. Locke.
MELICERIS, n. f. [μέλικρις.]
Meliceris is a tumour inclosed in a cystis, and consisting of matter like honey: it gathers without pain, and gives way to pressure, but returns again. If the matter forming it resembles milk curds, the tumour is called atheroma; if like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, or a fatty substance, steatomata. Sharp's Surgery.
MELILOT, n. f. [melilot, Fr. melilotus, Latin.] A plant.
The melilot hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empanement arises the pincushion, which afterward becomes a naked capsule, that is, not hid in the empanement, as in trefoil, pregnant with one or two roundish seeds: the leaves grow by threes on the foot-stalks, and the flowers are produced in a spike. Miller.
TO MELIORATE, v. a. [meliorer, Fr. from melior.] To better; to improve.
Grafting meliorates the fruit; for that the nourishment is better prepared in the stock than in the crude earth. Bacon.
But when we graft, or buds inoculate,
Nature by art we nobly meliorate. Denham.
A man ought by no means to think, that he should be able so much as to alter or meliorate the humour of an ungrateful person by any acts of kindness. South's Sermons.
Castration serves to meliorate the flesh of those beasts that suffer it. Graunt.
Much labour is requir'd in trees.
Well must the ground be digg'd, and better dress'd,
New soil to make, and meliorate the rest. Dryden's Virg.
MELIORATION, n. f. [melioration, Fr. from meliorate.] Improvement; act of bettering.
For the melioration of music there is yet much left, in this point of exquisite comforts, to try.
MELIORITY, n. f. [from melior.] State of being better.
Men incline unto them which are softest, and least in their way, in despite of them that hold them hardest to it; so that this colour of meliorty and pre-eminence is a sign of weakness. Bacon's Collection of Good and Evil.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernable ends of them, the meliorty above what was necessary to be, do evince, by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship not of blind mechanism, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.
TO MELL, v. n. [meller, se meler, Fr.] To mix; to meddle.
Obsolete.
With fathers sits not with such things to mell. Spenser.
Here is a great deal of good matter
Lost for lack of telling.
Now I see thou dost but clutter,
Harm may come of melling. Spenser's Pastorals.
MELLI-FEROUS, adj. Productive of honey. Dict.
MELLI-FICATION, n. f. [mellificatio, Latin.] The art or practice of making honey; production of honey.
In judging of the constitution of the air, many things besides the weather ought to be observed: in some countries, the silence of grasshoppers, and want of mellification in bees.
Arbutnot on Air.
MELLI-FUENCE, n. f. [mel and fuo, Latin.] A honied flow;
a flow of sweetness.
MELLI-FUENT, adj. [mel and fuo, Latin.] Flowing with MELLI-FUOUS. } honey; flowing with sweetness.
A mellifluous voice, as I am a true knight. Shakespeare.
As all those things which are most mellifluous are soonest changed into choler and bitterness, so are our vanities and pleasures converted into the bitterest sorrows and repentances.
Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Innumerable songsters, in the freshening shade
Of new-sprung leaves, their modulations mix Mellifluous. Thomson's Spring, l. 605.
MELLOW, adj. [mearpa, soft, Saxon, Sinnor: more nearly from molis, melle, mellaw, mellaw; though r is indeed easily changed into l in common speech.]
1. Soft with ripeness; full ripe.
A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves. Shak.
An apple in my hand works different effects upon my senses: my eye tells me it is green; my nose, that it hath a mellow scent; and my taste, that it is sweet. Digby.
A little longer,
And nature drops him down without your sin,
Like mellow fruit, without a winter storm. Dryden.
2. Soft in sound.
Of seven smooth joints a mellow pipe I have,
Which with his dying breath Dametas gave. Dryden.
3. Soft; unctuous.
Camomile sheweth mellow grounds fit for wheat. Bacon.
4. Drunk; melted down with drink.
Greedy of physicians frequent fees,
From female mellow praise he takes degrees. Recommon.
In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a testy, touchy, pleasant fellow;
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Addison.
TO MELLOW, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To ripen; to mature; to be softened by ripeness; to ripen by age.
Lord Aubrey Vere
Was done to death, and more than so, my father;
Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years. Shakespeare.
The royal tree hath left its royal fruit,
Which mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the feat of majesty. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
On foreign mountains may the sun refine
The grape's soft juice, and mellow it to wine. Addison.
2. To soften.
They plow in the wheat stubble in December; and if the weather prove frosty to mellow it, they do not plow it again till April. Mortimer's Husband.
3. To mature to perfection.
This episode is not only now the most pleasing entertainment of the Æneis, but was so accounted in his own age, and before it was mellowed into that reputation which time has given it. Dryden.
TO MELLOW, v. n. To be matured; to ripen.
Though no stone tell thee what I was, yet thou
In my grave's inside see'lt, what thou art now;
Yet thou'rt not yet so good, till us death lay
To ripe and mellow there, we're stubborn clay. Donne.
MELLOWNESS, n. f. [from mellow.]
1. Maturity of fruits; ripeness; softness by maturity.
My reason can consider greenness, mellowness, sweetness, or coldness, singly, and without relation to any other quality that is painted in me by the same apple. Digby of Bodice.
The Spring, like youth, fresh blossoms doth produce,
But Autumn makes them ripe, and fit for use:
So age a mature mellowness doth set
On the green promises of youthful heat. Denham.
2. Maturity; full age.
MELOCOTON, n. f. [melocotone, Spanish; malum cotoneum, Latin.] A quince. Obsolete.
In apricots, peaches, or melocotones upon a wall, the greatest fruits are towards the bottom. Bacch.

MELO'DIOUS, adj. [from melody.] Musical; harmonious.
Fountains! and ye that warble, as ye flow, Milton.
Melodious murmurs! warbling tune his praise.
And oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears;
A musick more melodious than the spheres. Dryden.
MELO'DIOUSLY, adv. [from melodious.] Musically; harmoniously.
MELO'DIOUSNESS, n. f. [from melodious.] Harmoniousness;
musicalness.
MELODY, n. f. [μελωδία.] Musick; harmony of sound.
The prophet David having singular knowledge not in poetry alone but in musick also, judged them both to be things most necessary for the house of God, left behind him for that purpose a number of divinely indited poems, and was farther the author of adding unto poetry melody in publick prayer, melody both vocal and instrumental, for the raising up of mens hearts, and the sweetening of their affections towards
God. Hooker, b. v.
Singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord. Eph. v. 19.
Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
And hush'd with buzzing night flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfume'd chambers of the great, Shakespeare.
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody.
Lend me your songs, ye nightingales: Oh pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse. Thomson's Spring, l. 570.
MELON, n. f. [melen, Fr. melo, Latin.]
1. A plant.
The flower of the melon consists of one leaf, which is of the expanded bell shape, cut into several segments, and exactly like those of the cucumber: some of these flowers are barren, not adhering to the embryo; others are fruitful, growing upon the embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, for the most part of an oval shape, smooth or wrinkled, and divided into three seminal apartments, which seem to be cut into two parts, and contain many oblong seeds. Miller.
2. The fruit.
We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely;
the cucumbers and the melons. Num. xi. 5.
MELON-THISTLE, n. f. [melocastus, Latin.]
The whole plant of the melon-thistle hath a singular appearance, is very succulent, and hath many angles, which are beset with sharp thorns. Miller.
TO MELT, v. a. [mylan, Saxon.]
1. To dissolve; to make liquid; commonly by heat.
How they would melt me out of my fat drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boots with me! Shakespeare.
When the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil. Isa. lxiv. 2.
This price, which is given above the value of the silver in our coin, is given only to preserve our coin from being melted down. Locke.
Will a goldsmith give one ounce and a quarter of coined silver for one ounce of bullion, when, by putting it into his melting pot, he can make it bullion? Locke.
The rock's high summit in the temple's shade,
Nor heat could melt, nor beating storm invade. Pope.
If your butter when melted tastes of brags, it is your master's fault, who will not allow you a silver saucepan. Swift.
2. To dissolve; to break in pieces.
To take in pieces this frame of nature, and melt it down into its first principles; and then to observe how the divine wisdom wrought all these things into that beautiful composition; is a kind of joy, which pierceth the mind. Burnet.
3. To soften to love or tenderness.
The mighty master smil'd to see That love was in the next degree:
'Twas but a kindred sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love. Dryden. Alexander's Feast.
Alas! thy story melts away my soul. Addison's Cato.
4. To waste away.
Thou would'st have plung'd thyself
In general riot, melted down thy youth
In different beds of lust. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
TO MELT, v. n.
1. To become liquid; to dissolve; to be made fluid.
Let them melt away as waters which run continually. Psal.
The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;
While lilies hang their heads and soon decay,
And whiter snow in minutes melts away. Dryden.
2. To be softened to pity, or any gentle passion; to grow tender, mild, or gentle.
I melt, and am not
Of stronger earth than others. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Dighton and Forrest;
Albeit, they were flesh villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children in their death's sad story. Shakespeare.
This said; the mov'd assistants melt in tears. Dryden.
Melting

MEM

- Melting* into tears, the pious man
Deplor'd to find a fight.
3. To be dissolved; to lose substance.
Whether are they vanish'd?
Into the air: and what seem'd corporal Melted as breath into the wind. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Beauty is a witch,
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood. Shakespeare.
4. To be subdued by affliction.
My soul melteth for heaviness: strengthen thou me. Psal.
MELTER. n. f. [from mel.] One that melts metals.
Miso and Mopla, like a couple of foreswat melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney, b. ii.
This the author attributes to the remissness of the former melters, in not exhausting the ore. Derham's Physico-Theol.
MELTINGLY. adv. [from melting.] Like something melting.
Zelman lay upon a bank, with her face bent over Ladon, that her tears falling into the water, one might have thought the began meltingly to be metamorphosed to the running river. Sidney, b. ii.
MELTVEL. n. f. A kind of fish.
MEMBER. n. f. [membre, French; membrum, Latin.]
1. A limb; a part appendant to the body.
The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things.
Jam. iii. 5.
2. A part of a discourse or period; a head; a clause.
Where the respondent limits or distinguishes any proposition, the opponent must prove his own proposition according to that member of the distinction in which the respondent denied it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
3. Any part of an integral.
In poetry as in architecture, not only the whole but the principal members, and every part of them, should be great.
Addison's Spect. N. 267.
4. One of a community.
My going to demand justice upon the five members, my emies loaded with obloquies. King Charles.
Mean as I am, yet have the Muses made Me free, a member of the tuneful trade. Dryden.
Sienna is adorned with many towers of brick, which, in the time of the commonwealth, were erected to such of the members as had done any considerable service to their country.
Addison on Italy.
MEMBRANE. n. f. [membrane, Fr. membrana, Latin.]
A membrane is a web of several sorts of fibres, interwoven together for the covering and wrapping up some parts: the fibres of the membranes give them an elasticity, whereby they can contract, and closely grasp, the parts they contain, and their nervous fibres give them an exquisite sense, which is the cause of their contraction; they can, therefore, scarcely suffer the sharpness of medicines, and are difficultly united when wounded. Quincy.
The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth after tear asunder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
They obstacle find none
Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars:
Easier than air with air, if spirits embrace,
Total they mix. Milton.
The inner membrane that involved the several liquors of the egg remained unbroken. Boyle.
MEMBRANACEOUS. } adj. [membraneus, Fr. from membrana, MEMBRANEUS. } Lat.] Consisting of membranes.
MEMBRANOUS. }
Lute-firings, which are made of the membranous parts of the guts strongly wreathed, swell so much as to break in wet weather. Boyle.
Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranous covering called the filly-hov. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Such birds as are carnivorous have no gizzard, or muscu-lous, but a membranous stomach; that kind of food being torn into small flakes by the beak, may be easily concocted by a membranous stomach. Ray on Creation.
Anodyne substances, which take off contractions of the membranous parts, are diuretick. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Birds of prey have membranaceous, not muscular stomachs.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
MEMENTO. n. f. [Latin.] A memorial notice; a hint to awaken the memory.
Our gracious master, for his learning and piety, is not only a precedent to his own subjects, but to foreign princes; yet he is still but a man, and seasonable memento's may be useful. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Is not the frequent spectacle of other peoples deaths a memento sufficient to make you think of your own? L'Estrange.
MEMOIR. n. f. [memoire, French.]
1. An account of transactions familiarly written.
Be our great master's future charge
To write his own memoirs, and leave his heirs
High schemes of government and plans of wars. Prior.
2. Hint; notice; account of any thing.

MEM

- There is not in any author a computation of the revenues of the Roman empire, and hardly any memoirs from whence it might be collected. Arbutnot on Coins.
MEMORABLE. adj. [memorable, Fr. memorabilis, Lat.] Worthy of memory; not to be forgotten.
Nothing I so much delight to recount, as the memorable friendship that grew betwixt the two princes.
From this desire, that main desire proceeds,
Which all men have surviving fame to gain,
By tombs, by books, by memorable deeds,
For the that this desires doth still remain.
Dares Ulysses for the prize contend,
In sight of what he durst not once defend;
But basely fled that memorable day,
When I from Hector's hands redeem'd the flaming prey.
Dryden's Ovid.
MEMORABLY. adv. [from memorable.] In a manner worthy of memory.
MEMORANDUM. n. f. [Latin.] A note to help the memory.
I resolved to new pave every street within the liberties, and entered a memorandum in my pocket-book accordingly.
Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 166.
Nature's fair table-book, our tender souls,
We scrawl all o'er with old and empty rules.
Stale memorandums of the schools. Swift's Miscel.
MEMORIAL. adj. [memorial, Fr. memorialis, Latin.]
1. Prefervative of memory.
Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove,
And gives memorial dainty kisses to it. Shakespeare.
May I, at the conclusion of a work, which is a kind of monument of Pope's partiality to me, place the following lines as an inscription memorial of it. Broom.
The tomb with many arms and trophies raise;
There high in air memorial of my name
Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.
2. Contained in memory.
The case is the same with the memorial possessions of the greatest part of mankind: a few useful things mixed with many trifles fill up their memories. Watts.
MEMORIAL. n. f.
1. A monument; something to preserve memory.
All churches have had their names; some as memorials of peace, some of wisdom, some in memory of the trinity itself, some of Christ under sundry titles; of the blessed Virgin not a few; many of one apostle, faint, or martyr; many of all.
Hooker.
A memorial unto Israel, that no stranger offer incense before the Lord. Nam. xvi. 43.
All the laws of this kingdom have some monuments or memorials thereof in writing, yet all of them have not their original in writing; for some of those laws have obtained their force by immemorial usage. Hale.
In other parts like deeds deserv'd
Memorial, where the might of Gabriel fought. Milton.
Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitting conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. Saunders's Sermons.
Medals are so many monuments consigned over to eternity, that may last when all other memorials of the same age are worn out or lost. Addison on ancient Medals.
2. Hint to assist the memory.
He was a prince sad, serious, and full of thoughts and secret observations, and full of notes and memorials of his own hand touching persons. Bacon's Henry VII.
Memorials written with king Edward's hand shall be the ground of this history. Heyward.
MEMORIALIST. n. f. [from memorial.] One who writes memorials.
I must not omit a memorial setting forth, that the memo-rialist had, with great dispatch, carried a letter from a certain lord to a certain lord. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 629.
MEMORIZE. v. a. [from memory.] To record; to commit to memory by writing.
They neglect to memorize their conquest of the Indians, especially in those times in which the fame was supposed.
Spenser on Ireland.
Let their names that were bravely lost be rather memorized in the full table of time; for my part, I love no ambitious pains in an eloquent description of miseries. Wotton.
MEMORY. n. f. [memoire, Fr. memoria, Latin.]
1. The power of retaining or recollecting things past; retention; remembrance; recollection.
Memory is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas which after imprinting have disappeared, or have been laid aside out of sight. Locke.
The memory is perpetually looking back, when we have nothing present to entertain us: it is like those repositories in animals that are filled with stores of food, on which they may ruminant, when their present pasture fails. Addison's Spectator.
2. Exemption

MEN

2. Exemption from oblivion.
That ever-living man of memory, Shakespeare. Henry VI.
Henry the Fifth!
3. Time of knowledge.
Thy request think now fulfill'd, that ask'd
How first this world, and face of things, began,
And what, before thy memory, was done. Milton.
4. Memorial; monumental record.
Be better suited;
These weeds are memories of those worse hours:
I prithee put them off. Shakespeare. King Lear.
A swan in memory of Cygnus shines;
The mourning sisters weep in wat'ry signs. Addison.
5. Reflection; attention. Not in use.
When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and waffle to convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
MEN, the plural of man.
Wits live obscurely men know not how; or die obscurely men mark not when. Ascham.
For men, there are to be considered the valour and number: the old observation is not untrue, that the Spaniards valour lieth in the eye of the looker-on; but the English valour lieth about the soldiers heart. Bacon's War with Spain.
He thought fit that the king's affairs should entirely be conducted by the soldiers and men of war. Clarendon, b. viii.
MEN-PLASER. n. f. [men and plaser.] One too careful to please others.
Servants be obedient to them that are your masters: not with eye-service, as men-plasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. Eph. vi. 6.
To MENACE. v. a. [menace, Fr.] To threaten; to threat.
Who ever knew the heavens menace so?
Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale?
Who sent you hither?
My master knows not but I am gone hence,
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents. Shakespeare.
From this league
Peep'd harms that menace'd him. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
What should he do? 'Twas death to go away,
And the god menace'd if he dar'd to stay. Dryden's Fables.
MENACE. n. f. [menace, Fr. from the verb.] Threat.
He that would not believe the menace of God at first, it may be doubted whether, before an ocular example, he believed the curse at last. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
The Trojans view the dusky cloud from far,
And the dark menace of the distant war. Dryden's Eneis.
MENACER. n. f. [menaceur, Fr. from menace.] A threatener;
one that threatens.
Hence menacer! nor tempt me into rage:
This roof protects thy rashness. But begone! Philips.
MENAGE. n. f. [French.] A collection of animals.
I saw here the largest menage that I met with any-where.
Addison on Italy.
MENAGOCUE. n. f. [μηνες and αγω.] A medicine that promotes the flux of the menses.
To MEND. v. a. [mendis, Latin.]
1. To repair from breach or decay.
They gave the money to the workmen to repair and mend the house. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 10.
2. To correct; to alter for the better.
The best service they could do to the state, was to mend the lives and manners of the persons who composed it.
Temple's Miscel.
You need not despair, by the assistance of his growing reason, to master his timorousness, and mend the weakness of his constitution. Locke on Education.
Though in some lands the grass is but short, yet it mends garden herbs and fruit. Morimer's Husbandry.
Their opinion of Wood, and his project, is not mended.
Swift.
3. To help; to advance.
Whatever is new is unlooked for; and ever it mends some, and impairs others: and he that is helped takes it for a fortune, and he that is hurt for a wrong. Bacon.
If, to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum stans of the schools, they will thereby very little mend the matter, or help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.
4. To improve; to increase.
Death comes not at call; justice divine
Mends not her slowest pace, for pray'r, or cries. Milton.
When upon the sands the traveller,
Sees the high sea come rolling from afar,
The land grow short, he mends his weary pace,
While death behind him covers all the place.
He saw the monster mend his pace; he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings. Dryden.
To MEND. v. n. To grow better; to advance in any good;
to be changed for the better.

- Name a new play and he's the poet's friend;
Nay, show'd his faults—but when wou'd poets mend?
Pope's Essay on Criticism.
MENDABLE. adj. [from mend.] Capable of being mended. A low word.
MENDACITY. n. f. [from mendax, Latin.] Falsehood.
In this delivery there were additional mendacities; for the commandment forbid not to touch the fruit, and positively said, Ye shall surely die; but she, extenuating, replied, Left ye die. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
MENDER. n. f. [from mend.] One who makes any change for the better.
What trade art thou? A trade that I may use with a safe conscience; a mender of bad foals. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
MENDICANT. adj. [mendicans, Latin.] Begging; poor to a state of beggary.
Be not righteous over-much, is applicable to those who,
out of an excess of zeal, practise mortifications, whereby they macerate their bodies; or to those who voluntarily reduce themselves to a poor, and perhaps mendicant, state.
Fiddes's Sermons.
MENDICANT. n. f. [mendicans, Fr.] A beggar; one of some begging fraternity in the Romish church.
To MENDICATE. v. a. [mendico, Lat. mendier, Fr.] To beg;
to ask alms.
MENDICITY. n. f. [mendicitas, Lat. mendicité, Fr.] The life of a beggar.
MENDS for amends.
Let her be as she is: If she be fair, 'tis the better for her;
and if she be not, she has the mends in her own hands. Shak.
MENIAL. adj. [from meiny or many; meni, Saxon, or meisne, old French.]
1. Belonging to the retinue, or train of servants.
Two menial dogs before their master pres'd;
Thus clad, and guarded thus, he seeks his kingly guest.
Dryden's Eneis.
2. Swift seems not to have known the meaning of this word.
The women attendants perform only the most menial offices. Gulliver's Travels.
MENIAL. n. f. One of the train of servants.
MENINGES. n. f. [meninges, Fr.] The meninges are the two membranes that envelope the brain, which are called the pia mater and dura mater; the latter being the exterior involucre, is, from its thickness, so denominated. Diet.
The brain being exposed to the air groweth fluid, and is thrust forth by the contraction of the meninges. Wijeman.
MENOLOGY. n. f. [μηνολόγιον; menologe, French.] A register of months.
In the Roman martyrology we find, at one time, many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian: the menology saith they were twenty thousand. Stillingfleet.
MENOW. n. f. commonly minnow. A fish. Ains.
MENIAL. adj. [menialis, Lat.] Belonging to the table; transacted at table. A word yet scarcely naturalized.
Conversation either mental or menial. Clarissa.
MENSTRUAL. adj. [menstrual, Fr. menstruus, Latin.]
1. Monthly; happening once a month; lasting a month.
She turns all her globe to the sun, by moving in her menstrual orb, and enjoys night and day alternately, one day of her's being equal to about fourteen days and nights of ours.
Bentley's Sermons.
2. Pertaining to a menstruum. [menstruus, Fr.]
The distents of the menstrual or strong waters hinder the incorporation, as well as those of the metal. Bacon.
MENSTRUOUS. adj. [menstruus, Lat.] Having the catamenia.
O thou of late beloved,
Now like a menstruous woman art remov'd. Sandys's Par.
Many, from being women, have proved men at the first point of their menstruous eruptions. Brown.
MENSTRUUM. n. f. [This name probably was derived from some notion of the old chemists about the influence of the moon in the preparation of dissolvents.]
All liquors are called menstrua which are used as dissolvents, or to extract the virtues of ingredients by infusion, de-coction. Quincy.
Inquire what is the proper menstruum to dissolve metal, what will touch upon the one and not upon the other, and what several menstrua will dissolve any metal. Bacon's Physical Rem.
White metalline bodies must be excepted, which, by reason of their excessive density, seem to reflect almost all the light incident on their first superficies, unless by solution in menstrua they be reduced into very small particles, and then they become transparent. Newton's Opticks.
MENSTRUALITY. n. f. [menstrualité, French.] Capacity of being measured.
MEASURABLE. adj. [mensura, Latin.] Measurable; that may be measured.
We measure our time by law and not by nature. The solar month is no periodical motion, and not easily measurable, and the months unequal among themselves, and not by measured by even weeks or days. Holder.

ME'NSURAL. adj. [from mensura, Latin.] Relating to measure.

To ME'NSURATE. v. a. [from mensura, Latin.] To measure; to take the dimension of any thing.

MENSURA'TION. n. f. [from mensura, Latin.] The act or practice of measuring; result of measuring.

After giving the mensuration and argumentation of Dr. Cumberland, it would not have been fair to have suppressed those of another prelate.

ME'NTAL. adj. [mentale, French; mentis, Lat.] Intellectual; existing in the mind.

What a mental power

This eye shoots forth? How big imagination

Moves in this lip? To the dumbness of the gesture

One might interpret. Shakep. Timon of Athens.

So deep the pow'r of these ingredients pierc'd,

Ev'n to the inmost feat of mental light,

That Adam now enforc'd to close his eyes,

Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd. Milton.

The metaphor of taste would not have been so general, had there not been a very great conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste that affects the palate.

Addison's Spect. No. 409.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; for where the ideas are not, there can be no knowledge, no assent, no mental or verbal propositions about them. Locke.

She kindly talk'd, at least three hours,

Of plack'd forms, and mental pow'rs. Prior.

Those inward representations of spirit, thought, love, and hatred, are pure and mental ideas, belonging especially to the mind, and carry nothing of shape or sense in them.

Watts's Logic.

ME'NTALLY. adv. [from mental.] Intellectually; in the mind; not practically, but in thought or meditation.

If we consider the heart the first principle of life, and mentally divide it into its constituent parts, we find nothing but what is in any muscle of the body. Bentley.

ME'NTION. n. f. [mention, Fr. mention, Latin.] Oral or written expression, or recital of any thing.

Think on me when it shall be well with thee; and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house.

Gen. xl. 14.

His foot mercurial, his martial thigh,

The brawns of Hercules. Shakep. Cymbeline.

This youth was such a mercurial, as could make his own part, if at any time he chanced to be out. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Tully considered the dispositions of a sincere, more ignorant, and less mercurial nation, by dwelling on the pathetic part. Swift's Miscel.

2. Consisting of quicksilver.

MERCURIFICATION. adj. [from mercury.] The act of mixing any thing with quicksilver.

I add the ways of mercurification. Boyle.

MERCURY. n. f. [mercurius, Latin.]

1. The chemist's name for quicksilver is mercury.

The gall of animals and mercury kill worms; and the water in which mercury is boiled has this effect. Arbutnot.

2. Sprightly qualities.

Thus the mercury of man is fix'd,

Strong grows the virtue with his nature mix'd;

The dross cements what else were too refin'd,

And in one in'rest body acts with mind. Pope.

3. A news-paper.

4. It is now applied, in cant phrase, to the carriers of news and pamphlets. Atterbury.

MERCURY. n. f. [mercurialis, Latin.] A plant.

The leaves of the mercury are crenated, and grow by pairs opposite: the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, which expands and is cut into three segments; these are male and female in different places: the flowers of the male grow in long spikes, and consist of many stamina and apices, which are loaded with farina: the ovary of the female plant becomes a testiculated fruit, having a single round seed in each cell. Miller.

Herb mercury is of an emollient nature, and is eaten in the manner of spinach, which, when cultivated in a garden, it greatly excels. Hill's Mat. Med.

MERCY. n. f. [merci, French, contracted from misericordia,

Latin.]

1. Tenderness; goodness; pity; willingness to save; clemency;

mildness; unwillingness to punish.

Oh heav'n have mercy on me!

— I say, amen. Shakespeare.

And have you mercy too?

Mercy is not strain'd;

It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heav'n,

Upon the place beneath. It is twice bless'd;

It blest him that gives and him that takes. Shakep.

Arise, and have mercy upon Zion. Psal. cii. 13.

Thou, O God, art gracious, long-suffering, and in mercy ordering all. Wisd. xv. 1.

Examples of justice must be made for terror to some; examples of mercy for comfort to others: the one procures fear, and the other love. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Good heav'n, whose darling attribute we find

Is boundless grace, and mercy to mankind,

Abhors the cruel. Dryden.

We adore his undeserved mercy towards us, that he made us the chief of the visible creation. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Pardon.

As offer'd mercy is. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Cry mercy lords,

That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here. Shakespeare.

I cry thee mercy with all my heart, for suspecting a friar of the least good-nature. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

3. Discretion; power of acting at pleasure.

Condition!

What good condition can a treaty find

I th' part that is at mercy? Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The most authentick record of so ancient a family should lie at the mercy of every infant who flings a stone. Pope.

A lover is ever complaining of cruelty while any thing is denied him; and when the lady ceases to be cruel, the is,

from the next moment, at his mercy. Swift.

MERCY-SEAT. n. f. [mercy and seat.]

The mercy-seat was the covering of the ark of the covenant, in which the tables of the law were deposited: it was of gold, and at its two ends were fixed the two cherubims, of the same metal, which with their wings extended forwards, seemed to form a throne for the majesty of God, who in scripture is represented as sitting between the cherubims, and the ark was his footstool: it was from thence that God gave his oracles to Moses, or to the high-priest that consulted him. Calmet.

Make a mercy-seat of pure gold. Exod. xxv. 17.

MERE. adj. [merus, Latin.] That or this only; such and nothing else; this only.

This avarice

Strikes deeper, grows with more pernicious root

Than Summer-teeming lust; and it hath been

The sword of our slain kings: yet do not fear,

Scotland hath foilons to fill up your will

Of your mere own. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,

Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,

MER

- Sometimes tow'rd heav'n, and the full blazing Sun,
Which now far high in his meridian tow'r. Milton.
2. Extended from North to South.
Compare the meridian line afforded by magnetical needles with one mathematically drawn, and observe the variation of the needle, or its declination from the true meridian line. Boyle.
3. Raised to the highest point.
- MERIDIONAL. adj. [meridional, French.]
1. Southern.
In the southern coast of America or Africa, the southern point varieth toward the land, as being disposed that way by the meridian or proper hemisphere. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. Southerly; having a southern aspect.
All offices that require heat, as kitchens, stillatories, and stoves, would be meridianal. Watson's Architect.
MERIDIONALITY. n. f. [from meridianal.] Position in the South; aspect toward the South.
MERIDIONALLY. adv. [from meridianal.] With a southern aspect.
The Jews, not willing to lie as their temple stood, do place their bed from North to South, and delight to sleep meridionally. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
MERIT. n. f. [meritum, Latin; meritis, French.]
1. Desert; excellence deserving honour or reward.
You have the captives; use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakspeare, King Lear.
She deem'd I well deserv'd to die,
And made a merit of her cruelty. Dryden.
Rofcommon, not more learn'd than good,
With manners gen'rous as his noble blood;
To him the wit of Greece and Rome was known,
And ev'ry author's merit but his own. Pope.
She valu'd nothing less Than titles, figure, shape, and drefs;
That merit should be chiefly plac'd
In judgment, knowledge, wit, and taste. Swift.
2. Reward deserved.
Those laurel groves, the merits of thy youth,
Which thou from Mahomet didst greatly gain,
While bold assertor of refistless truth,
Thy sword did godlike liberty maintain. Prior.
3. Claim; right.
As I am studious to promote the honour of my native country, I put Chaucer's merits to the trial, by turning some of the Canterbury tales into our language. Dryden.
When a point hath been well examined, and our own judgment settled, after a large survey of the merits of the cause, it would be a weakness to continue fluttering. Watts.
TO MERIT. v. a. [meriter, French.]
1. To deserve; to have a right to claim any thing as deserved.
Amplify have merited of me, of all
Th' infernal empire. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
A man at best is incapable of meriting any thing from God. South's Sermons.
2. To deserve; to earn: it is used generally of good, but sometimes of ill.
Whatever jewels I have merited, I am sure I have received none, unless experience be a jewel; that I have purchased at an infinite rate. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
If such rewards to vanquish'd men are due,
What prize may Nisus from your bounty claim,
Who merited the first rewards, and fame? Dryden.
MERITORIOUS. adj. [meritorius, Fr. from merit.] Deserving of reward; high in desert.
Instead of so great and meritorious a service, in bringing all the Irish to acknowledge the king for their liege, they did great hurt. Spenser on Ireland.
The war that hath such a foundation will not only be reputed just, but holy and meritorious. Raleigh's Essays.
A most sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfactory and meritorious death and obedience of the incarnate Son of God, Jesus Christ, God blessed for ever.
Bishop Sanderson.
This is not only the most prudent, but the most meritorious charity, which we can practice. Addison's Spect.
MERITORIOUSLY. adv. [from meritorious.] In such a manner as to deserve reward.
He carried himself meritoriously in foreign employments in time of the interdict, which held up his credit among the patriots. Watson.
MERITORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from meritorious.] The act or state of deserving well.
There was a full persuasion of the high meritoriousness of what they did; but still there was no law of God to ground it upon, and consequently it was not confidence. South.
MERITOR. n. f. [ostilum, Lat.] A kind of play. Ains.
MERLIN. n. f. A kind of hawk.
Not yielding over to old age his country delights; he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney.

MER

- ME'RMALD. n. f. [mer, the sea, and maid.] A sea woman; an animal with a woman's head and fish's tail.
I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall. Shakspeare.
Thou remembrest,
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song.
Did sense persuade Ulysses not to hear
The mermaid's songs, which to his men did please,
That they were all persuaded, through the ear,
To quit the ship and leap into the seas?
Few eyes have escaped the picture of a mermaid: Horace his monster, with woman's head above and fishy extremity below, answers the shape of the ancient syrens that attempted upon Ulysses. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
MERMAID'S TRUMPET. n. f. A kind of fish. Ains.
MERRILY. adv. [from merry.]
1. Gaily; civilly; cheerfully; with mirth; with gaiety; with laughter.
Merrily, merrily, shall we live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough. Shakspeare.
When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merrily. Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.
You have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
A pailan of France thinks of no more than his coarse bread and his onions, his canvas clothes and wooden shoes, labours contentedly on working days, and dances or plays merrily on holidays. Temple's Misc.
Merrily sing, and sport, and play,
For 'tis Oriana's nuptial day. Granville.
ME'RRIMAKE. n. f. [merry and make.] A festival; a meeting for mirth.
Thenot now is the time of merrymake,
Nor Pan to herie, nor with love to play,
Sike mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or Summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser's Past.
The knight did not forbear,
Her honest mirth and pleasure to partake,
But when he saw her gibe, and toy, and gear,
And pass the bounds of modest merrymake,
Her dalliance he despised. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
TO ME'RRIMAKE. v. a. To feast; to be jovial.
With thee 'twas Marian's dear delight
To moid all day, and merrymake at night. Gay's Pastoral.
ME'RRIMENT. n. f. [from merry.] Mirth; gaiety; cheerfulness;
laughter.
Who when they heard that piteous strained voice,
In haste forsook their rural merriment. Fairy Queen, b. i.
A number of merriments and jests, wherewith they have pleasantly moved much laughter at our manner of serving God. Hooker, b. v.
Methought it was the found
Of riot and ill-managed merriment. Milton.
ME'RRINESS. n. f. [from merry.] Mirth; merry disposition.
The file shall give us cause to climb in the merriness. Shak.
MERRY. adj.
1. Laughing; loudly cheerful; gay of heart.
They drank and were merry with him. Gen. xliii. 34.
The vine languisheth, all the merry-hearted sigh. Ips. xxiv.
Some that are of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company into which they come to be sad and ill-disposed;
and others that are of a jovial nature, do dispose the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Man is the merriest species of the creation; all above and below him are serious. Addison.
2. Causing laughter.
You kill'd her husband, and for that vile fault
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death;
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest. Shakspeare.
3. Prosperous.
In my small pinnacle I can sail,
Contemning all the blustering roar;
And running with a merry gale,
With friendly stars my safety seek,
Within some little winding creek,
And see the storm ashore. Dryden.
TO MAKE MERRY. To junket; to be jovial.
They trod the grapes and made merry, and went into the house of their God. Judg. ix. 27.
A fox 'py'd a bevy of jolly, gossiping wenches making merry over a dish of pullets. L'Estrange.
MERRY-ANDREW. n. f. A buffoon; a zany; a jack-pudding.
He would be a statesman because he is a buffoon; as if there were no more to the making of a counsellor than the faculties of a merry-andrew or tumbler. L'Estrange.
The first who made the experiment was a merry-andrew. Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 599.
MERRY-THOUGHT.

MES

- ME'RRYTHOUGHT. n. f. [merry and thought.] A forked bone on the body of fowls; so called because boys and girls pull in play at the two sides, the longest part broken off betoken-ing priority of marriage.
Let him not be breaking merrythoughts under the table with my cousin. Shakspeare, Contempt of the Clergy.
MESSE'ACK. n. f. [μεσάκιον: mesaraique, Fr. analogy requires it mesaraique.] Belonging to the mystemery.
It taketh leave of the permanent parts at the mouths of the mesaraiques, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion into the flege. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The most subtle part of the chyle passeth immediately into the blood by the absorbent vessels of the guts, which discharge themselves into the mesaraique veins. Arbutnot.
ME'RSION. n. f. [mersio, Lat.] The act of sinking, or thrusting over head. Ains.
MESE'EMS, impersonal verb. [me and seems, or it seems to me:
for this word it is now too common to use methinks or methought, an ungrammatical word; I think; it appears to me;
methinks.
Alas, of ghosts I hear the gaffly cries;
Yet there, mesems, I hear her fingling loud. Sidney.
Mesemed by my tide a royal maid,
Her dainty limbs full softly down did lay. Fairy Queen.
To that general subjection of the land mesems that the custom or tenure can be no bar nor impeachment. Spenser.
ME'SENTERY. n. f. [μεσεντήριον: mesenterie, Fr.] That round which the guts are convolved.
When the chyle passeth through the mesentery, it is mixed with the lymph. Arbutnot on Aliments.
ME'SENTERICK. adj. [mesenterique, French, from mesentery.]
Relating to the mesentery.
They are carried into the glands of the mesentery, receiving a fine lymph from the lymphatic ducts, which dilutes this chylous fluid, and scours its containing vessels, which, from the mesenteric glands, unite in large channels, and pass directly into the common receptacle of the chyle. Chyene.
MESH. n. f. [meshe, Dutch; mache, old French: it were therefore better written, as it is commonly pronounced, masb.]
The interstice of a net; the space between the threads of a net.
The drovers hang square nets athwart the tide, thorough which the shoal of pilchard passing, leave many behind entangled in the meshes. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Such a hare is madness the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the cripple.
He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With twinkling glances to betray. Dryden.
The larks that in the meshes light.
Which through the cells of the fine strainers sink:
These all the channel'd fibres ev'ry way,
For motion and sensation, still convey:
The greatest portion of the parts withstood,
By the close structure of th' arterial blood,
Whose narrow meshes stop the grosser food. Blackmore.
TO MESH. v. a. [from the noun.] To catch in a net; to ensnare.
The flies by chance mesh in her hair,
By the bright radiance thrown From her clear eyes, rich jewels were,
They so like diamonds shone. Drayton.
ME'SHY. adj. [from mesh.] Reticulated; of net-work.
Some build his house, but thence his issue barre,
Some make his meshy bed, but leave his rest. Carew.
Caught in the meshy snare, in vain they beat Their idle wings. Thomson.
ME'SLIN. n. f. [from mesler, French, to mix; or rather corruptly pronounced for mescellane. See MASLIN.] Mixed corn:
as, wheat and rie.
What reason is there which should but induce, and therefore much less enforce, us to think, that care of old diffimi-litude between the people of God and the heathen nations about them, was any more the cause of forbidding them to put on garments of sundry stuff, than of charging them withal not to sow their fields with meslin. Hooker, b. iv.
If work for the thresher ye mind for to have,
Of wheat and of meslin unthresh'd go save. Tusser.
MESOLIV'YCS. n. f. [μεσολιευς.] A precious stone, black, with a streak of white in the middle. Diad.
MESOLOGARITHMS. n. f. [μεσολογος, λόγος, and αριθμος.]
The logarithms of the sines and tangents, so denominated by Kepler. Harris.
MESOMELAS. n. f. [μεσομελας.] A precious stone with a black vein parting every colour in the midst. Bailey.
ME'SPITE. n. f. [probably misprinted for mesprise; mespris, Fr.]
Contempt; scorn.
Mammon was much displeas'd, yet note he chose
But bear the rigour of his bold mesprise,
And thence him forward led, him further to entice. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

MET

- MESS. n. f. [mei, old French; messo, Italian; missus, Latin;
mes, Gothick; mere, Saxon, a dish.] A dish; a quantity of food sent to table together.
The bounteous hufwife, nature, on each bush Lays her full mes before you. Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.
Now your traveller,
He and his toothpick at my worship's mes. Shakspeare.
I had as lief you should tell me of a mes of porridge.
Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Herbs, and other country messes. Milton.
Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses.
Had either of the crimes been cooked to their palates, they might have changed messes. Decay of Piety.
From him he next receives it thick or thin,
As pure a mess almost as it came in. Pope.
TO MESS. v. n. To eat; to feed.
ME'SSAGE. n. f. [messager, Fr.] An errand; any thing committed to another to be told to a third.
She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words so wise do make their way,
To bear the message of her spright. Spenser, Sonnet 81.
May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears! Shakspeare.
She is fair, and, fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues; sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages. Shakspeare.
Gently hast thou told
Thy message, which might else in telling wound,
And in performing end us. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
Let the minister be low, his interest inconsiderable, the word will suffer for his sake; the message will still find reception according to the dignity of the messenger. South.
The welcome message made, was soon receiv'd;
'Twas to be with'd and hop'd, but scarce believ'd. Dryden.
ME'SSENGER. n. f. [messager, French.] One who carries an errand; one who comes from another to a third; one who brings an account or foretoken of any thing; an harbinger;
a forerunner.
Came running in, much like a man difmaid,
A messenger with letters, which his message said. Fa. Qu.
You grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shakspeare.
Run after that same peevish messenger,
The duke's man. Shakspeare.
The earl dispatched messengers one after another to the king, with an account of what he heard and believed he saw, and yet thought not fit to stay for an answer. Clarendon.
Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd. Pope.
MESSIAH. n. f. [from the Hebrew.] The Anointed; the Christ; the Saviour of the world; the Prince of peace.
Great and publick opposition the magistrates made against Jesus the man of Nazareth, when he appeared as the Messiah. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
MESSIEURS. n. f. [Fr. plural of monsieur.] Sirs; gentlemen.
ME'SSMATE. n. f. [messi and mate.] One who eats at the same table.
ME'SSUAGE. n. f. [messuagium, law Latin; formed perhaps messuage by mistake of the n in court-hand for u, they being written alike, messuage from maison, French.] The house and ground set apart for household uses.
MET, the preterite and part of meet.
A set of very well-meaning gentlemen in England, not to be met with in other countries, take it for granted they can never be in the wrong so long as they can oppose ministers of state. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 48.
METAGRAMMATISM. n. f. [μεταγραμματισμος.] A dissolution of a name truly written into its letters, as its elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial transposition, without addition, subtraction, or change of any letter into different words;
making some perfect sense applicable to the person named.
Camden's Remains.
METABASIS. n. f. [Greek.] In rhetoric, a figure by which the orator passes from one thing to another. Diad.
METABOLA. n. f. [μεταβολη.] In medicine, a change of time, air, or disease.
METACARPUS. n. f. [μετακαρπιον.] In anatomy, a bone of the arm made up of four bones, which are joined to the fingers. Diad.
The conjunction is called synarthrosis; as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wifeman's Surgery.
METACARPAL. adj. [from metacarpus.] Belonging to the me-tacarpus. Diad.
It will facilitate the separation in the joint, when you cut the finger from the metacarpal bone. Sharp's Surgery.
ME'TAL. n. f. [metal, French; metallum, Latin.]
We understand by the term metal a firm, heavy, and hard substance, opaque, fusible by fire, and concreting again when 16 K cold

MET

cold into a solid body such as it was before, which is malleable under the hammer, and is of a bright, glossy, and glittering substance where newly cut or broken. The metals are six in number: 1. gold; 2. silver; 3. copper; 4. tin; 5. iron; and, 6. lead; of which gold is the heaviest, lead the second in weight, then silver, then copper, and iron is the lightest except tin: some have added mercury or quicksilver to the number of metals; but as it wants malleability, the criterion of metals, it is more properly ranked among the semi metals.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fining metals, that the melted metal run not out. Moxon.

2. Courage; spirit. In this sense it is more frequently written mettle. See METTLE.

Being glad to find their companions had so much metal, after a long debate the major part carried it. Clarendon.

3. Upon this signification the following ambiguity is founded.

Both kinds of metal he prepar'd,
Either to give blows or to ward;
Courage and steel both of great force,
Prepar'd for better or for worse. Hadibras, p. i.

METALÉTSIS. n. f. [μεταλλεύσις.] A continuation of a trope in one word through a succession of significations. Bailey.

METALLICAL. adj. [from metallum, Lat. metallique, French.]

METALLICK. adj. Partaking of metal; containing metal; consisting of metal.

The antients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or fusibility, seem to have resolved it to nobler use; an art now utterly lost. Watson's Architecture.

The lofty lines abound with endless store
Of min'ral treasure, and metallick oar. Blackmore.

METALLIFEROUS. adj. [metallum and fero, Latin.] Producing metals. Dict.

METALLINE. adj. [from metal.]

1. Impregnated with metal.

Metalline waters have virtual cold in them; put therefore wood or clay into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 84.

2. Consisting of metal.

Though the quicksilver were brought to a very close and lovely metalline cylinder, not interrupted by interperfed bubbles, yet having caused the air to be again drawn out of the receiver, several little bubbles disclosed themselves. Boyle.

METALLIST. n. f. [from metal; metalliste, Fr.] A worker in metals; or skilled in metals.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fining metals, that the melted metal run not out; it is made of quick lime and ox blood. Moxon's Mech. Exercit.

METALLOGRAPHY. n. f. [metallum and γραφή.] An account or description of metals. Dict.

METALLURGIST. n. f. [metallum and ἔργον.] A worker in metals.

METALLURGY. n. f. [metallum and ἔργον.] The art of working metals, or separating them from their ore.

TO METAMORPHOSE. v. a. [metamorphose, Fr. μεταμορφώσις.] To change the form or shape of any thing.

Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me;
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time. Shakespeare.

They became degenerate and metamorphos'd like Nebuchadnezzar, who, though he had the face of a man, had the heart of a beast. Davies on Ireland.

The impossibility to conceive so great a prince and favourite to suddenly metamorphos'd into travellers, with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Watson's Buckingham.

From such rude principles our form began;
And earth was metamorphos'd into man. Dryden's Ovid.

METAMORPHOSIS. n. f. [metamorphose, Fr. μεταμορφώσις.] 1. Transformation; change of shape.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the cause of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Obscure talk is grown so common, that one would think we were fallen into an age of metamorphosis, and that the brutes did not only poetically but really speak. Gou. Tongue.

The fifteenth book is the master-piece of the whole metamorphosis. Dryden.

What! my noble colonel in metamorphosis! On what occasion are you transformed? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

There are probable machines in epick poems, where the gods are no less actors than the men; but the less credible sort, such as metamorphoses, are far more rare. Pope's Odyssey.

2. It is applied, by Harvey, to the changes an animal undergoes, both in its formation and growth; and by several to the various shapes some insects in particular pass through, as the silkworm, and the like.

METAPHOR. n. f. [metaphore, Fr. μεταφορά.] The application of a word to an use to which, in its original import, it cannot be put: as, he bridles his anger; he deadens the sound; the spring awakes the flowers. A metaphor is a simile comprized in a word; the spring putting in action the powers of vegetation, which were torpid in the winter, as the powers of a sleeping animal are excited by awaking him.

MET

The work of tragedy is on the passions, and in a dialogue; both of them abhor strong metaphors, in which the epopœa delights. Dryden's Ded. to Virgil's Æneis.

METAPHORICAL. adj. [metaphorique, Fr. from metaphor.]

METAPHORICK. adj. Not literal; not according to the primitive meaning of the word; figurative.

The words which were do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use. Hooker.

METAPHRA'SE. n. f. [μεταφράσις.] A mere verbal translation from one language into another.

This translation is not so loose as paraphrase, nor so close as metaphor.

METAPHRA'ST. n. f. [metaphraste, Fr. μεταφραστής.] A literal translator; one who translates word for word from one language into another.

METAPHYSICK. adj.

1. Verbed in metaphysics; relating to metaphysics.

2. In Shakespeare it means supernatural or preternatural.

He thee higher,
To chaffise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round, Which fate, and metaphysical aid, doth seem
To have crown'd thee withal. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

METAPHYSICK. n. f. [metaphysique, Fr. μεταφυσική.] On-METAPHYSICKS. adj. tology; the doctrine of the general affections of substances existing.

The mathematicks and the metaphysicks,
Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you. Shakespeare.

Call her the metaphysicks of her sex,
And say the tortures wits, as quartsans vex Physicians. Cleveland.

If fight be caused by intromission, or receiving in, the form of contrary species should be received confusedly together, which how absurd it is, Aristotle shews in his metaphysicks. Peacham on Drawing.

See physick beg the Stagyrite's defence!
See metaphysick call for aid on sense! Pope's Dunciad.

The topics of ontology or metaphysick, are cause, effect, action, passion, identity, opposition, subject, adjunct, and sign. Watts's Logick.

METAPHYSIS. n. f. [μεταφύσις.] Transformation; metamorphosis. Dict.

His disease was a dangerous asthma; the cause a metastasis, or translation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey on Consumption.

METATARSAL. adj. [from metatarsus.] Belonging to the metatarsus.

The bones of the toes, and part only of the metatarsal bones, may be carious; in which case cut off only so much of the foot as is disordered. Sharp's Surgery.

METATARSUS. n. f. [μέτα and ταρσός.] The middle of the foot, which is composed of five small bones connected to those of the first part of the foot. Dict.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining the tarsus to the metatarsus. Wiseham's Surgery.

METATHESIS. n. f. [μετάθεσις.] A transposition.

TO METE. v. a. [metor, Latin.] To measure; to reduce to measure.

I will divide Shechem, and mete the valley of Succoth. Psal.

To measure any distance by a line, apply some known measure wherewith to mete it. Holder.

Though you many ways pursue
To find their length, you'll never mete the true,
But thus; take all that space the sun
Meters out, when every daily round is run. Creech.

METEWAND. n. f. [mete and wand, or wand.] A staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken.

METRYARD. n. f. tain length wherewith measures are taken.

A true touchstone, a sure meteward lieth before their eyes. Asham's Schoolmaster.

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in meteward, weight, or measure. Lev. xix. 35.

TO METEMPSYCHO'SE. v. a. [from metempsychosis.] To transmute from body to body. A word not received.

The souls of usurers after their death, Lucian affirms to be metempsychos'd, or translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain years, for poor men to take their pennyworth out of their bones. Peacham on Blazing.

METEMPSYCHOSIS. n. f. [μετεμψύχωσις.] The transmigration of souls from body to body.

From the opinion of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death Orpheus the musician became a swan. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

ME'TEOR. n. f. [meteo, Fr. météore.] Any bodies in the air or sky that are of a flux and transitory nature. Lock'd

MET

Look'd he or red, or pale, or sad, or merrily?
What observation mad'st thou in this case? Shakespeare.

Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face?

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star must rise upon the horizon of Ireland; for there had the like meteor shone influence before. Bacon's Henry VII.

These burning fits but meteors be;
Whole matter in thee soon is spent:
Thy beauty, and all parts which are in thee, Danne.
Are an unchangeable firmament.

Then flaming meteor, hung in air, were seen,
And thunders rattled through a sky serene. Dryden's Æn.

Why was I rais'd the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies, and blazing as I travell'd,
Till all my fires were spent; and then cast downward
To be trod out by Cæsar? Dryden's All for Love.

O poet, thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
Which did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.

METEOROLOGICAL. adj. [from meteorology.] Relating to the doctrine of meteors.

Many others are considerable in meteorological divinity. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.

Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be new-come guests, or old inhabitants in heaven, or meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Hewel's Vocal Forest.

METEOROLOGIST. n. f. [from meteorology.] A man skilled in meteors, or studious of them.

The meteorologist observe, that amongst the four elements which are the ingredients of all sublunary creatures, there is a notable correspondency. Hewel's Vocal Forest.

METEOROLOGY. n. f. [μετεωρολογία and λόγος.] The doctrine of meteors.

In animals we deny not a natural meteorology, or innate presentation of wind and weather. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

METEOROUS. adj. [from meteor.] Having the nature of a meteor.

From the o'er hill
To their fix station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous, as ev'ning mist, Ris'n from a river. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

ME'TER. n. f. [from mete.] A measurer: as, a coal-meter, a land-meter.

METHEGLIN. n. f. [meddyghyn, Welsh, from medd and glyn, glutinare ait Minshew, vel a meddyg medicus & llyn potus quia potus medicinalis.] Drink made of honey boiled with water and fermented.

White handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.
—Honey, and milk, and sugar, there is three.
—Nay then two treys; and if you grow so nice, Methbegins, wort, and malmsey. Shakespeare.

T' allay the strength and hardness of the wine,
And with old Bacchus new methbegins join. Dryden.

METHINKS, verb impersonal. [me and thinks.] This is imagined to be a Norman corruption, the French being apt to confound me and I. I think; it seems to me; meseems. See MESEEMS, which is more strictly grammatical, though less in use. Methinks was used even by those who used likewise meseems.

In all ages poets have been had in special reputation, and, methinks, not without great cause; for, besides their sweet inventions, and most witty lays, they have always used to set forth the praises of the good and virtuous. Spenser on Ireland.

If he choose out some expression which does not vitiate the sense, I suppose he may stretch his chain to such a latitude; but by innovation of thoughts, methinks, he breaks it. Dryd.

There is another circumstance, which, methinks, gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul, in regard to what passes in dreams, that innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her. Addison's Spect. N° 487.

Methinks already I your tears survey. Pope.

METHOD. n. f. [methode, Fr. méthode.]

Method, taken in the largest sense, implies the placing of several things, or performing several operations in such an order as is most convenient to attain some end. Watts.

To see wherein the harm which they feel consisteth, the seeds from which it sprang, and the method of curing it, belongeth to a skill the study whereof is full of toil, and the practice beset with difficulties. Hooker, b. v.

If you will jest with me know my aspect,
And fashion your demeanour to my looks,
Or I will beat this method in your conscience. Shakespeare.

It will be in vain to talk to you concerning the method I think best to be observed in schools. Locke on Education.

Notwithstanding a faculty be born with us, there are several methods for cultivating and improving it, and without which it will be very uncertain. Addison's Spect. N° 409.

METHO'DICAL. adj. [methodique, Fr. from method.] Ranged or proceeding in due or just order.

MET

The observations follow one another without that methodical regularity requisite in a prose author. Addison's Spect.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them where he pleases; to us, perhaps, not without the appearance of irretrievable confusion; but, with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers.

Let me appear, great Sir, I pray, Methodical in what I say. Addison's Rosamon.

METHO'DICALLY. adv. [from methodical.] According to method and order.

All the rules of painting are methodically, concisely, and clearly delivered in this treatise. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To begin methodically, I should enjoin you travel; for absence doth remove the cause, removing the object. Suckling.

TO METHO'DISE. v. a. [from method.] To regulate; to dispose in order.

Resolv'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
The royal spy retir'd unseen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen,
And methodize revenge. Dryden's Boccace.

The man who does not know how to methodize his thoughts, has always a barren superfluity of words; the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves. Speator, N° 476.

One who brings with him any observations which he has made in his reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodized and explained, in the works of a good critic. Addison's Spect. N° 291.

Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd,
Are nature still, but nature methodiz'd. Pope.

ME'THODIST. n. f. [from method.]

1. A physician who practices by theory.

Our warriest physicians, not only chemists but methodists, give it inwardly in several constitutions and distempers. Boyle.

2. One of a new kind of puritans lately arisen, so called from their profession to live by rules and in constant method.

METHOUGHT, the preterite of methinks. See METHINKS and MESEEMS. I thought; it appeared to me. I know not that any author has meseemed, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from meseems.

Methought, a serpent eat my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey. Shakespeare.

Since I fought
By pray'r th' offended deity t' appease;
Kneel'd, and before him humbly'd all my heart.
Methought, I saw him placable, and mild;
Bending his ear: persuasion in me grew
That I was heard with favour; peace return'd Home to my breast; and to my memory
His promise, "That thy feed shall bruise our foe." Milt.

In these
I found not what, methought, I wanted still. Milton.

Methought I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'erpass, but knew not how. Dryden.

METONYMICAL. adj. [from metonymy.] Put by metonymy for something else.

METONYMICALLY. adv. [from metonymical.] By metonymy; not literally.

The disposition of the coloured body, as that modifies the light, may be called by the name of a colour metonymically, or efficiently; that is, in regard of its turning the light that rebounds from it, or passes through it, into this or that particular colour. Boyle on Colours.

METONYMY. n. f. [metonymie, Fr. μετωνυμία.] A rhetorical figure, by which one word is put for another, as the matter for the material; he died by steel, that is, by a sword.

They differ only as cause and effect, which by a metonymy usual in all sorts of authors, are frequently put one for another. Tillotson.

METOPOSCOPY. n. f. [metoposcopia, Fr. μέτροπος and σκόπη.] The study of physiognomy; the art of knowing the characters of men by the countenance.

METRE. n. f. [metrum, Latin; μέτρον.] Speech confined to a certain number and harmonick disposition of syllables; verse; measure; numbers.

For the metre sake, some words be driven awry which require a straighter placing in plain prose. Asham's Schoolmaster.

He taught his Romans in much better metre,
To laugh at fools. Pope.

ME'TRICAL. adj. [metricus, Latin; metrique, Fr.] Pertaining to metre or numbers.

METROPOLIS. n. f. [metropolis, Latin; metropole, French; πόλις and πόλις.] The mother city; the chief-city of any country or district.

His eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen: or some renown'd metropolis,
With glittering spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton.

Reduc'd in careful watch Round their metropolis. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

We stopped at Favia, that was once the metropolis of a kingdom, but at present a poor town. Addison on Italy.

METROPOLITAN.

MEW

METROPOLITAN. n. f. [metropolitanus, Latin.] A bishop of the mother church; an archbishop.
He was promoted to Canterbury upon the death of Dr. Bancroft, that metropolitan, who understood the church excellently, and countenanced men of the greatest parts in learning. Clarendon.
METROPOLITAN. adj. Belonging to a metropolis.
Their patriarch, of a covetous desire to enrich himself, had forborn to institute metropolitan bishops. Raleigh.
METROPOLITICAL. adj. [from metropolis.] Chief or principal of cities.
He fearing the power of the Christians was gone as far as Gratia, the metropolitan city of Stiria. Knolles.
METTLE. n. f. [corrupted from metel, but commonly written so when the metaphorical sense is used.]
1. Spirit; spiriteliness; courage.
What a blunt fellow is this grown to be?
He was quick mettle when he went to school. Shakespeare.
I had rather go with fir priest than fir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
Upon this heaviness of the king's forces, interpreted to be fear and want of mettle, divers resorted to the feditious. Hayward's Edw. VI.
He had given so frequent testimony of signal courage in several actions, that his mettle was never suspected. Clarendon.
Tis more to guide than spur the mule's steed,
Refrain his fury, than provoke his speed;
The winged courier, like a generous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course. Pope.
2. Substance: this at least should be metel.
Oh thou! whose self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud-child, arrogant man, is puff, Engenders the black toad, and adder blue. Shakespeare.
METTLED. adj. [from mettle.] Spiritly; courageous; full of ardour; full of fire.
Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never. Benj. Johnson.
Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled reeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison.
METTLESOME. adj. [from mettle.] Spiritly; lively; gay; brisk; airy; fiery; courageous.
Their force differs from true spirit, as much as a vicious from a mettlesome horse. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 61.
METTLESOMELY. adv. [from mettlesome.] With spiriteliness.
MEW. n. f. [mue, French.]
1. A cage; an inclosure; a place where any thing is confined.
Forth-coming from her darksome mew,
Where the all day did hide her hated hew. Fairy Queen.
There then she does transform to monstrous hues,
And horribly mis-shapes with ugly fights,
Captiv'd eternally in iron mews,
And darksome dens, where Titan his face never shows. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Her lofty hand would of itself refuse
To touch the dainty needle or nice thread;
She hated chambers, closets, secret mews,
And in broad fields preserv'd her maidenhead. Fairfax.
2. [Map, Saxon.] A sea-fowl.
Among the first fort we reckon coots, fanderlings, and meaves. Carew.
The vessel ticks, and shews her open'd side,
And on her shatter'd mast the mews in triumph ride. Dryden.
MEW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shut up; to confine; to imprison; to inclose.
He in dark corners mew'd, Mutter'd of matters as their books them shew'd. Hubbard.
Unto the bush her eye did sudden glance,
In which vain Braggadocio was mew'd,
And saw it stir. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Why should your fears, which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up Your tender kinsman. Shakespeare. King John.
Fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun;
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon. Shakespeare.
More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakespeare.
Feign them sick,
Close mew'd in their sedans, for fear of air. Dryden's Juv.
It is not possible to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all his life mew him up in a closet, and never let him go into company. Locke.
2. To shed the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers.
I should discourse of hawks, and then treat of their ayries, mewings, culling, and renovation of their feathers. Warton.

The sun hath mew'd his beams from off his lamp,
And majesty defac'd the royal stamp. Clarendon.
Nine times the moon had mew'd her horns, at length
With travel weary, unsuppl'd with strength,
And with the burden of her womb oppress'd, Sabean fields afford her needful rest. Dryden.
3. [Miauler, French.] To cry as a cat.
Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew, the dog will have his day. Shakespeare.
They are not improveable beyond their own genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark. Grew's Col.

Marry this is micbing malice; it means mischief. Shakespeare.
MICHER. n. f. [from miche.] A lazy loiterer, who skulks about in corners and by-places, and keeps out of sight; a hedge-creeper. Hammer.
Micb or Mick is still retained in the cant language for an indolent, lazy fellow.
How tenderly her tender hands between
In ivory cage she did the miche bind. Sidney.
Shall the blessed fun of heav'n prove a miche, and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked. Shakespeare's Henry IV, p. i.
MICKLE. adj. [micele, Saxon.] Much; great. Obsolete. In Scotland it is pronounced mickle.
This reade is rife that oftentime Great cumburs fall unsoft:
In humble dales is footing fast,
The trode is not so tickle,
And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his mis not mickle. Spenser's Pastoral.
Many a little makes a mickle. Camden's Remains.
If I to-day die with Frenchmens rage,
To-morrow I shall die with mickle age. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
O, mickle is the pow'ful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities. Shakespeare.
All this tract that fronts the falling fun,
A noble peer, of mickle trust and power,
Has in his charge. Milton.
MICROCOSM. n. f. [μικροσ and κόσμος.] The little world.
Man is so called as being imagined, by some fanciful philosophers, to have in him something analogous to the four elements.
You see this in the map of my microcosm. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
She to whom this world must itself refer,
As suburbs, or the microcosm of her;
She, she is dead; she's dead, when thou know'st this,
Thou know'st how lame a creeple this world is. Donne.
As in this our microcosm, the heart
Heat, spirit, motions gives to every part:
So Rome's victorious influence did disperse
All her own virtues through the universe. Denham.
Philosophers say, that man is a microcosm, or little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great; and body natural may be compared to the body politic. Swift.

MICROSCOPE. n. f. [μικρο and σκοπεω; microscope, Fr.] An optick instrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwise be seen.
If the eye were so acute as to rival the finest microscopes, and to discern the smallest hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curse, and not a blessing, to us; it would make all things appear rugged and deformed; the most finely polished crystal would be uneven and rough; the sight of our own selves would affright us; the smoothest skin would be beset all over with ragged scales and bristly hairs. Bentley.
The critick eye, that microscope of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit. Dunciad, b. iv.
MICROMETER. n. f. [μικρο and μετρον; micrometre, French.] An instrument contrived to measure small spaces.
MICROSCOPICAL. n. f. [from microscope.]
MICROSCOPICK. n. f. [from microscope.]
1. Made by a microscope.
Make microscopical observations of the figure and bulk of the constituent parts of all fluids. Arbutnot and Pope.
2. Affixed by a microscope.
Evading even the microscopick eye!
Full nature swarms with life. Thomson's Summer.
3. Resembling a microscope.
Why has not man a microscopick eye?
For this plain reason, Man is not a fly.
Say what the use, were finer opticks given,
T'inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n? Pope.
MID. adj. [contracted from middle, or derived from mid, Dutch.]
1. Middle; equally between two extremes.
No more the mounting larks, while Daphne sings, Shall, lifting in mid air, suspend their wings. Pope.

Unweary'd, through th'num'rous host he past. Rowe.
2. It is much used in composition.
MID-COURSE. n. f. [from mid and course.] Middle of the way.
Why in the East
Darkness ere day's mid-course? and morning light,
More orient in yon western cloud, that draws
O'er the blue firmament a radiant white. Milton.
MID-DAY. n. f. [from mid and day.] Noon; meridian.
Who shoots at the mid-day fun, though he be sure he shall never hit the mark, yet as sure he is he shall shoot higher than he who aims but at a bush. Sidney, b. ii.
His sparkling eyes, replete with awful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces. Shakespeare.
Who have before, or shall write after thee,
Their works, though roughly labour'd, will be Like infancy or age to man's firm stay,
Or early or late twilights to mid-day. Donne.
Did he not lead you through the mid-day fun,
And clouds of dust? Did not his temples glow
In the same fultry winds and scorching heats?
Yet the stout fairy 'mongst the middest crowd,
Thought all their glory vain in knightly view. Fa. Qu.
MIDDEST. superl. of mid, middest, midst.
Thought all their glory vain in knightly view. Fa. Qu.
MIDDELE. adj. [miesle, Saxon.]
1. Equally distant from the two extremes.
The lowest virtues draw praise from the common people;
The middle virtues work in them astonishment; but of the highest virtues have no sense. Bacon's Essays.
A middle station of life, within reach of those conveniences which the lower orders of mankind must necessarily want, and yet without embarrassment of greatness. Rogers.
To deliver all his fleet to the Romans, except ten middle-sized brigantines. Arbutnot on Coins.
I like people of middle understanding and middle rank. Sto.
2. Intermediate; intervening.

3. Middle finger; the long finger.
You first introduce the middle finger of the left-hand. Sharp.
MIDDELE. n. f.
1. Part equally distant from two extremities; the part remote from the verge.
There come people down by the middle of the land. Judge.
With roof so low that under it
They never stand, but lie or sit;
And yet so foul, that who is in,
Is to the middle leg in prison. Hudibras, p. i.
2. The time that passes, or events that happen, between the beginning and end.
The causes and designs of an action are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties are the end. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

MIDDLE-AGED. adj. [from middle and age.] Placed about the middle of life.
A middle-aged man, that was half grey, half brown, took a fancy to marry two wives. L'Estrange's Fables.
The middle-aged support fasting the best, because of the oily parts abounding in the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.
I found you a very young man, and left you a middle-aged one: you knew me a middle-aged man, and now I am an old one. Swift to Pope.
MIDDLEMOST. adj. [from middle.] Being in the middle.
Why have not some beasts more than four feet, suppose six, and the middlemost shorter than the rest. More.
The outmost fringe vanished first, and the middlemost next, and the innermost last. Newton's Opticks.
The outward stars, with their systems of planets, must necessarily have descended toward the middlemost system of the universe, whither all would be most strongly attracted from all parts of a finite space. Bentley's Sermons.
MIDDLING. adj. [from middle.]
1. Of middle rank.
A middling sort of a man, left well enough to pass by his father, could never think he had enough so long as any man had more. L'Estrange's Fables.
2. Of moderate size; having moderate qualities of any kind.
The bigness of a church ought to be no greater than that (nt) which the voice of a preacher of middling lungs will easily extend. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
Longinus preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs, to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to any excellence. Dryden.
Middling his head, and prone to earth his view. Tickell.
MIDLAND. adj. [from mid and land.]

He had fifty attendants, young men all, in white fatten, loose coats to the midleg, and stockings of white silk. Bacon.
MIDMOST. adj. [from mid, or contracted from middlemost: this is one of the words which have not a comparative, though they seem to have a superlative degree.] The middle.
Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles hasting up behind. Dryden.
Hear himself repine
At fate's unequal laws; and at the clue,
Which, mercilefs in length, the midmost sifter drew. Dry.
What dulness dropt among her sons imprest,
Like motion, from one circle to the rest:
So from the midmost the nutation spreads
Round, and more round o'er all the sea of heads. Pope.
MIDNIGHT. n. f. [from mid and night.] Milton seems to have accented this last syllable. The noon of night; the depth of night; twelve at night.
To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; so that to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
How now, you secret, black and midnight hags?
What is't you do?
I hope my midnight studies, to make our countries flourish in myfterious and beneficent arts, have not ungratefully affected your intellects. Bacon.
By night he fled, and at midnight returned From compassing the earth; cautious of day. Milton.
After this time came on the midnight of the church, wherein the very names of the councils were forgotten, and men did only dream of what had past. Stillingfleet.
Some solitary cloister will I chuse,
Coarse my attire, and short shall be my sleep,
Broke by the melancholy midnight bell. Dryden's Sp. Fryar.
In all that dark midnight of popery there were still some gleams of light, some witnesses that arose to give testimony to the truth. Atterbury.
They can tell precisely what altitude the dog-star had at midnight or midnoon in Rome when Julius Caesar was slain. Watts's Logick.
MIDRIFT. n. f. [from mid and rift, Saxon.] The diaphragm.
The midriff divides the trunk of the body into two cavities, the thorax and abdomen: it is composed of two muscles; the

Suppose your eyes sent equal rays

Upon two distant pots of ale,

Not knowing which was mild or stale. Prior.MILDERNAX. n. f. Cannabum nauticum.*Angl.*MILDEW. n. f. [milceape, Saxon.]Mildew is a disease that happens in plants, and is caused by a dewy moisture which falls on them, and continuing, for want of the sun's heat, to draw it up, by its acrimony corrodes, gnaws, and spoils, the inmost substance of the plant, and hinders the circulation of the nutritive sap; upon which the leaves begin to fade, and the blossoms and fruit are much prejudiced: or, mildew is rather a concrete substance, which exudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, which is frequently found in great plenty, preying upon this exudation. Others say, that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the Spring and Summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun enough to draw it upwards to any considerable height, nor wind of force strong enough to disperse it: it condenses and falls on plants, and with its thick, clammy substance stops the pores, and by that means prevents perspiration. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants which are exposed to the East, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration; whereby the juices of the plants are concentered upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are inticed thereto, where finding proper nutriment they deposit their eggs, and multiply so fast as to cover the whole surfaces of the plants, and, by corroding the vessels, prevent the motion of the sap. It is observable, that whenever a tree has been greatly affected by this mildew, it seldom recovers it in two or three years, and many times never is intirely clear from it after.Hill.Down fell the mildew of his fugged words. Fairfax.The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or champaign grounds, it seldom cometh.Bacon.Soon blasting mildew black'ned all the grain. Dryden.

Than prais'd for harmful mildness. Shakespeare, King Lear.

MILKY-WAY. n. f. [milky and way.] The galaxy.

The milky-way, or via lactea, is a broad white path or track, encompassing the whole heavens, and extending itself in some places with a double path, but for the most part with a single one. Some of the ancients, as Aristotle, imagined that this path consisted only of a certain exhalation hanging in the air; but, by the telescopic observations of this age, it hath been discovered to consist of an innumerable quantity of fixed stars, different in situation and magnitude, from the confused mixture of whose light its whole colour is supposed to be occasioned. It passes through the constellations of Cassiopeia, Cygnus, Aquila, Perseus, Andromeda, part of Ophiucus and Gemini, in the northern hemisphere; and in the southern it takes in part of Scorpio, Sagittarius, Centaurus, the Argo Navis and the Ara. The galaxy hath usually been the region in which new stars have appeared; as that in Cassiopeia, which was seen in A. D. 1572; that in the breast of the Swan, and another in the knee of Serpentarius; which have appeared for a while, and then become invisible again. Harrist.

Nor need we with a prying eye survey
The distant fizes to find the milky-way:
It forcibly intrudes upon our sight. Creech's Manilius.

How many stars there must be, a naked eye may give us some faint glimpse, but much more a good telescope, directed towards that region of the sky called the milky-way. Ckeyne.

5. MINCINGLY. adv. [from mince.] In small parts; not fully.
Justice requireth nothing mincingly, but all with pressed, and heaped, and even over-enlarged measure. Hooker, b. i.

MIND. n. f. [gemine, Saxon.]
1. The intelligent power.
I am a very foolish, fond old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakefp. King Lear.
This word being often used for the soul giving life, is attributed abusively to madmen, when we say that they are of a distracted mind, instead of a broken understanding: which word, mind, we use also for opinion; as, I am of this or that mind: and sometimes for mens conditions or virtues; as, he is of an honest mind, or a man of a just mind: sometimes for affection; as, I do this for my mind's sake: sometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we have without discourse: oftentimes for spirits, angels, and intelligences: but as it is used in the proper signification, including both the understanding agent and passible, it is described to be a pure, simple, substantial act, not depending upon matter, but having relation to that which is intelligible, as to his first object: or more at large thus; a part or particle of the soul, whereby it doth understand, not depending upon matter, nor needing any organ, free from passion coming from without, and apt to be delivered as eternal from that which is mortal. Raleigh.

2. Liking; choice; inclination; propension; affection.
Our question is, whether all be fin which is done without direction by scripture, and not whether the Israelites did at any time amiss, by following their own minds without asking counsel of God. Hooker, b. ii.
We will consider of your suit.
And come some other time to know our mind. Shakefp.
Being so hard to me that brought your mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind. Shakefp.
I will have nothing else but only this;
And now methinks I have a mind to it. Shakefp.
Be of the same mind one towards another. Rom. xii. 16.
Hast thou a wife after thy mind? forlake her not. Ecclef.
They had a mind to French Britain; but they have let fall their bit. Bacon's War with Spain.
3. Sudden mind arose
In Adam, not to let th' occasion pass,
Given him by this great conference, to know
Of things above this world. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
Waller coasted on the other side of the river, but at such a distance that he had no mind to be engaged. Clarendon.
He had a great mind to do it. Clarendon.
All the arguments to a good life will be very insignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon such cheap terms. Tillotson's Sermons.
Suppose that after eight years peace he hath a mind to infringe any of his treaties, or invade a neighbouring state, what opposition can we make? Addison.
4. Thoughts; sentiments.
Th' ambiguous god,
In these mysterious words, his mind expresseth,
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. Dryden.
5. Opinion.
The earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose as fearing you, it shook. Shakefp.
These men are of the mind, that they have clearer ideas of infinite duration than of infinite space, because God has existed from all eternity; but there is no real matter coextended with infinite space.
The gods permitting traitors to succeed,
Become not parties in an impious deed;
And, by the tyrant's murder, we may find,
That Cato and the gods were of a mind. Graville.
6. Memory; remembrance.
The king knows their disposition; a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
7. When he brings
Over the earth a cloud, will therein set
His triple-coloured bow, whereon to look,
And call to mind his covenant. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
These, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.
The cavern's mouth alone was hard to find,
Because the path diffus'd was out of mind. Dryden.
They will put him in mind of his own waking thoughts, ere these dreams had as yet made their impressions on his fancy. Atterbury's Sermons.
A wholesome law time out of mind;
Had been confirm'd by fate's decree. Swift's Miscel.
8. TO MIND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To mark; to attend.
His mournful plight is swallowed up unawares, Forgetful of his own that minds another's cares. Fa. Q.
Not then mistrust, but tender love enjoins,
That I should mind thee oft; and mind thou me! Milton.
If, in the raving of a frantick muse,
And *mind*ing more his verses than his way,
Any of these should drop into a well. Roscommon.
Cease to request me; let us mind our way;
Another song requires another day. Dryden.
He is daily called upon by the word, the ministers, and inward suggestions of the holy spirit, to attend to those prospects, and mind the things that belong to his peace. Rogers.
2. To put in mind; to remind.
Let me be punished, that have *mind*ed you
Of what you should forget. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
I desire to mind those persons of what Saint Austin hath said. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
This *mind*s me of a cobbling colouel of famous memory. C. E. Strange.
I shall only mind him, that the contrary supposition, if it could be proved, is of little use.
3. To incline; to be disposed.
When one of them mindeth to go into rebellion, he will convey away all his lordships to scotches in trust. Speiser.
4. MINDLESS.

MIN

MIND'ED. adj. [from mind.] Disposed; inclined; affected.
We come to know
How you stand *mind*ed in the weighty difference Between the king and you. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Whose fellowship therefore unmeet for thee,
Good reason was thou freely should'st dislike,
And be so *mind*ed still. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.
If men were *mind*ed to live virtuously, to believe a God would be no hindrance to any such design, but very much for its advancement. Tillotson's Sermons.
Pyrrhus is nobly *mind*ed; and I faint
Would live to thank him. Philips.
MINDFUL. adj. [from mind and full.] Attentive; having memory.
I acknowledge the usefulness of your directions, and I promise you to be mindful of your admonitions. Hammond.
MINDFULLY. adv. [from mindful.] Attentively.
MINDFULNESS. n. f. [from mindful.] Attention; regard.
MINDLESS. adj. [from mind.]
1. Inattentive; regardless.
Curfed Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forget now thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them. Shakefp.
As the strong eagle in the silent wood,
Mindless of warlike rage, and hostile care,
Plays round the rocky cliff, or crystal flood. Prior.
2. Not endued with a mind; having no intellectual powers.
Pronounce thee a gross low, a mindless slave,
Or else a hovering temporizer. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.
God first made angels bodiless, pure, minds;
Then other things, which mindless bodies be:
Last, he made man. Davies.
MIND-STRICKEN. adj. [from mind and stricken.] Moved; affected in his mind.
He had been so mind-stricken by the beauty of virtue in that noble king, though not born his subject, he ever professed himself his servant. Sidney, b. ii.
MINE. n. f. [from min, Saxon; mein, German; men, French; meus, Latin.] It was anciently the practice to use my before a consonant and mine before a vowel, which euphony still requires to be observed. Mine is always used when the substantive precedes: as, this is my cat; this cat is mine. Belonging to me.
The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. Shakefp. Macbeth.
Thou art a foul in bliss, but I am bound Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakefp. King Lear.
When a wife man gives thee better counsel, give me mine Shakefp. King Lear.
If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.
A friend of mine is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him. Shakefp.
That palm is mine. Luke xi. 6.
MINE. n. f. [from mine, French; mwyn or mun, Welsh, from maen lapis, in the plural meini.]
1. A place or cavern in the earth which contains metals or minerals.
Though freighter bounds your fortune did confine,
In your large heart was found a wealthy mine. Waller.
A workman, to avoid idleness, worked in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which was little esteemed. Boyle.
A mine-digger may meet with a gem, which he knows not what to make of. Boyle.
The heedless mine-man aims only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible. Boyle.
2. A cavern dug under any fortification that it may sink for want of support, or, in modern war, that powder may be lodged in it, which being fired at a proper time, whatever is over it may be blown up and destroyed.
By what eclipse shall that sun be defaced?
What mine hath erst thrown down so fair a tower?
What sacrifice hath such a faint disgrace'd? Sidney, b. ii.
Build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down, and fill up the mines that you have digged. Whitgift.
Others to a city strong Lay siege, encamp'd; by batt'ry, scale and mine, Assailing. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
TO MINE. v. n. [from the noun.] To dig mines or burrows; to form any hollows underground.
The ranging flock in stately beeches dwells;
The climbing goats on hills securely feed;
The mining conies throud in rocky cells. Wotton.
Of this various matter the terrestrial globe consists, from its surface down to the greatest depth we ever dig or mine.
TO MINE. v. a. To sap; to ruin by mines; to destroy by slow degrees, or secret means.
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
While rank corruption mining all within, Infects unseen. Shakefp. Hamlet.

MIN

They mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth; but the citizens made a countermine. Hayward.
The slow fever mines the constitution. Bolingbroke.
MINER. n. f. [from mineur, Fr. from mine.]
1. One that digs for metals.
By me kings palaces are push'd to ground,
And miners crush'd beneath their mines are found. Dryden.
2. One who makes military mines.
As the bombardier levels his mischief at cities, the miner busies himself in ruining private houses. Tatler.
MINERAL. n. f. [from minerals, Lat.] Fossile body; matter dug out of mines. All metals are minerals, but all minerals are not metals.
She did confess, she had
For you a mortal mineral; which, being took,
Should by the minute feed on life, and ling'ring
By inches waste you. Shakefp. Cymbeline.
The minerals of the kingdom, of lead, iron, copper, and tin, are of great value. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton's Par. Lost.
Minerals; nitre with vitriol; common salt with alum; and sulphur with vitriol. Woodward.
MINERAL. adj. Consisting of fossile bodies.
By experience upon bodies in any mine, a man may conjecture at the metallick or mineral ingredients of any mass found there. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
MINERALIST. adj. [from mineral.] One skilled or employed in minerals.
A mine-digger may meet with a gem or a mineral, which he knows not what to make of till he shews it a jeweller or a mineralist. Boyle.
The metals and minerals which are lodged in the perpendicular intervals do still grow, to speak in the mineralist's phrase, or receive additional increase. Woodward.
MINERALOGIST. n. f. [from mineralogie, French; from mineral and λογος.] One who discourses on minerals.
Many authors deny it, and the exactest mineralogists have rejected it. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
MINERALOGY. n. f. [from mineral and λογος.] The doctrine of minerals.
MINER. n. f. A skin with specks of white. Anf.
TO MINGLE. v. a. To mix; to join; to compound; to unite with something so as to make one mass.
Wo unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to minge strong drink. Isa. v. 22.
Lament with me! with me your sorrows join,
And minle your united tears with mine! Watts.
The best of us appear contented with a mingled, imperfect virtue. Rogers's Sermons.
Our sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, we are ready to minge with ourselves, and cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts's Logic.
He woos the bird of Jove
To minge woes with his. Thomson's Spring, l. 1035.
TO MINGLE. v. n. To be mixed; to be united with.
Ourself will minge with society,
And play the humble host. Shakefp. Macbeth.
Alcimus had defiled himself wilfully in the times of their minging with the Gentiles. 2 Mac. xiv. 13.
Nor priests, nor statesmen,
Could have completed such an ill as that,
If women had not mingled in the mischief. Rowe.
She, when the saw her sister nymphs, suppress'd
Her rising fears, and mingled with the rest. Addison.
MINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Mixture; medley; confused mass.
Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make minge with our rattling tabourines. Shakefp.
Neither can I defend my Spanish Fryar; though the comical parts are diverting, and the serious moving, yet they are of an unnatural minge. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
MINGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who mingles.
MINIATURE. n. f. [from miniature, French.]
1. Representation in a small compass; representation less than the reality.
The water, with twenty bubbles, not content to have the picture of their face in large, would in each of these bubbles set forth the miniature of them. Sidney, b. ii.
If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature: in order to keep our posterity from dwindling, we have instituted a tall club. Addison's Guard.
The hidden ways
Of nature would'st thou know? how first she frames
All things in miniature? thy specular orb
Apply to well dissected kernels: lo!
Strange forms arise, in each a little plant
Unfolds its boughs: observe the slender threads
Of first beginning trees, their roots, their leaves,
In narrow feeds describ'd. Philips.
2. Gay

MIN

2. Gay has improperly made it a substantive.
Here shall the pencil bid its colours flow,
And make a miniature creation grow. Gay.
- MINIKIN. adj. 1. Small; diminutive. Used in slight contempt. Rogers.
Sleepest, or wakest thou, jolly shepherd,
Thy sheep be in the corn;
And for one blast of thy minikin mouth,
Thy sheep shall take no harm. Shaksp. King Lear.
- MINIM. n. f. A small fort of pins. Shaksp. King Lear.
MINIM. n. f. [from minimus, Lat.]
1. A small being; a dwarf. Not all
Minimus of nature; some of serpent-kind, Wond'rous in length, and corpulence, involv'd
Their snaky folds, and added wings. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. This word is applied, in the northern counties, to a small fort of fish, which they pronounce menim. See MINNOW.
MINIMUS. n. f. [Latin.] A being of the least size.
Get you gone, you dwarf,
You minimus of hind'ring knot-grass made;
You bead, you acorn. Shaksp. King Lear.
- MINION. n. f. [ignon, French.] A favourite; a darling; a low dependant; one who pleases rather than benefits. A word of contempt, or of slight and familiar kindness.
Minion, said she; indeed I was a pretty one in those days;
I see a number of lads that love you. Sidney, b. ii.
They were made great courtiers, and in the way of minions, when advancement, the most mortal offence to envy, stirred up their former friend to overthrow them. Sidney.
One, who had been a special minion of Andromanas, hated us for having dispossessed him of her heart. Sidney, b. ii.
Go rate thy minions;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign. Shaksp. Henry VI.
- Duncan's horses,
Beauteous and swift, the minions of the race,
Turn'd wild in nature. Shaksp. Macbeth.
His company must do his minions grace, Whillt I at home starve for a merry look. Shaksp. King Lear.
Edward sent one army into Ireland; not for conquest, but to guard the person of his minion Piers Gaveston. Davies.
If a man should launch into the history of human nature, we should find the very minions of princes linked in conspiracies against their master. L'Estrange's Fables.
The drowsy tyrant by his minions led,
To regal rage devotes some patriot's head. Swift.
- MINIOUS. adj. [from minium, Latin.] Of the colour of red lead or vermilion.
Some conceive, that the Red Sea receiveth a red and minious tincture from springs that fall into it. Bacon.
- TO MINISH. v. a. [from diminish; minus, Latin.] To lessen; to lop; to impair.
Ye shall not minish ought from your bricks of your daily task. Exod. v. 19.
They are minished and brought low through oppression.
Psal. cvii. 39.
- Another law was to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipp'd, minished, or impaired coins of silver, not to be current in payments. Bacon's Henry VII.
- MINISTER. n. f. [minister, Latin; ministre, Fr.]
1. An agent; one who is employed to any end; one who acts not by any inherent authority, but under another.
You, whom virtue hath made the princeps of felicity, be not the minister of ruin. Sidney, b. ii.
Rumble thy belly full; spit fire, spout rain,
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters;
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness:
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shaksp. King Lear.
Th' infernal minister advanc'd, Seiz'd the due victim. Dryden's Theodore and Honoria.
Other spirits govern'd by the will,
Shoot through their tracks, and distant muscles fill;
This sovereign, by his arbitrary nod,
Restrains or sends his ministers abroad. Blackmore.
2. One who is employed in the administration of government.
Kings must be answerable to God, but the ministers to kings, whose eyes, ears, and hands they are, must be answerable to God and man. Bacon.
3. One who serves at the altar; one who performs sacerdotal functions.
Epaphras, a faithful minister of Christ. 1 Col. i. 7.
The ministers are always preaching, and the governors putting forth edicts against dancing and gaming. Addison.
The ministers of the gospel are especially required to shine as lights in the world, because the distinction of their station

- renders their conduct more observable; and the presumption of their knowledge, and the dignity of their office, gives a peculiar force and authority to their example. Rogers.
4. A delegate; an official.
If wrongfully
Let God revenge; for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister. Shaksp. Rich. II.
5. An agent from a foreign power, without the dignity of an ambassador.
TO MINISTER. v. a. [ministrare, Latin.] To give; to supply;
to afford.
All the customs of the Irish would minister occasion of a most ample discourse of the original and antiquity of that people. Spenser on Ireland.
Now he that ministereth seed to the sower, both minister bread for your food and multiply your seed sown. 2 Cor. ix.
The wounded patient bears
The artist's hand that ministers the cure. Ottway's Orphan.
- TO MINISTER. v. n.
1. To attend; to serve in any office.
Certain of them had the charge of the ministering vessels, to bring them in and out by tale. 1 Chron. ix. 28.
They which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple. 1 Cor. ix. 13.
- At table Eve
Minister'd naked, and their flowing cups
With pleasant liquors crown'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
2. To give medicines.
Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain? Shak. Macb.
3. To give supplies of things needful; to give assistance; to contribute; to conduce.
Others ministered unto him of their substance. Luke viii. 3.
He who has a soul wholly void of gratitude, should set his soul to learn of his body; for all the parts of that minister to one another. South's Sermons.
There is no truth which a man may more evidently make out than the existence of a God; yet he that shall content himself with things as they minister to us pleasures and passions, and not make enquiry a little farther into their causes and ends, may live long without any notion of such a being. Locke.
Those good men, who take such pleasure in relieving the miserable for Christ's sake, would not have been less forward to minister unto Christ himself. Atterbury.
Fasting is not absolutely good, but relatively, and as it ministers to other virtues. Smalridge's Sermons.
4. To attend on the service of God.
Whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering.
Rom. xii. 7.
- MINISTERIAL. adj. [from minister.]
1. Attendant; acting at command.
Understanding is required in a man; courage and vivacity in the lion; service, and ministerial officiousness, in the ox.
Bacon's Vulgar Errors.
- From effences unseen, celestial names,
Enlight'ning spirits, and ministerial flames,
Lift we our reason to that sovereign cause,
Who blest'd the whole with life. Prior.
2. Acting under superior authority.
For the ministerial officers in court there must be an eye unto them. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Abstinence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial cause of moral effects; as it recalls us from the world, and gives a serious turn to our thoughts. Rogers's Sermons.
3. Sacerdotal; belonging to the ecclesiastics or their office.
These speeches of Jerom and Chrysostom plainly allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use. Hooker.
4. Pertaining to ministers of state, or persons in subordinate authority.
MINISTRY. n. f. [ministerium, Lat.] Office; service. This word is now contracted to ministry, but used by Milton as four syllables.
They that will have their chamber filled with a good scent, make some odoriferous water be blown about it by their servants mouths that are dextrous in that ministry. Digby.
- This temple to frequent
With ministries due, and solemn rites. Milton, b. xii.
- MINISTRAL. adj. [from minister.] Pertaining to a minister.
MINISTRANTS. adj. [from minister.] Attendant; acting at command.
Him thrones, and pow'rs,
Princedom, and dominations ministrant, Accompany'd to heav'n-gate. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Ministrant to their queen with busy care, Pope.
Four faithful handmaids the soft robes prepare.

MINISTR'ATION.

MIN

- MINISTR'ATION. n. f. [from ministrare, Latin.]
1. Agency; intervention; office of an agent delegated or commissioned by another.
God made him the instrument of his providence to me, as he hath made his own land to him, with this difference, that God, by his ministratio to me, intends to do him a favour.
Taylor's living holy.
Though sometimes effected by the immediate fiat of the divine will, yet I think they are most ordinarily done by the ministratio of angels. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
2. Service; office; ecclesiastical function.
If the present ministratio be more glorious than the former, the minister is more holy. Atterbury's Sermons.
- MINIUM. n. f. [Latin.]
Melt lead in a broad earthen vessel unglazed, and stir it continually till it be calcined into a grey powder; this is called the calx of lead; continue the fire, stirring it in the same manner, and it becomes yellow; in this state it is used in painting, and is called mafficot or mafficot; after this put it into a reverberatory furnace, and it will calcine further, and become of a fine red, which is the common minium or red lead: among the ancients minium was the name for cinnabar: the modern minium is used externally, and is excellent in cleansing and healing old ulcers. Hill's Mat. Med.
- MINISTRY. n. f. [contracted from ministry; ministerium, Lat.]
1. Office; service.
So far is an indistinction of all persons, and, by consequence, an anarchy of all things, so far from being agreeable to the will of God, declared in his great household, the world, and especially in all the ministries of his proper household the church, that there was never yet any time, I believe, since it was a number, when some of its members were not more feared than others. Sprat's Sermons.
2. Office of one set apart to preach; ecclesiastical function.
Their ministry perform'd, and race well run,
Their doctrine and their story written left,
They die. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
Saint Paul was miraculously called to the ministry of the gospel, and had the whole doctrine of the gospel from God by immediate revelation; and was appointed the apostle of the Gentiles for propagating it in the heathen world. Locke.
3. Agency; interposition.
The natural world he made after a miraculous manner; but directs the affairs of it ever since by standing rules, and the ordinary ministry of second causes.
The poets introduced the ministry of the gods, and taught the separate existence of human souls. Bentley's Sermons.
4. Business.
He safe from loud alarms,
Abhor'd the wicked ministry of arms. Dryden's JEn.
5. Persons employed in the public affairs of a state.
I converse in full freedom with many considerable men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as happening to have made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Swift.
- MINNOCK. n. f. Of this word I know not the precise meaning. It is not unlikely that minnock and minx are originally the same word.
An ass's hole I fixed on his head;
Anon his Thistle must be answered,
And forth my minnock comes. Shaksp. King Lear.
- MINNOW. n. f. [minne, French.] A very small fish; a pink:
a corruption of minim, which see.
Hear you this triton of the minnows? Shaksp. King Lear.
The minnow, when he is in perfect season, and not sick, which is only presently after spawning, hath a kind of dappled or waved colour, like a panther, on his sides, inclining to a greenish and sky-colour, his belly being milk-white, and his back almost black or blackish: he is a sharp biter at a small worm in hot weather, and in the Spring they make excellent minnow tansies; for being washed well in salt, and their heads and tails cut off, and their guts taken out, being fried with yolks of eggs, primroses and tansy. Walton's Angler.
The nimble turning of the minnow is the perfection of min- now fishing. Walton's Angler.
- MINOR. adj. [Latin.]
1. Petty; inconsiderable.
If there are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto faith, yet is it not safe to condemn inferior fallacies. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
2. Less; smaller.
They altered this custom from cases of high concernment to the most trivial debates, the minor part ordinarily entering their protest. Clarendon.
The difference of a third part in so large and collective an account is not strange, if we consider how differently they are set forth in minor and less mistakeable numbers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- MINOR. n. f.
1. One under age; one whose youth cannot yet allow him to manage his own affairs.

MIN

- King Richard the Second, the first ten years of his reign; was a minor. Davies on Ireland.
He and his muse might be minors, but the liberties are full grown. Collier's View of the Stage.
- Long as the year's dull circle seems to run,
When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one. Pope.
The noblest blood of England having been shed in the grand rebellion, many great families became extinct, or supported only by minors. Swift.
A minor or infant cannot be said to be contumacious, because he cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardian. Atterbury's Sermons.
2. The second or particular proposition in the syllogism.
The second or minor proposition was, that this kingdom hath cause of just fear of overthrow from Spain. Bacon.
He supposed that a philosopher's brain was like a forest;
where ideas are ranged like animals of several kinds; that the major is the male, the minor the female, which copulate by the middle term, and engender the conclusion. Arbuthnot.
- TO MINORATE. v. a. [from minor, Lat.] To lessen; to diminish. A word not yet admitted into the language.
This it doth not only by the advantageous assistance of a tube, but by shewing in what degrees distance minimates the object. Glanville's Scept.
- MINORATION. n. f. [from minorare.] The act of lessening; diminution; decrease. A word not admitted.
Bodies emit virtue without abatement of weight, as is most evident in the loadstone, whose efficiencies are communicable without a minoration of gravity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
We hope the mercies of God will consider our degenerated integrity unto some minoration of our offences. Brown.
- MINORITY. n. f. [minorité, Fr. from minor, Latin.]
1. The state of being under age.
I mov'd the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter, in the minority of them both. Shaksp. King Lear.
He is young, and his minority
Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster. Shaksp. King Lear.
These changes in religion should be staid, until the king were of years to govern by himself: this the people apprehending worse than it was, a question was raised, whether, during the king's minority, such alterations might be made or
no. Howard's Edw. VI.
Henry the Eighth, doubting he might die in the minority of his son, procured an act to pass, that no statute made during the minority of the king should bind him or his successors, except it were confirmed by the king at his full age. But the first act that passed in king Edward the Sixth's time, was a repeal of that former act; at which time nevertheless the king was minor. Bacon's Henry VII.
If there be evidence, that it is not many ages since nature was in her minority, this may be taken for a good proof that she is not eternal. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Their counsels are warlike and ambitious, though something tempered by the minority of their king. Temple.
2. The state of being less.
From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a minority, or smallness in the excretion. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
3. The smaller number: as, the minority held for that question in opposition to the majority.
MINOTAUR. n. f. [minotaure, French; minos and taurus.] A monster invented by the poets, half man and half bull, kept in Dædalus's labyrinth.
Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth,
There minotaurs, and ugly treasons lurk. Shaksp. King Lear.
- MINSTER. n. f. [munstre, Saxon.] A monastery; an ecclesiastical fraternity; a cathedral church. The word is yet retained at York and Lichfield.
MINSTREL. n. f. [menstrel, Spanish; menestrallus, low Latin.]
A musician; one who plays upon instruments.
Hark how the minstrels 'gin to shrill aloud
Their merry musick that rebounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling croud,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser's Epithal.
I will give you the minstrel.
—Then I will give you the serving creature. Shaksp. King Lear.
I to the vulgar am become a jest;
Esteemed as a minstrel at a feast. Sandys's Paraphrase.
- These fellows
Were once the minstrels of a country show;
Follow'd the prizes through each paltry town,
By trumpet-cheeks and bloated faces known.
Often our fears and poets have confest'd,
That musick's force can tame the furious beast;
His rage; the lion drop his crested mane,
Attentive to the song; the lynx forget
His wrath to man, and lick the minstrel's feet. Prior.
- MINSTRELSEY. n. f. [from minstrel.]
1. Musick; instrumental harmony.
Apollo's self will envy at his play,
And all the world applaud his minstrelse. Davies.

That loving wretch that swears,
Tis not the bodies marry, but the minds,
Which he in her angelick finds,
Would swear as justly, that he hears,
In that day's rude hoarse minstrelsy, the spheres. Donne.
I began,
Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
To meditate my rural minstrelsy,
Till fancy had her fill. Milton.
2. A number of musicians.
Ministring spirits train'd up in feast, and song!
Such hast thou arm'd the minstrelsy of heav'n. Milton.
MINT. n. f. [munte, Saxon; menthe, Fr. mentha, Latin.] A plant.
The mint is a verticillate plant with labiated flowers, consisting of one leaf, whose upper-lip is arched, and the under-lip divided into three parts; but both of them are so cut, that the flower seems to be divided into four parts, the two lips scarcely appearing: these flowers are collected into thick whorles in some species, but in others they grow in a spike; each flower having four seeds succeeding it, which are inclosed in the flower-cup: it hath a creeping root, and the whole plant has a strong aromatick scent. Miller.
Then rubb'd it o'er with newly-gather'd mint,
A wholesome herb, that breath'd a grateful scent. Dryden.
MINT. n. f. [munte, Dutch; myneken, to coin, Saxon.]
1. The place where money is coined.
What is a person's name or face, that receives all his reputation from the mint, and would never have been known had there not been medals. Addison on ancient Medals.
2. Any place of invention.
A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain. Shakespeare.
As the mint of calumny are at work, a great number of curious inventions are issued out, which grow current among the party. Addison's Freeholder, No. 7.
To MINT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To coin; to stamp money.
Another law was, to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipped coins of silver not to be current in payments, without giving any remedy of weight; and so to set the mint on work, and to give way to new coins of silver which should be then minted. Bacon's Henry VII.
2. To invent; to forge.
Look into the titles whereby they hold these new portions of the crown, and you will find them of such natures as may be easily minted. Bacon's War with Spain.
MINTAGE. n. f. [from mint.]
1. That which is coined or stamped.
Its pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmoulding reasons mintage
Character'd in the face. Milton.
2. The duty paid for coining.
Sterling ought to be of so pure silver as is called leaf silver, and the mint must add other weight, if the silver be not pure. C Camden's Remains.
MINTMAN. n. f. [mint and man.] One skilled in coining.
He that thinketh Spain to be some great over-match for this estate, is no good mintman; but takes greatness of kingdoms according to their bulk and currency, and not after their intrinsic value. Bacon's War with Spain.
MINTMASTER. n. f. [mint and master.]
1. One who presides in coining.
That which is coined, as mintmasters confessed, is alloyed with about a twelfth part of copper. Boyle.
2. One who invents.
The great mintmasters of these terms, the schoolmen and metaphysicians, have wherewithal to content him. Locke.
MINUET. n. f. [menuet, French.] A stately regular dance.
The tender creature could not see his fate,
With whom she'd danc'd a minuet so late. Stepney.
John Trot has the assurance to set up for a minuet dancer. Spectator, No. 308.
MINUM. n. f.
1. [With printers.] A small sort of printing letter.
2. [With musicians.] A note of flow time, two of which make a semibreve, as two crotchets make a minim; two quavers a crotchet, and two semiquavers a quaver. Bailey.
Oh, he's the courageous captain of compliments; he fights as you sing prickongs, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests his minum, one, two, and the third in your bosom. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
MINUTE. adj. [minutus, Lat.] Small; little; slender; small in bulk; small in consequence.
Some minute philosophers pretend,
That with our days our pains and pleasures end. Denham.
Such an universal superintendency has the eye and hand of providence over all, even the most minute and inconsiderable things. South's Sermons.

Into small parts the wond'rous stone divide,
Ten thousand of minute size express
The same propension which the large possels. Blackmore.
The serum is attenuated by circulation, so as to pass into the minute channels, and become fit nutriment for the body. Arbutnot on Aliments.
In all divisions we should consider the larger and more immediate parts of the subject, and not divide it at once into the more minute and remote parts. Watts's Logic.
MINUTE. n. f. [minutum, Latin.]
1. The sixtieth part of an hour.
This man so complete,
Who was enroll'd 'mongst wonders, and when we,
Almost with list'ning raptur'd, could not find His hour of speech a minute. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
2. Any small space of time.
They walk'd about me ev'ry minute while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart. Shakespeare.
The speed of gods
Time counts not, though with swiftest minutes wing'd.
Gods! that the world should turn
On minutes and on moments. Denham's Sophy.
Experience does every minute prove the sad truth of this assertion. South's Sermons.
Tell her, that I some certainty may bring;
I go this minute to attend the king. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
3. The first draught of any agreement in writing; this is common in the Scottish law: as, have you made a minute of that contract?
To MINUTE. v. a. [minuter, French.] To set down in short hints.
I no sooner heard this critick talk of my works, but I minuted what he had said, and resolv'd to enlarge the plan of my speculations. Spectator, No. 48.
MINUTE-BOOK. n. f. [minute and book.] Book of short hints.
MINUTE-GLASS. n. f. [minute and glass.] Glass of which the hand measures a minute.
MINUTELY. adv. [from minute.] To a small point; exactly; to the least part; nicely.
In this posture of mind it was impossible for him to keep that flow pace, and observe minutely that order of ranging all he said, from which results an obvious periphrasis. Locke.
Change of night and day,
And of the seasons ever stealing round,
Minutely faithful. Thomson's Summer, l. 40.
MINUTELY. adv. [from minute, the substantive.]
1. Every minute; with very little time intervening.
What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, refunding for ever in our ears? As if it were minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity till they arise from so mortiferous a state. Hammond's Fundamentals.
2. In the following passage it seems rather to be an adjective, as hourly is both the adverb and adjective.
Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breach,
Those he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
MINUTENESS. n. f. [from minute.] Smallness; exility; inconsiderableness.
The animal spirit and insensible particles never fall under our senses by reason of their minuteness. Bentley's Sermons.
MINUTE-WATCH. n. f. [minute and watch.] A watch in which minutes are more distinctly marked than in common watches which reckon by the hour.
Casting our eyes upon a minute-watch, we found that from the beginning of the pumping, about two minutes after the coals had been put in glowing, to the total disappearing of the fire, there had pass'd but three minutes. Boyle.
MINX. n. f. [contracted, I suppose, from minnick.] A young, pert, wanton girl.
Lewd minx!
Come, go with me apart. Shakespeare.
Some torches bore, some links,
Before the proud virago minx. Hudibras, p. ii.
She, when but a tender minx, began
To hold the door, but now sets up for man. Dryden.
MIRACLE. n. f. [miracle, Fr. miraculum, Latin.]
1. A wonder; something above human power.
Nothing almost fees miracles. Shakespeare's King Lear.
But misery.
Virtuous and holy, chosen from above,
To work exceeding miracles on earth. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Be not offended, nature's miracle,
Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
2. [In theology.] An effect above human or natural power, performed in attestation of some truth.
The miracles of our Lord are peculiarly eminent above the lying wonders of demons, in that they were not made out of vain ostentation of power, and to raise unprofitable amazement; but for the real benefit and advantage of men, by feeding feeding the hungry, healing all sorts of diseases, ejecting of devils, and reviving the dead. Bentley's Sermons.

MIRACULOUS. adj. [miraculeux, Fr. from miracle.] Done by miracle; produced by miracle; effected by power more than natural.
Arithmetical progression might easily demonstrate how fast mankind would increase, overpassing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years from seventy unto six hundred thousand able men. Raleigh's Essays.
Restore this day, for thy great name,
Unto his ancient and miraculous right. Herbert.
Why this strength
Mirac'ulous yet remaining in those locks?
His might continues in thee not for naught. Milton's Ag.
At the first planting of the Christian religion in the world, God was pleas'd to accompany it with a miraculous power. Tillotson.
MIRACULOUSLY. adv. [from miraculous.] By miracle; by power above that of nature.
It was a singular providence of God, to draw those northern heathen nations down into those Christian parts, where they might receive Christianity, and to mingle nations so remote miraculously, to make one blood and kindred of all people, and each to have knowledge of him. Spenfer on Ireland.
Turnus was to be slain that very day; and Aeneas, wounded as he was, could not have engaged him in single combat, unless his hurt had been miraculously healed. Dryden.
MIRACULOUSNESS. n. f. [from miraculous.] The state of being effected by miracle; superiority to natural power.
MIRADOR. n. f. [Spanish, from mirar, to look.] A balcony; a gallery whence ladies see shows.
Mean time your valiant son, who had before Gain'd fame, rode round, to ev'ry mirador;
Beneath each lady's stand a stop he made,
And bowing, took th' applauses which they paid. Dryden.
MIRE. n. f. [moer, Dutch.] Mud; dirt at the bottom of water.
He his rider from her lofty steed
Would have cast down, and trod in dirty mire. Fa. Qu.
Here's that, which is too weak to be a finner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire. Shak. Timon of Athens.
I'm Ralph himself, your truffy squire,
Wh' has dragg'd your donship out o' th' mire. Hudibras.
I appeal to any man's reason, whether it be not better that there should be a distinction of land and sea, than that all should be mire and water. More's Antidote against Atheism.
Now plung'd in mire, now by sharp brambles torn.
To MIRE. v. a. [from the noun.] To whelm in the mud; to soil with mud.
Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates?
Who smere'd thus, and mire'd with infamy,
I might have laid no part of it in mine. Shakespeare.
MIRE. n. f. [myr, Welsh; myra, Saxon; miers, Dutch.] An ant; a pismire.
MIRINESS. n. f. [from miry.] Dirtiness; fullness of mire.
MIRKSOME. n. f. [morch, dark, Danish.] In the derivatives of this set, no regular orthography is observed; it is common to write murky, to which the rest ought to conform.] Dark; obscure.
Through mirksome air her ready way she makes. F. Qu.
MIRROR. n. f. [mirroir, French; mirar, Spanish, to look.]
1. A looking-glass; any thing which exhibits representations of objects by reflection.
And in his waters which your mirror make,
Behold your faces as the crystal bright. Spenfer's Epith.
That pow'r which gave me eyes the world to view,
To view myself infus'd an inward light,
Whereby my soul, as by a mirror true,
Of her own form may take a perfect sight. Davies.
Less bright the moon,
But opposite in level'd West was set
His mirror, with full face borrowing her light
From him. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
Mirror of poets, mirror of our age,
Which her whole face beholding on thy stage,
Pleas'd and displeas'd with her own faults, endures
A remedy like those whom music cures. Waller.
By chance he spy'd a mirror while he spoke,
And gazing there beheld his alter'd look;
Wond'ring, he saw his features and his hue,
So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew.
Late as I rang'd the crystal wilds of air,
In the clear mirror of thy ruling star,
I saw, alas! some dread event impend.
It is used for pattern; for that on which the eye ought to be fixed; an exemplar; an archetype.
The works of nature are no less exact, than if the did both behold and study how to express some absolute shape or mirror always present before her. Hooker, b. i.

MIRROR-STONE. n. f. [selenites, Lat.] A kind of transparent stone. Ainsl.
MIRTH. n. f. [mýrþe, Saxon.] Merriment; jollity; gaiety; laughter.
To give a kingdom for a mirth, to sit,
And keep the turn of tripping with a slave. Shakespeare.
Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure
The table round. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
His eye begets occasion for his wit;
For every object that the one doth catch,
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest. Shakespeare.
Most of the appearing mirth in the world is not mirth but art: the wounded spirit is not seen, but walks under a disguise. South's Sermons.
With genial joy to warm the soul,
Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl. Pope's Odyssey.
MIRTHFUL. adj. [mirth and full.] Merry; gay; cheerful.
No simple word,
That shall be utter'd at our mirthful board,
Shall make us sad next morning. B. Johnson, Epigr. 101.
The feast was serv'd; the bowl was crown'd;
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round. Prior.
MIRTHLESS. adj. [from mirth.] Joyless; cheerless.
MIRY. adj. [from mire.]
1. Deep in mud; muddy.
Thou should'st have heard how her horse fell, and the under her horse: thou should'st have heard in how miry a place, how she was bemoiled. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
All men who lived lazy lives, and died natural deaths, by sickness or by age, went into vast caves under-ground, all dark and miry, full of noisome creatures, and there grovel'd in endless stench and misery. Temple.
Deep, through a miry lane she pick'd her way,
Above her ankle rose the chalky clay. Gay's Trivia.
So have I seen ill-coupled hounds Drag different ways in miry grounds. Swift.
2. Consisting of mire.
Shall thou and I sit round about some fountain,
Looking all downwards to behold our checks,
How they are stain'd like meadows, yet not dry,
With miry slime left on them by a flood? Shakespeare.
Mis, an inseparable particle used in composition to mark an ill sense, or depravation of the meaning: as, chance, luck; mischance, ill luck; computation, reckoning; miscomputation, false reckoning; to like, to be pleased; to mistake, to be offended; from mes in Teutonic and French, used in the same sense. Of this it is difficult to give all the examples; but those that follow will sufficiently explain it.
MISACCEPTATION. n. f. [mis and acceptance.] The act of taking in a wrong sense.
MISADVENTURE. n. f. [mesaventure, Fr. mis and adventure.]
1. Mischance; misfortune; ill luck; bad fortune.
Your looks are pale and wild, and do import Some misadventure. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
When a commander, either upon necessity or misadventure, falleth into danger, it much advanceth both his reputation and enterprise, if bravely he behaveth himself. Hayward.
The body consisted, after all the losses and misadventures, of no less than six thousand foot. Clarendon, b. viii.
Distinguish betwixt actions of misadventure and of design. L'Estrange's Fables.
The trouble of a misadventure now and then, that reaches not his innocence or reputation, may not be an ill way to teach him more caution. Locke on Education.
2. [In law.] Manslaughter. Ainsl.
MISADVENTURED. adj. [from misadventure.] Unfortunate.
From forth the fatal loins of these two foes,
A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
Whole misadventur'd piteous overthrows
Do with their death bury their parents' strife. Shakespeare.
MISADVISED. adj. [mis and advised.] Ill directed.
MISAIMED. adj. [mis and aim.] Not aimed rightly.
The idle stroke enforcing furious way,
Missing the mark of his misaimed fight,
Did fall to ground. Fairy Queen, b. i.
MISANTHROPE. n. f. [misanthrope, French; μισανθρωπος.]
MISANTHROPOS. n. f. [A hater of mankind.]
I am misanthropos, and hate mankind. Shakespeare.
Alas, poor dean! his only scope
Was to be held a misanthrope;
This into general odium drew him. Swift's Miscel.
MISANTHROPY. n. f. [misanthropie, Fr. from misanthrope.]
Hated of mankind.
MISAPPLICATION. n. f. [mis and application.] Application to a wrong purpose.
The indistinction of many in the community of name, or the misapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

The vigilance of those who preside over these charities is so exemplary, that persons disposed to do good can entertain no suspicions of the misapplication of their bounty. Atterbury. It is our duty to be provident for the future, and wisely to guard against whatever may lead us into misapplications of it. Roger's Sermons.

To MISAPPLY. v. a. [mis and apply.] To apply to wrong purposes.

Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied,
And vice sometime by action's dignified. Shakespeare.
The holy treasure was to be reserved, and issued for holy uses, and not misapplied to any other ends. Hawel.
He that knows, that whiteness is the name of that colour he has observed in snow, will not misapply that word as long as he retains that idea. Locke.

To MISAPPREHEND. v. a. [mis and apprehend.] Not to understand rightly.

That your reasonings may lose none of their force by my misapprehending or misrepresenting them, I shall give the reader your arguments. Locke.

MISAPPREHENSION. n. f. [mis and apprehension.] Mistake; not right apprehension.

It is a good degree of knowledge to be acquainted with the causes of our ignorance: and what we have to say under this head, will equally concern our misapprehensions and errors. Glanville's Scep.

To MISASCRIBE. v. a. [mis and ascribe.] To ascribe falsely.

That may be misascribed to art which is the bare production of nature. Boyle.

To MISASSIGN. v. a. [mis and assign.] To assign erroneously.

We have not misassigned the cause of this phenomenon. Boyle.

To MISBECOME. v. a. [mis and become.] Not to become; to be unbecomely; not to suit.

Either she has a possibility in that which I think impossible, or else impossible loves need not misbecome me. Sidney.

What to the daughter from England?
—Scorn and defiance, slight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not misbecome
The mighty tender. Shak. Henry V.

That boldness which lads get amongst their play-fellows, has such a mixture of rudeness and an ill-turn'd confidence, that those misbecoming and dissingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned to make way for better principles. Locke.

Portius, thou may'st rely upon my conduct;
Thy father will not act what misbecomes him. Addison.

MISBEGOTTEN. adj. [begot or begotten with mis.] Unlawfully begotten; or irregularly begotten.

Contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood, I spill of thine. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

Your words have taken such pains, as if they labour'd
To bring man-slaughter into form, set quarrelling
Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,
Is valour misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were but newly born. Shakespeare.

The misbegotten infant grows,
And, ripe for birth, distends with deadly throes
The swelling rind, with unavailing strife,
To leave the wooden womb, and pushes into life. Dryden.

To MISBEHAVE. v. n. [mis and behave.] To act ill or improperly.

MISBEHAVED. adj. [mis and behave.] Untaught; ill-bred; uncivil.

Happiness courts thee in her best array;
But, like a misbehav'd and fullen wench,
Thou pout'st upon thy fortune and thy love. Shakespeare.

MISBEHAVIOUR. n. f. [mis and behaviour.] Ill conduct; bad practice.

The misbehaviour of particular persons does not at all affect their cause, since a man may act laudably in some respects, who does not do in others. Addison's Freeholder.

MISBELIEF. n. f. [mis and belief.] False religion; a wrong belief.

MISBELIEVER. n. f. [mis and believer.] One that holds a false religion, or believes wrongly.

Yes, if I drew it with a curs'd intent
To take a misbeliever to my bed, Dryden's Don Sebastian.
It must be so.

To MISCALULATE. v. a. [mis and calculate.] To reckon wrong.

After all the care I have taken, there may be, in such a multitude of passages, several misquoted, misinterpreted, and miscalculated. Arbutnot on Coins.

To MISCALL. v. a. [mis and call.] To name improperly.

My heart will sigh when I miscall it so. Shak. Rich. II.

The third act, which connects propositions and deduceth conclusions from them, the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscall it if we name it reason. Glanville's Scep.

What you miscall their folly is their care. Dryden.

MISCARRIAGE. n. f. [mis and carriage.]

1. Unhappy event of our undertaking; failure; ill conduct. Resolutions of future reforming do not always satisfy justice, nor prevent vengeance for former miscarriages. King Charles.

When a counsellor, to save himself,
Would lay miscarriages upon his prince,
Exposing him to publick rage and hate,
O, 'tis an act as infamously base,
As, should a common soldier sculk behind,
And thrust his general in the front of war. Dryd. Sp. Fr.

If the neglect or abuse of the liberty he had, to examine what would really make for his happiness, misleads him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

A great part of that time which the inhabitants of the former earth had to spare, and whereof they made so ill use, was now employed in digging and plowing; and the excess of fertility which contributed so much to their miscarriages, was retracted and cut off. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. ii.

Your cures aloud you tell,
But wisely your miscarriages conceal. Garth's Dispensary.

How, alas! will he appear in that awful day, when even the failings and miscarriages of the righteous shall not be concealed, though the mercy of God be magnified in their pardon. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Abortion; act of bringing forth before the time.

There must be flying and death, as well as miscarriages and abortions; for there died many women with child. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

To MISCARRY. v. n. [mis and carry.]

1. To fail; not to have the intended event; not to succeed; to be lost in an enterprise; not to reach the effect intended.

Have you not heard of Frederick, the great soldier, who miscarried at sea? Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Our sister's man is certainly miscarried. Shakespeare.

—It is determin'd, not concluded yet:
But if it must be if the king miscarry. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

If you miscarry,
Your business of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low. Shak. Merchant of Venice.

I could mention some projects which I have brought to maturity, and others which have miscarried. Addison's Guard.

No wonder that this expedient should so often miscarry, which requires so much art and genius to arrive at any perfection in it. Swift's Miscel.

2. To have an abortion.

Give them a miscarrying womb and dry breasts. Hof. ix. 14.

So many politic conceptions so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for a delivery, do yet, in the issue, miscarry and prove abortive. South's Sermons.

His wife miscarried; but the abortion proved a female fetus. Pope and Arbuthnot's Mari. Scrib.

You have proved yourself more tender of another's embryos, than the fondest mothers are of their own; for you have preserved every thing that I miscarried of. Pope.

MISCELLANEOUS. n. f. [miscellaneous, Lat. This is corrupted into miscellin or miscellin.] Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye.

It is thought to be of use to make some miscellane in corn; as if you sow a few beans with wheat, your wheat will be the better. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 670.

MISCELLANEOUS. adj. [miscellaneous, Latin.] Mingled; composed of various kinds.

Being miscellaneous in many things, he is to be received with suspicion; for such as amass all relations must err in some, and without offence be unbeliev'd in many. Brown.

And what the people but a herd confus'd,
A miscellaneous rabble, who extol Things vulgar, and well weigh'd scarce worth the praise. Milton's Par. Reg. b. ii.

MISCELLANEOUSNESS. n. f. [miscellaneous.] Composition of various kinds.

MISCELLANY. adj. [miscellaneous, Latin.] Mixed of various kinds.

The power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.

MISCELLANY. n. f. A mass formed out of various kinds.

I must acquit myself of the presumption of having lent my name to recommend any miscellanies or works of other men. Pope.

When they have join'd their pericranies,
Out skips a book of miscellanies. Swift.

To MISCAST. v. a. [mis and cast.] To take a wrong account of.

Men miscast their days; for in their age they deduce the account not from the day of their birth, but the year of our Lord wherein they were born. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MISCHANCE. n. f. [mis and chance.] Ill luck; ill fortune; misfortune; mishap.

The lady Cecropia sent him to excuse the mischance of her beasts ranging in that dangerous fort. Sidney, b. i.

Extreme dealing had driven her to put herself with a great lady, by which occasion she had stumbled upon such mischances as were little for the honour of her family. Sidney, b. ii.

View these letters, full of bad mischance. Shakespeare. Henry VI. p. i.

France is revolted.

Sleep rock thy brain,
And never come mischance between us twain. Shakespeare.

Nothing can be a reasonable ground of despising a man but some fault chargeable upon him; and nothing can be a fault that is not naturally in a man's power to prevent; otherwise, it is a man's unhappiness, his mischance or calamity, but not his fault. South's Sermons.

MISCHIEF. n. f. [mischievous, old French.]

1. Harm; hurt; whatever is ill and injuriously done.

The law in that case punisheth the thought; for better is a mischievous than an inconvenience. Spenser on Ireland.

Come you murthering ministers!
Wherever in your fightless substances
You wait on nature's mischiefs. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Thy tongue devieth mischiefs. Psal. lii. 2.

Was I the cause of mischiefs, or the man, Whose lawless lust the fatal war began? Dryden's Zen.

Come not thou with mischiefs-making beauty,
To interpose between us, look not on him. Royce.

2. Ill consequence; vexatious affair.

States call in foreigners to assist them against a common enemy; but the mischiefs was, these allies would never allow that the common enemy was subdued. Swift.

To MISCHIEF. v. a. [mis and chance.] To hurt; to harm; to injure.

If the greatest inward heat be not sweetened by meekness, or not governed by prudence, can it bring to our souls any benefit? rather it mischiefs them. Spenser's Sermons.

MISCHIEFMAKER. n. f. [mischievous and make.] One who causes mischief.

MISCHIEVOUS. adj. [mischievous.]

1. Harmful; hurtful; destructive; noxious; pernicious; injurious; wicked.

This false, wily, doubling disposition is intolerably mischievous to society. South's Sermons.

I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet;
But mongrel mischievous. Dryden.

He had corrupted or deluded most of his servants, telling them that their master was run mad; that he had disinherited his heir, and was going to settle his estate upon a parish-boy; that if he did not look after his master he would do some very mischievous thing. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

2. Spiteful; malicious.

MISCHIEVOUSLY. adv. [mischievous.] Noxiously; hurtfully; wickedly.

Not was the cruel destiny content
To sweep at once her life and beauty too;
But like a harden'd felon took a pride
To work more mischievous flow,
And plundered first, and then destroy'd. Dryden.

MISCHIEVOUSNESS. n. f. [mischievous.] Hurtfulness; perniciousness; wickedness.

Compare the harmlessness, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenious pliancy, which is in youth, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the confirmed obstinacy found in an aged, long-practised sinner. South's Sermons.

MISCHIEF. adj. [mischievous, Latin.] Possible to be mingled.

Acid spirits are subtle liquors which come over in distillations, not inflammable, mischievous with water. Arbutnot.

MISCIATION. n. f. [mis and citation.] Unfair or false quotation.

Being charged with miscitation and unfair dealing, it was requisite to say something; for honesty is a tender point. Collier's View of the Stage.

To MISCIATE. v. a. [mis and cite.] To quote wrong.

MISCLAIM. n. f. [mis and claim.] Mistaken claim.

Error, misclaim and forgetfulness, become sutors for some remission of extreme rigour. Bacon.

MISCOMPUTATION. n. f. [mis and computation.] False reckoning.

It was a general misfortune and miscomputation of that time, that the party had so good an opinion of their own reputation and interest. Clarendon.

To MISCONCEIVE. v. a. [mis and conceive.] To mis-judge; to have a false notion of.

Ne let false whisperers, breeding hidden fears,
Break gentle sleep with misconceived doubt. Spenser.

Our endeavour is not so much to overthrow them with whom we contend, as to yield them just and reasonable causes of those things, which, for want of due consideration herefore, they misconceived. Hooker, b. v.

MIS

MISCONCEIVED Joan of Arc hath been
A virgin from her tender infancy. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

MISCONCEIT. n. f. [mis and conceit, and conception.] False opinion; wrong notion.

The other which instead of it we are required to accept, is only by error and misconceit named the ordinance of Jesus Christ; no one proof as yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in very deed. Hooker.

It cannot be that our knowledge should be other than an heap of misconception and error. Glanville's Scep.

Great errors and dangers result out of a misconception of the names of things. Harvey on Consumptions.

It will be a great satisfaction to see those pieces of most ancient history, which have been chiefly preserved in scripture, confirmed anew, and freed from those misconceptions or misrepresentations which made them fit uneasy upon the spirits even of the best men. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

MISCONDUCT. n. f. [mis and conduct.] Ill behaviour; ill management.

They are industriously proclaimed and aggravated by such as are guilty or innocent of the same slips or misconducts in their own behaviour. Addison's Spect. N° 256.

It highly concerned them to reflect, how great obligations both the memory of their past misconducts, and their present advantages, laid on them, to walk with care and circumspection. Rogers's Sermons.

To MISCONDUCT. v. a. [mis and conduct.] To manage amiss; to carry on wrong.

MISCONJECTURE. n. f. [mis and conjecture.] A wrong guess.

I hope they will plausibly receive our attempts, or candidly correct our misconjectures. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To MISCONJECTURE. v. a. [mis and conjecture.] To guess wrong.

MISCONSTRUCTION. n. f. [mis and construction.] Wrong interpretation of words or things.

It pleas'd the king his matter very lately
To strike at me upon his misconstruction,
When he conjunct, and flatt'ring his displeasure, Tript me behind. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Others conceive the literal acceptation to be a misconstruction of the symbolical expression. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Those words were very weakly inserted where they are so liable to misconstruction. Stillingfleet.

To MISCONSTRUCT. v. a. [mis and construct.] To interpret wrong.

That which by right exposition buildeth up Christian faith, being misconstructed breedeth error; between true and false construction the difference reason must shew. Hooker, b. iii.

We would have had you heard
The manner and the purpose of his treasons;
That you might well have signified the same Unto the citizens, who, haply, may Misconstruct us in him. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

Many of the unbelieving Israelites would have misconstructed this story of mankind. Raleigh.

Do not, great Sir, misconstruct his intent,
Nor call rebellion what was prudent care,
To guard himself by necessary war. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

A virtuous emperor was much afflicted to find his actions misconstructed and defamed by a party. Addison.

MISCONTINUANCE. n. f. [mis and continuance.] Cessation; intermission.

To MISCOUNSEL. v. a. [mis and counsel.] To advise wrong.

Every thing that is begun with reason
Will come by ready means unto his end,
But things miscounted must needs miswend. Spenser.

To MISCOUNT. v. a. [miscount, French, mis and count.] To reckon wrong.

MISCREANCE. n. f. [miscreant or mescreance, suspicion, French.] Unbelief; false faith; adherence to a false religion.

If thou wilt renounce thy miscreance,
And my true liegeman yield thyself for ay,
Life will I grant thee for thy valiance. Spenser.

The more usual causes of deprivation are murder, manslaughter, heresy, miscreancy, atheism, simony. Ayliffe.

MISCREANT. n. f. [miscreant, French.]

1. One that holds a false faith; one who believes in false gods.

Their prophets justly condemned them as an adulterous seed, and a wicked generation of miscreants, which had forsaken the living God. Hooker, b. v.

2. A vile wretch.

Now by Apollo, king,
Thou swear'st thy gods in vain.
—O vassal! miscreant!
If extraordinary lenity proves ineffectual, those miscreants ought to be made sensible that our constitution is armed with force. Addison's Freeholder, N° 50.

MIS

MISCREATE. adj. [mis and created.] Formed unnaturally or illegitimately; made as by a blunder of nature.

Then made he head against his enemies,
And Ymmer flew or Logris miscreate. Fa. Q. b. ii.

Effoons he took that miscreated fair,
And that false other sprite, on whom he spread
A seeming body of the subtle air. Spenser.

That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading;
With opening titles miscreate, whose right Suits not in native colours with the truth. Shakespeare.

MISDEED. n. f. [mis and deed.] Evil action.
O God,
If thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

Evils, which our own misdeeds have wrought.
Chas'd from a throne, abandon'd, and exil'd
For foul misdeeds, were punishments too mild. Milton.

To MISDEEM. v. a. [mis and deem.] To judge ill of; to mistake.
All unweeting an enchanter bad
His sense abus'd, and made him to misdeem
My loyalty, not such as it did seem. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Besides, were we unchangeable in will,
And of a wit that nothing could misdeem;
Equal to God, whose wisdom shineth still
And never errs, we might ourselves esteem. Davies.

To MISDEMEAN. v. a. [mis and demean.] To behave ill.
From frailty
And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us, Have misdeem'd yourself. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

MISDEMEANOR. n. f. [mis and demean.] Offence; ill behaviour; something less than an atrocious crime.
The house of commons have only power to censure the members of their own house, in point of election or misdemeanors, in or towards that house. Bacon.

It is no real disgrace to the church merely to lose her privileges, but to forfeit them by her fault or misdeemeanor. South.

These could never have touched the head, or stopped the source of these unhappy misdeemeanors, for which the punishment was sent. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. ii.

MISDEVOTION. n. f. [mis and devotion.] Mistaken piety.
A place, where misdevotion frames
A thousand prayers to fancies, whose very names
The church knew not, heav'n knows not yet. Donne.

MISDIET. n. f. [mis and diet.] Improper food.
A drop through his flesh did flow,
Which by misdiet daily greater grew. Fairy Queen, b. i.

To MISDISTINGUISH. v. a. [mis and distinguish.] To make wrong distinctions.
If we imagine a difference where there is none, because we distinguish where we should not, it may not be denied that we misdistinguish. Hooker, b. iii.

To MISDO. v. a. [mis and do.] To do wrong; to commit a crime; to offend.
Afford me place to shew what recompence
T'wards thee I intend for what I have misdone. Milton.

To MISDO. v. n. To commit faults.
Try the erring soul
Not wilfully misdoing, but unaware Mistaken. Paradise Regain'd, b. i.

The worst is, to think ourselves safe so long as we keep our injuries from the knowledge of men, and out of our own view, without any awe of that all-seeing eye that observes all our misdoings. L'Estrange.

I have misdone, and I endure the smart,
Loth to acknowledge, but more loth to part. Dryden.

MISDOER. n. f. [mis and do.] An offender; a criminal; a malefactor.
Were they not contained in duty with a fear of law, which inflicteth sharp punishments to misdoers, no man should enjoy any thing. Spenser on Ireland.

To MISDOUBT. v. a. [mis and doubt.] To suspect of deceit or danger.
If the only misdoubted me, I were in heaven; for quickly I would bring sufficient assurance. Sidney, b. ii.

I do not misdoubt my wife, but I would be loth to turn them both together; a man may be too confident. Shakespeare.

The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth ev'ry bush;
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd.
Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

If you misdoubt me that I am not free,
I know not how I shall assure you farther. Shakespeare.

To believe his wiles my truth can move,
Is to misdoubt my reason or my love. Dryden.

MISDOUBT. n. f. [mis and doubt.] Suspicion of crime or danger.
He cannot so precisely weed this land,

MIS

As his misdoubts prevent occasion;
His foes are so enrobed with his friends,
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten to and shake a friend. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

2. Irresolution; hesitation.
York, steel thy fearful thoughts,
And change misdoubt to resolution. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

MISE. n. f. [French.] Issue. Law term.
To MISEMPLOY. v. a. [mis and employ.] To use to wrong purposes.
Their frugal fathers gains they misemploy,
And turn to point and pearl, and ev'ry female toy. Dryd.

Some taking things upon trust, misemploy their power by lazily enslaving their minds to the dictates of others. Locke.

That vain and foolish hope, which is misemployed on temporal objects, produces many wrongs. Addison's Spect.

They grew dissolute and prophane; and by misemploying the advantages which God had thrown into their lap, provoked him to withdraw them. Atterbury.

MISEMPLOYMENT. n. f. [mis and employment.] Improper application.
An improvident expence, and misemployment of their time and faculties. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

MISER. n. f. [miser, Latin.]
1. A wretched person; one overwhelmed with calamity.
Do not disdain to carry with you the woful words of a miser now despairing; neither be afraid to appear before her, bearing the base title of the fender. Sidney, b. ii.

I wish that it may not prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune to have met with such a miser as I am. Sidney.

Fair son of Mars, that seek with warlike spoil
And great achievements, great yourself to make, Vouchsafe to stay your steed for humble miser's sake. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. A wretch; a mean fellow.
Decrepit miser! base ignoble wretch!
I am defended of a gentler blood. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

3. A wretch covetous to extremity; one who in wealth makes himself miserable by the fear of poverty.
Though he be dearer to my soul than rest
To weary pilgrims, or to misers gold,
Rather than wrong Castilio I'd forget her. Orson's Orphan.

No silver fancies by dying misers giv'n,
Here brib'd the rage of ill-requited heav'n;
But such plain roofs as piety could raise,
And only vocal with the Maker's praise. Pope.

MISERABLE. adj. [miserable, French; miser, Latin.]
1. Unhappy; calamitous; wretched.
O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant, bloody scepter'd!
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again? Shakespeare.

Most miserable is the desire that's glorious. Shakespeare.

What's more miserable than discontent? Shakespeare.

It is probable that there will be a future state, and then how miserable is the voluptuous unbeliever left in the lurch. South's Sermons.

What hopes delude thee, miserable man? Dryden's Aen.

2. Wretched; worthless.
Miserable comforters are ye all. Job xvi. 2.

3. Culpably parsimonious; stingy.
MISERABLENESS. n. f. [from miserable.] State of misery.
MISERABLY. adv. [from miserable.]

1. Unhappily; calamitously.
Of the five employed by him, two of them quarrell'd, one of which was slain, and the other hanged for it; the third drowned himself; the fourth, though rich, came to beg his bread; and the fifth was miserably stabbed to death. South.

2. Wretchedly; meanly.
As the love I bear you makes me thus invite you; so the same love makes me ashamed to bring you to a place, where you shall be so, not spoken by ceremony but by truth, miserably entertained. Sidney, b. ii.

3. Covetously.
MISERY. n. f. [miseria, Latin; miserere, French.]
1. Wretchedness; unhappiness.
My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

Happiness, in its full extent, is the utmost pleasure we are capable of, and misery the utmost pain. Locke.

2. Calamity; misfortune; cause of misery.
When we our betters see bearing our woes,
We scarcely think our miseries our foes. Shakespeare.

The gods from heav'n survey the fatal strife,
And mourn the miseries of human life. Dryden's Aen.

3. [From miser.] Covetousness; avarice. Not in use.
He look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck o' th' world: he covets less Than misery itself would give. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

In a fabrick of forty thousand pounds charge, I with thirty pounds laid out before in an exact model; for a little misery may easily breed some absurdity of greater charge. Misere's.

MIS

MISESTEEM. n. f. [mis and esteem.] Disregard; slight.
To MISFACTION. v. a. [mis and fashion.] To form wrong.
A thing in reason impossible, thorough their misfashioned preconceit, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures of God. Hakewill on Providence.

To MISFORM. v. a. [mis and form.] To put in an ill form.
His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
And that misformed shape misshap'd more. Spenser.

MISFORTUNE. n. f. [mis and fortune.] Calamity; ill luck;
want of good fortune.
Fortune thus 'gan fay, misery and misfortune is all one,
And of misfortune, fortune hath only the gift. Sidney.

What world's delight, or joy of living speech,
Can heart so plung'd in sea of sorrows deep,
And heaped with so huge misfortunes reach? Fa. Q.

Consider why the change was wrought,
You'll find it his misfortune, not his fault. Addison.

To MISFORM. v. a. [mis and form.] To fill with doubt; to deprive of confidence. It is used always with the reciprocal pronoun.
As Henry's late prefiging prophecy
Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richmond;
So doth my heart misgive me in these conflicts. Shakespeare.

What may befall him, to his harm or ours?
This is strange! Who hath got the right Anne?
My heart misgives me. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Yet off his heart divine of something ill, Misgave him. Milton.

If a conscience thus qualified and informed, be not the measure by which a man may take a true estimate of his absolute, the sinner is left in the plunge of infinite doubts, suspensions, and misgivings, both as to the measures of his present duty, and the final issues of his future reward. South.

His heart misgave him, that these were so many meeting-houses; but, upon communicating his suspicions, I soon made him easy. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 47.

To MISGOVERN. v. a. [mis and govern.] To govern ill; to administer unfitly.
Solyman charged him bitterly, that he had misgoverned the state, and inverted his treasures to his own private use. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

Rude, misgovern'd hands, from window tops,
Threw dust and rubbish on king Richard's head. Shakespeare.

MISGOVERNANCE. n. f. [mis and governance.] Irregularity.
Thy muse too long slumbereth in sorrowing,
Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance. Spenser's Past.

MISGOVERNMENT. n. f. [mis and government.]
1. Ill administration of public affairs.
Men lay the blame of those evils whereof they know not the ground, upon publick misgovernment. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Ill management.
Men are miserable, if their education hath been so undisciplined, as to leave them unfurnished of skill to spend their time; but most miserable, if such misgovernment and unskil-fulness make them fall into vicious company. Taylor.

3. Irregularity; inordinate behaviour.
There is not chastity enough in language
Without offence to utter them: thus, pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment. Shakespeare.

MISGUIDANCE. n. f. [mis and guidance.] False direction.
The Nicene council fixed the equinox the twenty-first of March for the finding out of Easter; which has caused the misguidance from the sun which we lie under in respect of Easter, and the moveable feasts. Holder on Time.

Whoever deceives a man, makes him ruin himself; and by causing an error in the great guide of his actions, his judgment, he causes an error in his choice, the misguidance of which must naturally engage him to his destruction. South.

To MISGUIDE. v. a. [mis and guide.] To direct ill; to lead the wrong way.
Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect those which favour the other, is wilfully to misguide the understanding; and is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debates it. Locke.

Misguided prince! no longer urge thy fate,
Nor tempt the hero to unequal war.
Of all the causes which conspire to blind
Man's erring judgment, and misguide the mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

MISHAP. n. f. [mis and hap.] Ill chance; ill luck; calamity.
To tell you what miserable mishaps fell to the young prince of Macedon his cousin, I should too much fill your ears with strange horrors. Sidney, b. ii.

Since we are thus far entered into the consideration of her mishaps, tell me, have there been any more such tempests wherein the hath thus wretchedly been wrecked, Spenser.

MIS

Sir knight, take to you wonted strength,
And master these mishaps with patient might. Fa. Queen.

Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps. Shakespeare.

It cannot be
But that success attends him: if mishap,
Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers; since no place like this Can fit his punishment, or your revenge. Milton's P. Lost.

If the worst of all mishaps hath fallen,
Speak; for he could not die unlike himself. Denham.

Mr'SHMASH. n. f. Ans. A low word. A mingle or hotchpotch.

To MISINFER. v. a. [mis and infer.] To infer wrong.
Nestorius teaching rightly, that God and man are distinct natures, did thereupon misinfer, that in Christ those natures can by no conjunction make one person. Hooker, b. v.

To MISINFORM. v. a. [mis and inform.] To deceive by false accounts.
Some belonged to a man of great dignity, and not as that wicked Simon had misinformed. 2 Mac. iii. 11.

By no means trust to your servants, who mislead you, or misinform you; the reproach will lie upon yourself. Bacon.

Bid her well beware,
Left by some fair-appearing good surpriz'd,
She dictate false; and misinform the will
To do what God expressly hath forbid. Milton's Par. Lost.

MISINFORMATION. n. f. [from misinform.] False intelligence;
false accounts.
Let not such be discouraged as deserve well, by misinformation of others, perhaps out of envy or treachery. Bacon.

The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces against an insulting baseness, when backed with greatness, and set on by misinformation. South's Sermons.

To MISINTERPRET. v. a. [mis and interpret.] To explain to a wrong sense.
The gentle reader rests happy to hear the worthiest works misinterpreted, the clearest actions obscured, and the inno-centest life traduced. Benj. Johnson.

After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages misquoted and misinterpreted. Arbutnot on Coins.

To MISJOIN. v. a. [mis and join.] To join unfitly or improperly.
In reason's absence mimic fancy wakes
To imitate her; but misjoining shapes,
Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams;
Ill-matching words, and deeds, long past, or late. Milton.

Luther, more mistaking what he read,
Misjoins the sacred body with the bread. Dryden.

To MISJUDGE. v. a. [mis and judge.] To form false opinions;
to judge ill.
Where we misjudge the matter, a miscarriage draws pity after it; but when we are transported by pride, our ruin lies at our own door. L'Estrange.

You misjudge;
You see through love, and that deludes your sight;
As, what is straight, seems crooked through the water. Dryden's All for Love.

By allowing himself in what is innocent, he breeds offence to his weak and misjudging neighbour. Atterbury's Sermons.

Infernal!
Too long misjudging have I thought thee wise,
But sure relentless folly steals thy breast. Pope.

To MISLAY. v. a. [mis and lay.] To lay in a wrong place.
Mean time my worthy wife, our arms mislay'd,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd. Dryden.

The fault is generally mislaid upon nature; and there is often a complaint of want of parts, when the fault lies in want of a due improvement. Locke.

If the butler be the tell-tale, mislay a spoon, so as he may never find it. Swift's Rules to Servants.

MISLAY. n. f. [from mislay.] One that puts in the wrong place.
The mislayer of a mere-stone is to blame: but the unjust judge is the capital remover of land-marks, when he defineth amids of lands. Bacon's Essays.

To MISLEAD. v. a. [mis and lead.] To guide a wrong way;
to betray to mischief or mistake.
Take, oh take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn.
Those we love,
That are misled upon your cousin's part. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

Poor misled men: your states are yet worthy pity.
If you would hear, and change your savage minds, Leave to be mad. Benj. Johnson's Cataline.

Trust not to your servants who mislead or misinform you.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

MIS

O thievish night,
Why should'st thou but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the flars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller?
What can they teach and not mislead?
Ignorant of themselves, of God much more?
Thou who hast taught me to forgive the ill,
And recompense, as friends, the good misled;
If mercy be a precept of thy will,
Return that mercy on thy servant's head.
The imagination, which is of simple perception, doth never of itself, and directly, mislead us; yet it is the almost fatal means of our deception.
Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, and scrutiny of each successive desire, whether the satisfaction of it does not interfere with our true happiness, and mislead us from it.
'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill
Appear in writing or in judging ill:
But of the two let's dangerous is th' offence
To tire our patience, than mislead our sense.
MISLEADER. n. f. [from mislead.] One that leads to ill.
When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots;
Till then I banish thee on pain of death,
As I have done the rest of my misleaders.
They have disclaimed and abandoned those heretical phantasies touching our Saviour, wherein by their misleaders they had been anciently plunged.
MISLIKE. v. a. [mis and like.] To dislike; to be not pleased with; to dislike.
It was hard to say, whether he more liked his doings, or misliked the effect of his doings.
Tertullian was not deceived in the nature of the place;
but Aquinas, who misliked this opinion, followed a worse.
Judge not the preacher, for he is thy judge:
If thou mislike him, thou conceiv'st him not.
MISLIKE. n. f. [from the verb.] Disapprobation; dislike.
Setting your scorn and your mislike aside,
Tell me some reason, why the lady Gray
Should not become my wife.
Their angry gestures with mislike disclose,
How much his speech offends their noble ears.
MISLIKER. n. f. [from mislike.] One that disapproves.
Open flatterers of great men, privy mislikers of good men, fair speakers with smiling countenances.
MISLEN. n. f. [corrupted from miscellane.] Mixed corn: as,
wheat and rice.
They commonly sow those lands with wheat, mislen, and barley.
To MISLE. v. n. [from mis.] To rain in imperceptible drops, like a thick mist: properly misle.
Y enough, thou mournedst fast,
Now ginnest to mizzle, hic we homeward fast.
The very small drops of a misling rain descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles.
This cold precipitates the vapours either in dews, or, if the vapours more copiously ascend, they are condensed into misling, or into showers of small rain, falling in numerous, thick, small drops.
In misling days when I my thresher heard,
With nappy beer I to the barn repair'd.
To MISLIVE. v. n. [mis and live.] To live ill.
Should not thilke God, that gave him that good,
Eke cherish his child if in his ways he stood,
For if he mislive in leudness and lust,
Little boots all the wealth and the trust.
To MISMANAGE. v. a. [mis and manage.] To manage ill.
The debates of most princes councils would be in danger to be mismanaged, since those who have a great stroke in them are not always perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism.
MISMANAGEMENT. n. f. [mis and management.] Ill management; ill conduct.
It is mismanagement more than want of abilities, that men have reason to complain of in those that differ from them.
The falls of fav'rites, projects of the great,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new,
All neither wholly false, nor wholly true.
To MISMARK. v. a. [mis and mark.] To mark with the wrong token.
Things are mismarked in contemplation and life for want of application or integrity.
To MISMATCH. v. a. [mis and match.] To match unsuit-ably.

MIS

What at my years forsaken! had I Ugly, or old, misnatcht to my desires,
My natural defects had taught me
To set me down contented.
To MISNAME. v. a. [mis and name.] To call by the wrong name.
They make one man's fancies, or perhaps failings, confining laws to others, and convey them as such to their successors, who are bold to misname all unobsequiousness to their inco-gnitancy, presumption.
MISNOMER. n. f. [French.] In law, an indictment, or any other act vacated by a wrong name.
To MISOBSERVE. v. a. [mis and observe.] Not to observe accurately.
They understand it as early as they do language; and, if I misobserve not, they love to be treated as rational creatures sooner than is imagined.
MISOGAMIST. n. f. [μισος and γαμος.] A marriage hater.
MISOGYNY. n. f. [μισος and γυνή.] Hatred of women.
To MISORDER. v. a. [mis and order.] To conduct ill; to manage irregularly.
If the child mis order in forgetting a word, or misorder-
ing the sentence, I either not have the matter frown.
Yet few of them come to any great age, by reason of their misordered life when they were young.
The time misorder'd doth in common sense
Crowd us, and crush us to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up.
MISORDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Irregularity; disorderly proceedings.
When news was brought to Richard the second, that his uncles, who sought to reform the misorders of his counsellors, were assembled in a wood near unto the court, merrily demanded of one Sir Hugh a Linne, who had been a good military man, but was then somewhat distraught of his wits, what he would advise him to do? Illue out, quoth Sir Hugh, and slay them every mother's son; and when thou hast so done, thou hast killed all the faithful friends thou hast in England.
MISORDERLY. adj. [from misorder.] Irregular.
His over-much fearing of you drives him to seek some mis- orderly shift, to be helped by some other book, or to be prompted by some other scholar.
To MISPEL. v. a. [mis and spell.] To spell wrong.
She became a perfect enemy to the arts and sciences, and scarce ever wrote a letter to him without wilfully mispeeling his name.
To MISPEND. v. a. preterite and part. passive mispent. [mis and spend.]
1. To spend ill; to waste; to consume to no purpose; to throw away.
What a deal of cold business doth a man mispent the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, gathering and venting news.
First guilty conscience does the mirror bring,
Then sharp remorse shoots out her angry sting;
And anxious thoughts, within themselves at strife,
Upbraid the long mispent, luxurious life.
I this writer's want of sense arraign,
Treat all his empty pages with disdain,
And think a grave reply mispent and vain.
He who has lived with the greatest care will find, upon a review of his time, that he has something to redeem; but he who has mispent much has still a greater concern.
Wife men retrieve, as far as they are able, every mispent or unprofitable hour which has slipped from them.
2. To waste, with the reciprocal pronoun.
Now let the arched knife their thirsty limbs
Dissever, for the genial moisture due
To apples, otherwise mispent itself
In barren twigs.
MISPENDER. n. f. [from mispent.] One who spends ill or prodigally.
I very much suspect the excellency of those mens parts who are dissolute, and careless mispenders of their time.
MISPERSUASION. n. f. [mis and persuasion.] Wrong notion;
false opinion.
Some mispersuasions concerning the Divine Attributes tend to the corrupting mens manners.
To MISPLACE. v. a. [mis and place.] To put in a wrong place.
I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders,
Before I'll see the crown so foul misplac'd.
What little arts govern the world! we need not
An armed enemy or corrupted friend,
When service but misplac'd, or love mistaken,
Performs the work.
Is a man betrayed by such agents as he employs? He mis- placed his confidence, took hypocrisy for fidelity, and so relied upon the services of a pack of villains.

MIS

Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity; we, who could no way foresee the effect?
To MISPOINT. v. a. [mis and point.] To confuse sentences by wrong punctuation.
To MISPRISE. v. a. Sometimes it signifies mistaken, from the French verb meprendre; sometimes undervalued or disdained, from the French verb mepriſer.
1. To mistake.
You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood;
I am not guilty of Lyfander's blood.
2. To slight; to scorn; to despise.
He's so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people who best know him, that I am altogether mispris'd.
Pluck indignation on thy head;
By the misprising of a maid, too virtuous
For the contempt of empire.
MISPRISON. n. f. [from misprive.]
1. Scorn; contempt.
Here take her hand,
Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift!
That doth in vile misprison shackle up
My love, and her desert.
2. Mistake; misconception.
Thou hast mistaken quite,
And laid thy love juice on some true love's sight;
Of thy misprison must perforce ensue
Some true love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true.
We feel such or such a sentiment within us, and herein is no cheat or misprison; it is truly so, and our sense concludes nothing of its file.
3. [In common law.] It signifies neglect, negligence, or oversight. Misprison of treason is the concealment, or not disclosing, of known treason; for the which the offenders are to suffer imprisonment during the king's pleasure, lose their goods and the profits of their lands during their lives. Mis- prison of felony, is the letting any person, committed for treason or felony, or suspicion of either, to go before he be indicted.
To MISPROPORTION. v. a. [mis and proportion.] To join without due proportion.
MISPROUD. adj. [mis and proud.] Viciously proud. Obsolete.
Now I fall, thy tough commixtures melt, Impairing Henry, strength'ning misproud York.
To MISQUOTE. v. a. [mis and quote.] To quote falsely.
Look how we can, or fad, or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks.
After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages misquoted.
To MISRECITE. v. a. [mis and recite.] To recite not according to the truth.
He misrecites the argument, and denies the consequence, which is clear.
To MISRECKON. v. a. [mis and reckon.] To reckon wrong;
to compute wrong.
Whoever finds a mistake in the sum total, must allow himself out, though after repeated trials he may not see in which article he has misreckoned.
To MISRELATE. v. a. [mis and relate.] To relate inaccurately or falsely.
To satisfy me that he misrelated not the experiment, he brought two or three small pipes of glass, which gave me the opportunity of trying it.
MISRELATION. n. f. [from misrelate.] False or inaccurate narrative.
Mine aim was only to press home those things in writing, which had been agitated between us by word of mouth; a course much to be preferred before verbal conferences, as being less subject to mistakes and misrelations, and wherein pa-ralogisms are more quickly detected.
To MISREMEMBER. v. a. [mis and remember.] To mistake by trusting to memory.
If I much misremember not, I had such a spirit from peas kept long enough to lose their verdure.
To MISREPORT. v. a. [mis and report.] To give a false account of; to give an account disadvantageous and false.
His doctrine was misreported, as though he had everywhere preached this, not only concerning the Gentiles, but also touching the Jews.
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace.
The wrong judgment that misleads us, and makes the will often fallen on the worse side, lies in misreporting upon the various comparisons of these.
MISREPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] False account; false and malicious representation.
We defend him not,
Only desire to know his crime: 'tis possible
It may be some mistake or misreport,
Some false suggestion, or malicious scandal.

MIS

As by flattery a man is usually brought to open his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction, and a slanderous mis- report of persons, he is often brought to shut the same even to his best and truest friends.
To MISREPRESENT. v. a. [mis and represent.] To represent not as it is; to falsify to disadvantage: mis often signifies not only error, but malice or mischief.
Two qualities necessary to a reader before his judgment should be allowed are, common honesty and common sense; and that no man could have misrepresented that paragraph, unless he were utterly destitute of one or both.
While it is so difficult to learn the springs of some facts, and so easy to forget the circumstances of others, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious and inquisitive heads, who proceed altogether upon conjectures.
MISREPRESENTATION. n. f. [from misrepresent.]
1. The act of misrepresenting.
They have prevailed by misrepresentations, and other artifices, to make the successor look upon them as the only persons he can trust.
2. Account maliciously false.
Since I have shewn him his foul mistakes and injurious misrepresentations, it will become him publicly to own and retract them.
MISRULE. n. f. [mis and rule.] Tumult; confusion; revel;
unjust domination.
In the portal plac'd, the heav'n-born maid,
Enormous riot, and misrule survey'd.
And through his airy hall the loud misrule
Of driving tempest, is for ever heard.
MISS. n. f. [contracted from mistress.] Bailey.
1. The term of honour to a young girl.
Where there are little masters and misses in a house, they are great impediments to the diversions of the servants.
2. A strumpet; a concubine; a whore; a prostitute.
All women would be of one piece,
The virtuous matron and the miss.
This gentle cock, for solace of his life,
Six misses had besides his lawful wife.
To MISS. v. a. [missen, Dutch and German.] Miss'd preter.
miss part.
1. Not to hit by the mind; to mistake.
Nor can I miss the way, so strongly drawn
By this new-felt attraction, and instinct.
2. Not to hit by manual aim.
The life you boasted to your jav'lin giv'n,
Prince, you have miss'd.
3. To fail of obtaining.
If the desired above all things to have Orgalus, Orgalus feared nothing but to miss Parthenia.
So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that, which one unworthier may attain;
And die with grieving.
Where shall a maid's distracted heart find rest,
If the can miss it in her lover's breast?
When a man misses his great end, happiness, he will acknowledge he judged not right.
4. To discover something to be unexpectedly wanting.
Without him I found a weakness, and a mistrustfulness of myself, as one strayed from his best strength, when at any time I miss'd him.
In vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was miss'd.
5. To be without.
We cannot miss him; he does make out fire,
Fetch in our wood.
6. To omit.
She would never miss one day,
A walk to fine, a sight to gay.
7. To perceive want of.
My redoubt'd love and care,
May ever tend about thee to old age
With all things grateful cheer'd, and so supply'd,
That what by me thou hast lost thou least shalt miss.
He who has a firm, sincere friend, may want all the rest without missing them.
To MISS. v. n.
1. To fly wide; not to hit.
Flying bullets now
To execute his rage, appear too slow,
They miss or sweep but common souls away.
2. Not to succeed.
The general root of superstition is, that men observe when things hit, and not when they miss; and commit to memory the one, and forget and pass over the other.
3. To fail; to mistake.
4. To be lost; to be wanting.
My Lord,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn.

MIS

Thy shepherds we hurt not, neither was there ought missing unto them.
For a time caught up to God, as once
Moses was in the mount, and missing long,
And the great Thibite, who on fiery wheels Rode up to heaven, yet once again to come. Milt. Par. R.
5. To miscarry; to fail.
Th' invention all admir'd, and each, how he
To be th' inventor mis'd, so easy it seem'd,
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible.
6. To fail to obtain, learn, or find: sometimes with of before the object.
Gritus missing of the Moldavian fell upon Maylat. Knolles.
The moral and relative perfections of the Deity are easy to be understood by us; upon the least reflection we cannot miss of them. Atterbury's Sermons.
Miss. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Lofs; want.
In humble dales is footing fast,
The trode is not so tickle,
And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his misse not mickle. Spenser's Pastorals.
I could have better spar'd a better man.
Oh, I should have a heavy mis of thee,
If I were much in love with vanity. Shakesp. Henry IV.
If these papers have that evidence in them, there will be no great mis of those which are lost, and my reader may be satisfied without them. Locke.
2. Mistake; error.
He did without any great mis in the hardest points of grammar. Afcham's Schoollmaster.
By the rubrick of the misal, in every solemn mass, the priest is to go up to the middle of the altar. Stillington.
To Missa'y. v. n. [mis and say.] To say ill or wrong.
Their ill haviour garces men missey,
Both of their doctrine and their fay. Spenser's Past.
Diggon Davie, I bid her godday,
Or Diggon her is, or I missey. Spenser's Past.
We are not dwarfs, but of equal stature, if Vives missey Hakevill on Providence.
To MISSE'EM. v. n. [mis and seem.]
1. To make false appearance.
Poul Dueffea meet,
Who with her witchcraft and misseeming sweet Inveigled her to follow her desires unmet. Fairy Queen.
2. To misbecome. Obsolete both.
Never knight I saw in such misseeming plight. Fa. Qu.
To MISSE'VE. v. a. [mis and serve.] To serve unfaithfully.
Great men, who misseved their country, were fined very highly. Arbutnot on Coins.
To MISSHA'PE. v. a. part, misshaped and misshapen. [mis and shape.] To shape ill; to form ill; to deform.
A rude misshapen, monstrous rabblement. Fa. Qu.
His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
And that misformed shape, misshaped more. Fairy Queen.
Him then she does transform to monstrous hues,
And horribly misshapes with ugly fights,
Captiv'd eternally in iron mews. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
This misshaped knave,
His mother was a witch. Shakespeare's Tempest.
And will she yet debate her eyes on me, Shak. Rich. III.
On me that halt and am misshapen thus.
Let the misshaped trunk that bears this head
Be round impaled with a glorious crown. Shakespeare.
Pride will have a fall: the beautiful trees go all to the wreck here, and only the misshapen and despicable dwarf is left standing. L'Estrange.
Pluto hates his own misshapen race,
Her sister furies fly her hideous face. Dryden's En.
They make bold to destroy ill-formed and misshaped productions. Locke.
The Alps broken into so many steps and precipices, form one of the most irregular, misshapen scenes in the world. Addis.
We ought not to believe that the banks of the ocean are really deformed, because they have not the form of a regular bulwark; nor that the mountains are misshapen, because they are not exact pyramids or cones. Bentley's Sermons.
Some figures monstrous and misshap'd appear Consider'd singly, or beheld too near,
Which but proportion'd to their site or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace. Pope.
2. In Shakespeare, perhaps, it once signifies ill directed: as, to shape a course.
Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Misshapen in the conduct of them both,
Like powder in a skill-less soldiers flask,
I set on fire. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.
MIS'ILE. adj. [missilis, Lat.] Thrown by the hand; striking at distance.
We bend the bow, or wing the missile dart. Pope.

MIS

My'sson. n. f. [missio, Latin.]
1. Commisison; the state of being sent by supreme authority.
Her son tracing the desert wild,
All his great work to come before him set,
How to begin, how to accomplish best,
His end of being on earth, and misson high. Milt. Pa. Reg.
The divine authority of our misson, and the powers vested in us by the high-priest of our profession, Christ Jesus, are publicly disputed and denied. Atterbury.
2. Persons sent on any account, usually to propagate religion.
In these ships there should be a misson of three of the brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the sciences, manufactures, and inventions of all the world, and bring us books and patterns; and that the brethren should stay abroad till the new misson. Bacon's New Atlantis.
3. Dismissal; discharge. Not in use.
In Cesar's army, somewhat the soldiers would have had, yet only demanded a misson or discharge, though with no instant it should be granted, but thought to wrench him to their other desires; whereupon with one cry they asked mis-son. Bacon's New Atlantis.
4. Faction; party. Not in use.
Glorious deeds, in these fields of late,
Made emulous missons' mongst the gods themselves,
And drove great Mars to faction. Shakesp. Henry IV.
MIS'IONARY. n. f. [missionaire, French.] One sent to propagate religion.
You mention the presbyterian missionary, who hath been persecuted for his religion. Swift.
Like mighty misson you come,
Ad partes infidelium. Dryden.
MIS'SIVE. adj. [missive, French.]
1. Such as may be sent.
The king grants a licence under the great seal, called a conge d'ellire, to elect the person he has nominated by his letters missive. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. Used at distance.
In vain with darts a distant war they try,
Short, and more short, the missive weapons fly. Dryden.
MIS'SIVE. n. f. [French.]
1. A letter sent: it is retained in Scotland in that sense.
Great aids came in to him; partly upon missives, and partly volunteers from many parts. Bacon's Henry VII.
2. A messenger.
Rioting in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters; and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience. Shakespeare.
While wrapt in the wonder of it came missives from the king, who all hail'd me thane of Cawder. Shakesp. Macbeth.
MISSE'AK. v. a. [mis and speak.] To speak wrong.
It is not so; thou hast mispoke, misheard;
Tell o'er thy tale again. Shakesp. King Lear.
A mother delights to hear
Her early child mispeak half-utter'd words. Dennis.
MIST. n. f. [miste, Saxon.]
1. A low thin cloud; a small thin rain not perceived in single drops.
Old Chaucer, like the morning star,
To us discovers day from far;
His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd
Which our dark nation long involv'd. Dennis.
And mists condens'd to clouds obscure the sky,
And clouds dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Rowseman.
As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew.
But hov'ring mists around his brows are spread,
And night with fable shades involves his head. Dryden.
A cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.
2. Any thing that dims or darkens.
My peoples eyes were once blinded with such mists of sufpicion, they are soon misled into the most desperate actions.
King Charles.
His passion cast a mist before his sense,
And either made or magnify'd th' offence. Dryden.
To MIST. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloud; to cover with a vapour or steam.
Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then the lives. Shakesp. King Lear.
MISTAKABLE. adj. [from mistake.] Liable to be conceived wrong.
It is not strange to see the difference of a third part in so large an account, if we consider how differently they are let forth in minor and less mistakable numbers. Brown.

To MISTAKE. v. a. [mis and take.] To conceive wrong; to take something for that which it is not.
The towns, neither of the one side nor the other, willingly opening their gates to strangers, nor strangers willingly entering for fear of being mistaken. Sidney.
These did truly apprehend a great affinity between their practice of invocation of saints and the heathen idolatry, or else there was no danger one should be mistaken for the other.
Stillington.
This if neglected will make the reader very much mistake, and misunderstand his meaning, and render the sense very perplexed. Locke.
Fancy passes for knowledge, and what is prettily said is mistaken for solid. Locke.
Fools into the notion fall,
That vice or virtue there is none at all;
Ask your own heart, and nothing is so plain,
'Tis to mistake them costs the time and pain. Pope.
To MISTAKE. v. n. To err; not to judge right.
Seeing God found folly in his angels; mens judgments, which inhabit these houses of clay, cannot be without their mistakings. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Seldom any one mistakes in his names of simple ideas, or applies the name red to the idea green. Locke.
Servants mistake, and sometimes occasion misunderstanding, among friends. Swift.
MISTAKE. pret. and part. pass. of mistake for mistaken, and so retained in Scotland.
This dagger hath mistak'en; for lo! the sheath
Lies empty on the back of Mountague,
The point missteach'd in my daughter's bosom. Shakesp.
To be MISTAKEN. To err.
England is so idly king'd.
— You are too much mistaken in this king:
Question, your grace, the late ambassadors,
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution. Shakesp. Henry V.
Mistaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,
But cut the bond of union with that stroke. Waller.
MISTAKE. n. f. [from the verb.] Misconception; error.
He never shall find out fit mate; but such As some misfortune brings him, or mistake. Milton.
Infallibility is an absolute security of the understanding from all possibility of mistake in what it believes. Tillotson.
Those errors are not to be charged upon religion, which proceed either from the want of religion, or superstitious mistakes about it. Bentley's Sermons.
MISTAK'INGLY. adv. [from mistaking.] Erroneously; falsely.
The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall which does indeed belong to the object. Boyle on Colours.
To MISTAKE. v. a. [mis and take.] To state wrong.
They mistake the question, when they talk of pressing ceremonies. Bishop Sanders.
To MISTE'ACH. v. a. [mis and teach.] To teach wrong.
Such guides shall be set over the several congregations as will be sure to mislead them. Bishop Sanders.
The extravagances of the lawless life are the more consummate disorders of a mislaught or neglected youth.
L'Estrange's Fables.
To MISTE'L. v. a. [mis and tell.] To tell unfaithfully or inaccurately.
To MISTE'MPER. v. a. [mis and temper.] To temper ill; to disorder.
This inundation of missemp'd humour Refts by you only to be qualified. Shakesp. King John.
MISTE'ER. adj. [from mestier, trade, French.] What mister, what kind of.
The redcross knight toward him crossed fast,
To weet what mister wight was so dismay'd,
There him he finds all fencible and agail. Spenser.
To MISTE'EM. v. a. [mis and term.] To term erroneously.
Hence banished, is banish'd from the world;
And world exil'd is death. That banished
Is death misterm'd. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.
To MISTH'NK. v. a. [mis and think.] To think ill; to think wrong.
How will the country, for these woful chances,
Misthink the king, and not be satisfy'd. Shakespeare.
We, the greatest, are misthought
For things that others do. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Thoughts! which how found they harbour in thy breast,
Adam! Misthought of her to thee so dear? Milton.
To MIST'IME. v. a. [mis and time.] Not to time right; not to adapt properly with regard to time.
MISTINESS. n. f. [from misty.] Cloudiness; state of being overcast.
The speedy depredation of air upon watry moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in the sudden vanishing of vapours from glass, or the blade of a sword, such as doth not at all detain or imbibe the moisture, for the mistiness scattereth immediately. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 91.

MIS

MISTION. n. f. [from mistus, Latin.] The state of being mingled.
In animals many actions are mixt, and depend upon their living form as well as that of mistion, and though they wholly seem to retain unto the body, depart upon disunion. Browne.
Both bodies do, by the new texture resulting from their mision, produce colour. Boyle on Colours.
MISTLETOE. n. f. [myrtelzan, Saxon; mistel, Danish, bird-lime, and tan, a twig.] A plant.
The flower of the mistletoe consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a bason, divided into four parts, and beset with warts; the ovary which is produced in the female flowers is placed in a remote part of the plant from the male flowers, and consists of four shorter leaves; this becomes a round berry full of a glutinous substance, inclosing a plain heart-shaped seed: this plant is always produced from seed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, as most other plants, but will always grow upon trees; from whence the ancients accounted it a super-plaut, who thought it to be an excrescence on the tree without the seed being previously lodged there, which opinion is now generally confuted. The manner of its propagation is as follows, viz. the mistletoe thrush, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is ripe, doth open the seed from tree to tree; for the viscous part of the berry, which immediately furrounds the seed, doth sometimes fasten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get disengaged of, he strikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and so leaves the seed sticking by this vis-cous matter to the bark, which, if it lights upon a smooth part of the tree, will fasten itself, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth most readily take upon are the apple, the ash, and some other smooth rind trees: it is observable, that whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of these plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preserved by the curious in their collections of natural curiosities. Mikler.
If snow do continue, sheepe hardly that fare Crave mistle and ivie for them for to spare. Tusser's Husb.
A barren and detested vale, you see it is:
The trees, though Summer, yet forlorn and lean, O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistletoe. Shakespeare.
Mistletoe groweth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, sometimes upon hazles, and rarely upon oaks; the mistletoe whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green Winter and Summer, and beareth a white glittering berry; and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth. Bacon.
All your temples strow
With laurel green, and sacred mistletoe. Gay's Trivia.
MISTLIKE. adj. [mist and like.] Resembling a mist.
Good Romeo, hide thyself.
— Not I, unless the breath of heart-sick groans, Mistlike in fold me from the search of eyes. Shakespeare.
MISTOLD, particip. pass. of mistell.
MISTO'OK, particip. pass. of mistake.
Look nymphs, and shepherds look,
What sudden blaze of majesty,
Too divine to be mistook. Milton.
MISTRESS. n. f. [maistrisse, maitresse, French.]
1. A woman who governs: correlative to subject or to servant.
Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out,
Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon
To stand's suspicious mistress. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Let us prepare
Some welcome for the mistress of the house. Shakespeare.
Like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head and perish. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
He'll make your Paris louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe. Shakespeare.
I will not charm my tongue; I'm bound to speak;
My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed. Shakespeare. Othello.
The late queen's gentlewoman! a knight's daughter!
To be her mistress mistress t the queen's queen. Shakespeare.
Rome now is mistress of the whole world, sea and land, to either pole. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.
Wonder not, sovereign mistress! if perhaps Thou can't, who art sole wonder; much less arm
Thy looks, the heav'n of mildness, with disdain. Milton.
Those who assert the lunar orb presides
O'er humid bodies, and the ocean guides;
Whose waves obsequious ebb, or swelling run
With the declining or encreasing moon;
With reason seem her empire to maintain
As mistress of the rivers and the main.
What a miserable spectacle, for a nation that had been mistress at sea so long! Arbutnot on Coins.
2. A woman who possesses faculties uninjured.
There had she enjoyed herself while she was mistress of herself, and had no other thoughts but such as might arise out of quiet senses. Sidney, b. ii.

3. A woman skilled in any thing.
A letter desires all young wives to make themselves mistresses of Wingate's Arithmetick. Addison's Spect. N<sup>o</sup>. 92.

4. A woman teacher.
Erect publick schools, provided with the best and ablest masters and mistresses. Swift.

5. A woman beloved and courted.
They would not suffer the prince to confer with, or very rarely to see, his mistress, whom they pretended he should forthwith marry. Clarendon.

Nice honour still engages to requite False mistresses and proud with flight for slight. Granville.

6. A term of contemptuous address.
Look you, pale mistress,
Do you perceive the ghastliness of her eye? Shakespeare.

7. A whore; a concubine.
Mistrust. n. f. [mis and trust.] Diffidence; suspicion; want of confidence.
He needs not our mistrust, since he delivers
Our offices, and what we have to do,
To the direction just. Shakspeare. Macbeth.
Not then mistrust, but tender love, enjoins
That I should mind thee oft; and mind thou me! Milton.

To Mistrust. v. a. [mis and trust.] To suspect; to doubt; to regard with diffidence.
Will any man alledge those mentioned human infirmities, as reasons why these things should be mistrusted or doubted of. Hooker, b. ii.

By a divine instinct, mens minds mistrust
Enfuing danger; as by proof we see,
The waters swell before a boisterous storm. Shakspeare.
Fate her own book mistrusted at the fight,
On that side war, on this a single fight. Cowley.
The relation of a Spartan youth, that suffered a fox concealed under his robe to tear out his bowels, is mistrusted by men of business. Brown.

The gen'rous train complies,
Nor fraud mistrusts in virtue's fair disguise. Pope's Odyssey.

Mistrustful. adj. [mistrust and full.] Diffident; doubting.
I hold it cowardice
To rest mistrustful, where a noble heart
Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love. Shakspeare.
Here the mistrustful fowl no harm suspects,
So safe are all things which our king protects. Waller.

Mistrustfulness. n. f. [from mistrustful.] Diffidence; doubt.
Without him I found a weakness, and a mistrustfulness of myself, as one strayed from his best strength, when at any time I mist him. Sidney, b. ii.

Mistrustfully. adv. [from mistrustful.] With suspicion; with mistrust.

Mistrustless. adj. [from mistrust.] Confident; unsuspecting.

Where he doth in stream mistrustless play,
Veil'd with night's robe, they stalk the shore abroad. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Mist. adj. [from mist.]
1. Clouded; overpread with mists.
The morrow fair with purple beams
Dispers'd the shadows of the misty night.
Loud howling wolves arouse the jades,
That drag the tragick melancholy night;
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead mens graves; and from their misty jaws
Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air. Shakspeare.
Parents overprize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection which alter the appearance, as things seem bigger in misty mornings. Watson.
Now smoaks with show'rs the misty mountain ground,
And floated fields lie undistinguish'd round. Pope.

2. Obscure; dark; not plain.
To Misunderstand. v. a. [mis and understand.] To misconceive; to mistake.
The words of Tertullian, as they are by them alledged, are misunderstood. Hooker, b. ii.
He failed in distinguishing these two regions, both called Eden, and he altogether misunderstood two of the four rivers. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

In vain do men take sanctuary in such misunderstood expressions as these; and from a false persuasion that they cannot reform their lives never go about it. South.
This if it be neglected, will make the reader very much mistake and misunderstand his meaning. Locke.
Were they only designed to instruct the three succeeding generations, they are in no danger of being misunderstood. Addison on ancient Medals.

The example of a good man is the best direction we can follow in the performance of our duty; the most exact rules and precepts are subject to be misunderstood; some at least will mistake their meaning. Rogers's Sermons.

Misunderstanding. n. f. [from misunderstood.]
1. Difference; disagreement.
There is a great misunderstanding betwixt the corpulent philosophers and the chemists. Boyle.
Servants mistake, and sometimes occasion misunderstandings among friends. Swift's Miscel.

2. Error; misconception.
Sever the construction of the injury from the point of contempt, imputing it to misunderstanding or fear. Bacon.

Misuse. n. f. [from misuse.]
1. Abuse; ill use.
2. Bad treatment.
To Misuse. v. a. [misuse, Fr. mis and use.] To treat or use improperly; to abuse.
You misuse the reverence of your place,
As a false favourite doth his prince's name
In deeds dishon'able. Shakspeare. Henry IV.
It hath been their custom shamefully to misuse the fervent zeal of men to religious arms, by converting the monies that have been levied for such wars to their own services. Raleigh.
Bacchus, that first from out the purple grape Crush'd the sweet poison of misused wine. Milton.
Machiavel makes it appear, that the weakness of Italy, which was once so strong, was caused by the corrupt practices of the papacy, in depraving and misusing religion. South's Sermons.

Misuse. n. f. [from the verb.] Bad use; bad treatment.
Upon whose dead corpse there was such misuse,
Such beastly, shameful transformation,
By those Wellwomen done, as may not be Without much shame retold. Shakspeare. Henry IV.
How much names taken for things mislead the understanding, the attentive reading of philosophical writers would discover, and that in words little suspected of any such misuse. Lact.

We have reason to humble ourselves before God by fasting and prayer, lest he should punish the misuse of our mercies, by stopping the course of them. Atterbury's Sermons.

To Misuse. v. n. [mis and use.] To misjudge; to distrust.
Latter times things more unknown shall show,
Why then should wisdom man so much misuse. Fa. 20.

To Misuse. v. n. [mis and use.] To go wrong.
Every thing begun with reason,
Will come by ready means unto his end:
But things misconfelled must needs misuse. Habbert.
In this maze still wand'ring and misusing,
For heaven decreed to conceal the same,
To make the miscreant more to feel his shame. Fairfax.

Misuse. n. f. A kind of mineral.
Misy contains no cupreous vitriol but only that of iron: it is a very beautiful mineral, of a fine bright yellow colour, and of a loose and friable structure, and much resembles the golden marcasites. Hill's Mat. Med.

Mitre. n. f. [mitre, French; mitz, Dutch; mit, Lat.]
1. A small insect found in cheese or corn; a weevil.
Virginity breeds miters, much like a cheese, consumes itself to the very paring, and so dies with feeding its own stomach. Shakspeare's All's well that ends well.
The polish'd glass, whose small convex
Enlarges to ten millions of degrees,
The mitre invisible else, of nature's hand Least animal. Philips.
The idea of two is as distinct from the idea of three, as the magnitude of the whole earth is from that of a mitre. Lact.

2. The twentieth part of a grain.
The Seville piece of eight contains thirteen pennyweight twenty-one grains and fifteen miters, of which there are twenty in the grain, of sterling silver, and is in value forty-three English pence and eleven hundredths of a penny. Arbuthnot.

3. Any thing proverbially small; the third part of a farthing.
Though any man's corn they do bite,
They will not allow him a mitre. Tupper's Husb.
Are you defrauded, when he feeds the poor,
Our mitre decreases nothing of your store. Dryden.
Did I e'er my mitre withhold
From the impotent and old. Swift's Miscel.

4. A small particle.
Put blue-bottles into an ant-hill they will be stained with red, because the ants thrust in their fangs, and infill into them a small mitre of their stinging liquor, which hath the same effect as oil of vitriol. Ray on Creation.

Mitella. n. f. A plant.
The mitella hath a perennial root; the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, and is divided into five parts; the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose; the ovary ovary becomes a roundish fruit, which terminates in a point, gaping at the top, in form of a bishop's mitre, and full of roundish seeds. Miller.

Mithridate. n. f. [mithridate, Fr.]
Mithridate is one of the capital medicines of the shops, consisting of a great number of ingredients, and has its name from its inventor Mithridates, king of Pontus. Quincy.
But you of learning and religion,
And virtue, and such ingredients, have made
A mithridate, whose operation
Keeps off, or cures, what can be done or said. Donne.

Mithridate mylord. n. f. [mithridate, Latin.]
The flower of the mithridate consists of four leaves placed in form of a cross, out of whose cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a smooth roundish fruit, having commonly a leafy border, and slit on the upper side, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition placed obliquely with respect to the valves, and furnished with smooth roundish seeds; to which may be added the undivided leaves, which distinguish it from cresses. Miller.

Mitigant. adj. [mitigant, Lat.] Lenient; lenitive.
To Mitigate. v. a. [mitigo, Lat. mitiger, Fr.]
1. To soften; to make less rigorous.
We could greatly wish, that the rigour of their opinion were allayed and mitigated. Hooker, b. v.

2. To alleviate; to make mild; to alluage.
Mithras are master'd by advice discreet,
And counsel mitigates the greatest smart. Fairy Queen.
All it can do is, to devise how that which must be endured may be mitigated, and the inconveniences thereof counter-acted as near as may be, that, when the best things are not possible, the best may be made of those that are. Hooker.

3. To mollify; to make less severe.
I undertook
Before thee: and, not repenting, this obtain
Of right, that I may mitigate their doom,
On me deriv'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

4. To cool; to moderate.
A man has frequent opportunity of mitigating the fierceness of a party, of softening the envious, quieting the angry, and rectifying the prejudiced. Addison's Spectator.

Mitigation. n. f. [mitigatio, Lat. mitigatio, Fr. from mitigare.] Abatement of any thing penal, harsh, or painful.
The king would not have one penny abated of that granted to him by parliament, because it might encourage other countries to pray the like release or mitigation. Bacon.
They caused divers subjects to be indicted of sundry crimes; and when the bills were found they committed them, and suffered them to languish long in prison, to extort from them great fines and ransoms, which they termed compositions and mitigations. Bacon's Henry VII.

Mitre. n. f. [mitre, Fr. mitra, Latin.]
1. An ornament for the head.
Nor Pantheus, thee, thy mitre nor the bands
Of awful Phœbus, sav'd from impious hands. Dryden.

2. A kind of episcopal crown.
Bishopricks or burning, mitres or faggots, have been the rewards of different persons, according as they pronounced these consecrated syllables, or not. Watts.

Mitre. n. f. [mitre, Fr. from mitra.] A kind of joining two boards together. Miller.

Mitre. adj. [mitre, Fr. from mitra.] Adorned with a mitre.
Shall the loud herald our successes relate,
Or mitred priest appoint the solemn day? Prior.
Mitred abbots, among us, were those that were exempt from the diocesan jurisdiction, as having within their own precincts episcopal authority, and being lords in parliament were called abbots sovereign. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Mittent. adj. [mittens, Lat.] Sending forth; emitting.
The fluxion proceedeth from humours peccant in quantity or quality, thrust forth by the part mittent upon the inferior weak parts. Wijeman's Surgery.

Mittens. n. f. [mittaines, French.]
1. Coarse gloves for the Winter.
December must be exprest with a horrid aspect, as also January clad in Irish rug, holding in furred mittens the sign of Capricorn. Peacock on Drawing.

2. Gloves that cover the arm without covering the fingers.
3. To handle one without mittens. To use one roughly. A low phrase. Ans.

Mittimus. [Latin.] A warrant by which a justice commits an offender to prison.
To Mix. v. a. [mix, Dutch; mixeo, Latin.]
1. To unite different bodies into one mass; to put various ingredients together.

A mixed multitude went up with them, and flocks and herds. Exod. xii. 38.
He sent out of his mouth a blast of fire, and out of his spurs and tempests; and they were all mixed together. 2 Esdr.

MOB

I have chosen an argument, mixt of religious and civil considerations; and likewise mixt between contemplative and active. Bacon's holy War.

3. To join; to mingle.
Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear;
This is the English not the Turkish court. Shakspeare.

Mixen. n. f. [mixen, Saxon.] A dunghill; a layfall.

Mixtion. n. f. [mixtion, Fr. from mix.] Mixture; confusion of one body with another.
Others perceiving this rule to fall short, have pieced it out by the mixtion of vacuity among bodies, believing it is that which makes one rarer than another. Digby on Bodies.
Though we want a proper name, yet are they not to be lightly past over as elementary or subterraneous mixtions. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

Mixtly. adv. [from mix.] With coalition of different parts into one.

Mixture. n. f. [mixtura, Latin.]
1. The act of mixing; the state of being mixed.
O happy mixture, wherein things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as well as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us! Hooker, b. v.
Those liquors are expelled out of the body which, by their mixture, convert the aliment into an animal liquid. Arbuth.
I, by baleful furies led,
With monstrous mixture stain'd my mother's bed. Pope.

2. A mass formed by mingled ingredients.
Come vial—What if this mixture do not work at all?
Shakspeare's Romeo and Juliet.

3. That which is added and mixed.
Neither can God himself be otherwise understood, than as a mind free and disentangled from all corporeal mixtures, perceiving and moving all things. Stillingfleet.
Cicero doubts whether it were possible for a community to exist, that had not a prevailing mixture of piety in its constitution. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 29.
While we live in this world, where good and bad men are blended together, and where there is also a mixture of good and evil wisely distributed by God, to serve the ends of his providence. Atterbury's Sermons.

Mizmaze. n. f. [A cant word, formed from maze by reduplication.] A maze; a labyrinth.
Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books, and the clue to lead them through the mizmaze of variety of opinions and authors to truth. Locke.

Mizzen. n. f. [mizzen, Dutch.]
The mizzen is a mast in the stern or back back of a ship: in some large ships there are two such masts, that standing next the main mast is called the main mizzen, and the other near the poop the bonaventure mizzen: the length of a mizzen mast is half that of the main mast, or the height of it is the same with that of the maintop mast from the quarter-deck, and the length of the mizzen topmast is half that. Bail.
A commander at sea had his leg fractured by the fall of his mizzen topmast. Wijeman's Surgery.

Mizzy. n. f. A bog; a quagmire. Ans.

Mnemonic. n. f. [μνημονικη.] The act of memory.

Mo. adj. [ma, Saxon; mae, Scottish.] Making greater number; more.

Soon as your oaken pipe begins to found Their ivory lutes lay by.
With oxbows and oxyokes, with other things mo,
For oxtrem and horseteem in plough for to go. Tusser.

Mo. adv. Further; longer.
Sing no more ditties, sing no mo
Of dumps so dull and heavy;
The frauds of men were ever fo,
Since Summer was first leafy. Shakspeare.

To MOAN. v. a. [from manan, Saxon, to grieve.] To lament; to deplore.
To MOAN. v. n. To grieve; to make lamentation.
The gen'rous band redressive search'd
Into the horrors of the gloomy jail,
Unpitied and unheard, where misery moans. Thomson.

MOAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Lamentation; audible sorrow; grief exprest in words or cries.
I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make mean to be abridg'd
From such a noble rate. Shakspeare. Merchant of Venice.
The fresh stream ran by her, and murmur'd her moans;
The salt tears fell from her, and fo'rt'ned the stones. Shak.
Sullen moans,
Hollow groans,
And cries of tortur'd ghosts. Pope's St. Cecilia.

MOAT. n. f. [motte, French, a mound; mota, low Latin.] A canal of water round a house or castle for defence.

M O C

The castle I found of good strength, having a great moat round about it, the work of a noble gentleman, of whose unthrifty son he had bought it. Sidney, b. ii.
 The fortrefs thrice himself in person storm'd;
 Your valour bravely did th' assault sustain,
 And fill'd the moats and ditches with the slain. Dryden.
 No walls were yet, nor fence, nor mote, nor mound,
 Nor drum was heard. Dryden's Ovid.
 To MOAT. v. a. [moter, French, from the noun.] To surround with canals by way of defence.
 I will presently to St. Luke's; there at the moated Grange resides this dejected Mariana. Shakespeare's Measure.
 An arm of Lethe, with a gentle flow,
 The palace moats, and o'er the pebbles creeps,
 And with soft murmurs calls the coming sleeps. Dryden.
 He fees he can hardly approach greatness, but, as a moated castle, he must first pass the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden's Pref. to Aurengzebe.
MOB. n. f. [contracted from mobile, Latin.] The crowd; a tumultuous rout.
 Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawber; a very monster in a Bartholomew-fair, for the mob to gaze at. Dryden.
 Dreams are but interludes, which fancy makes,
 When monarch reason sleeps, this mimic wakes;
 Compounds a medley of disjointed things,
 A court of coblers, and a mob of kings. Dryden.
 A cluster of mob were making themselves merry with their betters. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 44.
MOB. n. f. A kind of female head-dress.
 To MOB. v. a. [from the noun.] To harass, or overbear by tumult.
MO'BISH. adj. [from mob.] Mean; done after the manner of the mob.
 To MOBLE. v. a. [sometimes written mable, perhaps by a ludicrous allusion to the French je m'habille.] To dress grossly or inelegantly.
 But who, oh! hath seen the mobled queen,
 Run barefoot up and down. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
MO'BV. n. f. An American drink made of potatoes.
MO'BILE. n. f. [mobile, French.] The populace; the rout; the mob.
 Long experience has found it true of the unthinking mobile, that the closer they shut their eyes the wider they open their hands. South's Sermons.
 The mobile are uneasy without a ruler, they are restless with one. L'Estrange's Fables.
MOBILITY. n. f. [mobilité, Fr. mobilitas, Latin.]
 1. Nimbleness; activity.
Mobility is the power of being moved. Locke.
 Iron, having stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude. Wotton.
 The present age hath attempted perpetual motions, whose revolutions might out-last the exemplary mobility, and out-measure time itself. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
 The Romans had the advantage by the bulk of their ships, and the fleet of Antiochus in the swiftness and mobility of theirs, which served them in great stead in the flight. Arbutnot.
 You tell, it is ingenite, active force,
Mobility, or native power to move Words, which mean nothing. Blackmore.
 2. [In cant language.] The populace.
 She singled you out with her eye as commander in chief of the mobility. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
 3. Pickleness; inconstancy. Ans.
MO'CHO-STONE. n. f. [from Mocha, therefore more properly Mocha-stone.]
Mocha-stones are nearly related to the agat kind, of a clear horny grey, with declinations representing mosses, shrubs, and branches, in black, brown, or red, in the substance of the stone. Woodward.
 To MOCK. v. a. [moquer, French; moccio, Welsh.]
 1. To deride; to laugh at; to ridicule.
 All the regions
 Do seemingly revolt; and who resist
 Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
 And perish constant fools. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Many thousand widows,
 Shall this his mock, mock out of their dear husbands;
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down. Shakespeare.
 We'll dishorn the spirit,
 And mock him home to Windor. Shakespeare.
 Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. Heb. xi.
 I am as one mocked of his neighbour, the just, upright man is mocked to scorn. Job xii. 4.
 2. To deride by imitation; to mimic in contempt.
 I long, till Edward fall by war's mischance,
 For mocking marriage with a dame of France. Shakespeare.
 3. To defeat; to elude.
 My father is gone into his grave,
 And with his spirit sadly I survive,

M O C

To mock the expectations of the world;
 To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out Rotten opinion. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
 4. To fool; to tantalize; to play on contemptuously.
 He will not
 Mock us with his blest sight, then snatch him hence,
 Soon we shall see our hope return. Milton's Par. Reg.
 Why do I overlive?
 Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
 To deathless pain? Milton's Par. Reg. b. x.
 Heav'n's fuller influence mocks our dazzl'd sight,
 Too great its brightness, and too strong its light. Prior.
 To Mock. v. n. To make contemptuous sport.
 Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
 For now a time is come to mock at form. Shakespeare.
 A stallion horse is as a mocking friend; he neigheth under every one. Ecclus. xxiii. 6.
 A reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries. Ecclus. xxii. 4.
 After I have spoken, mock on.
 When thou mockest, shall no man make thee ashamed? Job xxi. 3.
Mock. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Ridicule; act of contempt; sneer; gibe; flirt.
 Tell the pleasant prince this mock of his Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones. Shakespeare's Henry V.
 Oh, 'tis the spite of hell, the fiend's arch mock,
 To lip a wanton, and suppose her chaste. Shakespeare.
 Fools make a mock at fin. Prov. xiv. 9.
 What shall be the portion of those who have affronted God, derided his word, and made a mock of every thing that is sacred? Tillotson's Sermons.
 Colin makes mock at all her piteous smart,
 A lass that Cicly hight, had won his heart. Gay.
 2. Imitation; mimicry.
 Now reach a strain, my lute,
 Above her mock, or be for ever mute. Crahan.
Mock. adj. False; counterfeit; not real.
 The mock astrologer, El astrologo fingido. Dryden.
 That superior greatness and mock majesty, which is ascribed to the prince of fallen angels, is admirably preserved. Spitt.
MO'CKABLE. adj. [from mock.] Exposed to derision.
 Those that are good manners at the court, are as ridiculous in the country, as the behaviour of the country is most mockable at court. Shakespeare's As you like it.
MOCK-PRIVET. n. f. Plants. Ainsworth.
MOCK-WILLOW. n. f. Plants. Ainsworth.
MO'CKEL. adj. [the same with mickle. See MICKLE. This word is variously written mickle, mickel, mochil, mochel, mickle.] Much; many.
 The body bigg, and mightily pight,
 Thoroughly rooted, and wondrous height,
 Whilom had been the king of the field,
 And mockel mast to the husband did yield. Spenser.
MO'CKER. n. f. [from mock.]
 1. One who mocks; a scoffer; a derider.
 Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are. Shakespeare.
 Let them have a care how they intrude upon so great and holy an ordinance, in which God is so seldom mocked but it is to the mockers confusion. South's Sermons.
 2. A deceiver; an elusory impostor.
MO'CKERY. n. f. [moquerie, Latin.]
 1. Derision; scorn; sportive insult.
 The forlorn maiden, whom your eyes have seen
 The laughing-flock of fortune's mockeries, Am the only daughter of a king and queen. Fa. 24.
 Why should publick mockery in print be a better test of truth than severe railing sarcasms. Watt.
 2. Ridicule; contemptuous merriment.
 A new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery; an art of contradiction by way of scorn, where-with we were long sithence forewarned. Hooker, b. v.
 3. Sport; subject of laughter.
 What cannot be prefer'd when fortune takes,
 Patience her injury a mockery makes. Shakespeare's Othello.
 Of the holy place they made a mockery. 2 Mac. viii. 17.
 4. Vanity of attempt; delusory labour; vain effort.
 It is as the air, invulnerable;
 And our vain blows malicious mockery. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 5. Imitation; counterfeit appearance; vain show.
 To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
 Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shakespeare.
 What though no friends in fable weeds appear,
 Grieve for an hour, perhaps, then mourn a year,
 And bear about the mockery of woe
 To midnight dances. Pope's Mised.
MO'CKING-BIRD. n. f. [mocking and bird.] An American bird, which imitates the note of other birds.

MO'CKING-STOCK. n. f. [mocking and stock.] A butt for merriment.
MO'DAL. adj. [modale, Fr. modalis, Latin.] Relating to the form or mode, not the essence.
 When we speak of faculties of the soul, we assert not with the schools their real distinction from it, but only a modal difference. Glanville's Scops.
MODALITY. n. f. [from modal.] Accidental difference; modal accident.
 The motions of the mouth by which the voice is discriminated, are the natural elements of speech; and the application of them in their several compositions, or words made of them, to signify things, or the modalities of things, and so to serve for communication of notions, is artificial. Holder.
MODE. n. f. [mode, Fr. modus, Latin.]
 1. Form; external variety; accidental discrimination; accident.
 A mode is that which cannot subsist in and of itself, but is always esteemed as belonging to, and subsisting by, the help of some substance, which, for that reason, is called its subject. Watt's Logic, p. 1.
 Few allow mode to be called a being in the same perfect sense as a substance is, and some modes have evidently more of real entity than others. Watt's Logic.
 2. Gradation; degree.
 What modes of fight betwixt each wide extreme,
 The mole's dim curtain, and the lux's beam;
 Of finell, the headlong lions' between,
 And bound fagacious on the tainted green. Pope.
 3. Manner; method; form; fashion.
 Our Saviour beheld
 A table richly spread, in regal mode,
 A lass that Cicly hight, had won his heart. Milton's Par. Reg. b. ii.
 The duty itself being resolved upon, the mode of doing it may easily be found. Taylor's Guide to a Penitent.
 4. State; appearance.
 My death
 Changes the mode; for what in me was purchas'd, Falls upon thee in a much fairer sort,
 For thou the garland wear'st successively. Shakespeare.
 5. [Mode, French.] Fashion; custom.
 There are certain garbs and modes of speaking, which vary with the times; the fashion of our clothes being not more subject to alteration than that of our speech. Denham.
 We are to prefer the blessings of Providence before the splendid curiosities of mode and imagination. L'Estrange.
 They were invited from all parts; and the favour of learning was the humour and mode of the age. Temple.
 As we see on coins the different faces of persons, we see too their different habits and dresses, according to the mode that prevailed. Addison on ancient Medals.
 If faith itself has different dresses worn,
 What wonder modes in wit should take their turn? Pope.
MODEL. n. f. [modele, French; modulus, Latin.]
 1. A representation in miniature of something made or done.
 I'll draw the form and model of our battle;
 Limit each leader to his several charge,
 And part in just proportion our small strength. Shakespeare.
 You have the models of several ancient temples, though the temples and the gods are perished. Addison.
 2. A copy to be imitated.
 A fault it would be if some king should build his mansion-house by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker, b. v.
 They cannot see sin in those means they use, with intent to reform to their models what they call religion. K. Charles.
 3. A mould; any thing which shows or gives the shape of that which it incloses.
 Nothing can we call our own but death;
 And that small model of the barren earth,
 Which serves as paste and cover to our bones. Shakespeare.
 4. Standard; that by which any thing is measured.
 As he who preumes steps into the throne of God, so he that despairs measures providence by his own little contracted model. South's Sermons.
 5. In Shakespeare it seems to have two unexampled senses.
 I have commended to his goodness
 The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter. Shak.
 Something small and diminutive; which, perhaps, is likewise the meaning of the example affixed to the third sense.
 England! model to thy inward greatness,
 Like little body with a mighty heart. Shakespeare.
 To MO'DEL. v. a. [modeler, French.] To plan; to shape; to mould; to form; to delineate.
 When they come to model heav'n,
 And calculate the stars, how they will wield
 The mighty frame. Milton's Par. Reg. b. viii.
 The government is modelled after the same manner with that of the Cantons, as much as so small a community can imitate those of so large an extent. Addison on Italy.

MODELLER. n. f. [from model.] Planner; schemer; contriver.
 Our great modellers of gardens have their magazines of plants to dispose of. Spectat. N<sup>o</sup>. 414.
MODERATE. adj. [moderatus, Lat. moderé, Fr.]
 1. Temperate; not excessive.
 Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating, but pangs of the belly are with an insatiable man. Ecclus. xxxi. 20.
 2. Not hot of temper.
 A number of moderate members managed with so much art as to obtain a majority, in a thin house, for passing a vote, that the king's concessions were a ground for a future settlement. Swift.
 3. Not luxurious; not expensive.
 There's not so much left as to furnish out
 A moderate table. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
 4. Not extreme in opinion; not sanguine in a tenet.
 These are tenets which the moderate of the Romanists will not venture to affirm. Smalbridge.
 Fix'd to one part, but mod'rate to the rest. Pope.
 5. Placed between extremes; holding the mean.
 Quietly consider the trial that hath been thus long had of both kinds of reformation; as well this moderate kind, which the church of England hath taken, as that other more extreme and rigorous, which certain churches elsewhere have better liked. Hooker, b. iv.
 6. Of the middle rate.
 More moderate gifts might have prolong'd his dates;
 Too early fitted for a better state. Dryden.
 To MO'DERATE. v. a. [moderor, Latin; moderer, Fr.]
 1. To regulate; to refrain; to still; to pacify; to quiet; to repress.
 With equal measure she did moderate
 The strong extremities of their rage. Spenser.
 By its astringent quality it moderates the relaxing quality of warm water. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 2. To make temperate.
 Ye swarthy nations of the torrid zone,
 How well to you is this great bounty known?
 For frequent gales from the wide ocean rise
 To fan your air, and moderate your skies. Blackmore.
MO'DERATELY. adv. [from moderate.]
 1. Temperately; mildly.
 2. In a middle degree.
 Each nymph but moderately fair,
 Commands with no less rigor here. Waller.
 Blood in a healthy state, when let out, its red part should congeal strongly and soon, in a moderately tough, and swim in the serum. Arbutnot on Aliments.
MO'DERATENESS. n. f. [from moderate.] State of being moderate; temperateness.
MODERATION. n. f. [moderatio, Latin.]
 1. Forbearance of extremity; the contrary temper to party violence; state of keeping a due mean betwixt extremes.
 Was it the purpose of these churches, which abolished all popish ceremonies, to come back again to the middle point of evenness and moderation? Hooker, b. iv.
 A zeal in things pertaining to God, according to knowledge, and yet duly tempered with candor and prudence, is the true notion of that much talked of, much misunderstood virtue, moderation. Atterbury's Sermons.
 In moderation placing all my glory,
 While totes call me whigs, and whigs a tory. Pope.
 2. Calmness of mind; equanimity. [moderation, Fr.]
 Equally inur'd
 By moderation either state to bear, Prosperous, or adverse. Milt. Par. Reg. b. xi.
 3. Frugality in expence. Ainsworth.
MODERATOR. n. f. [moderator, Lat. moderatrix, Fr.]
 1. The person or thing that calms or restrains.
 Angling was, after tedious study, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, and a procurer of contentedness. Walton's Angler.
 2. One who presides in a disputation, to restrain the contending parties from indecency, and confine them to the question. Sometimes the moderator is more troublesome than the actor.
 How does Philopolis seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long-practised moderator? More.
 The first person who speaks when the court is set, opens the case to the judge, chairman, or moderator of the assembly, and gives his own reasons for his opinion. Watts.
MODERN. n. f. [moderne, Fr. from modernus, low Latin, supposed a casual corruption of hodiernus. Vel potius ad adverbio modis, modernus, ut die diurnus. Ans.]
 1. Late; recent; not ancient; not antique.
 Some of the ancient, and likewise divers of the modern writers, that have laboured in natural magic, have noted a sympathy between the sun and certain herbs. Bacon.
 The glorious parallels then downward bring To modern wonders, and to Britain's king. Prior.

We have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar things supernatural and causeless. Shakespeare.
Mo'DERNS. n. f. Those who have lived lately, opposed to the ancients.
There are moderns who, with a slight variation, adopt the opinion of Plato. Boyle on Colours.
Some by old words to fame have made pretence;
Ancients in phrase, mere moderns in their sense! Pope.
Mo'DERNISM. n. f. [from modern.] Deviation from the ancient and classical manner. A word invented by Swift.
Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms. Swift.
To Mo'DERNISE. v. a. [from modern.] To adapt ancient compositions to modern persons or things; to change ancient to modern language.
MODEST. adj. [modeste, Fr. modestus, Latin.]
Mo'DESTNESS. n. f. [from modest.] Novelty.
1. Not arrogant; not presumptuous; not boastful; bashful.
Of boasting more than of a tomb afraid;
A soldier should be modest as a maid. Young.
2. Not impudent; not forward.
Resolve me with all modest haste, which way
Thou might'st deserve, or they impose this usage. Shakespeare.
Her face, as in a nymph, display'd
A fair fierce boy, or in a boy betray'd.
The blushing beauties of a modest maid. Dryden's Ovid.
3. Not loose; not unchaste.
Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
4. Not excessive; not extreme; moderate; within a mean.
There appears much joy in him, even so much that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakespeare. Much ado about nothing.
During the last four years, by a modest computation, there have been brought into Brest above six millions sterling in ballion. Addison's State of the War.
Mo'DESTLY. adv. [from modest.]
1. Not arrogantly; not presumptuously.
Though learn'd, well bred; and though well bred, sincere,
Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope.
I may modestly conclude, that whatever errors there may be in this play, there are not those which have been objected to it. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
First he modestly conjectures,
His pupil might be tir'd with lectures:
Which help'd to mortify his pride,
Yet gave him not the heart to chide. Swift's Miscel.
2. Not impudently; not forwardly; with modesty.
I, your glass,
Will modestly discover to yourself
That of yourself, which yet you know not of. Shakespeare.
3. Not excessively; with moderation.
Mo'DESTY. n. f. [modestia, Fr. modestas, Latin.]
1. Not arrogance; not presumptuousness.
They cannot, with modesty, think to have found out absolutely the best which the wit of men may devise. Hooker.
2. Not impudence; not forwardness.
Moderation; decency.
A lord will hear you play;
But I am doubtful of your modesties,
Left over eying of his odd behaviour,
You break into some merry passion. Shakespeare.
4. Chastity; purity of manners.
Would you not swear,
All you that see her, that she were a maid,
By these exterior shews? But she is more,
Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty. Shakespeare.
Of the general character of women, which is modesty, he has taken a most becoming care; for his amorous expressions go no farther than virtue may allow. Dryden.
Talk not to a lady in a way that modesty will not permit her to answer. Clarissa.
MODESTY-PIECE. n. f.
A narrow lace which runs along the upper part of the stays before, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Addison's Guard. N° 118.
Mo'DICUM. n. f. [Latin.] Small portion; pittance.
What modicums of wit he utters: his evasions have ears thus long. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cressida.
Though hard their fate,
A cruise of water, and an ear of corn,
Yet still they grudge'd that modicum. Dryden.

MOH

- MODIFIABLE. adj. [from modify.] That may be diversified by accidental differences.
It appears to be more difficult to conceive a distinct, visible image in the uniform, invariable, essence of God, than in variously modifiable matter; but the manner how I see either still escapes my comprehension. Locke.
Mo'DIFICABLE. adj. [from modify.] Diversifiable by various modes.
MODIFICATION. n. f. [modification, French.] The act of modifying any thing, or giving it new accidental differences of form or mode.
The chief of all signs is human voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, viz. the letters of the alphabet, formed by the several motions of the mouth. Holder's Elements of Speech.
The phenomena of colours in refracted or reflected light, are not caused by new modifications of the light variously impressed, according to the various terminations of the light and shadow. Newton's Opticks.
If these powers of cogitation, volition and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it, it necessarily follows that they proceed from some cogitative substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit. Bentley.
To Mo'DIFY. v. a. [modifier, French.]
1. To change the form or accidents of any thing; to shape.
Yet there is that property in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words through the voluble motions of the organs, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder.
The middle parts of the broad beam of white light which fell upon the paper, did, without any confine of shadow to modify it, become coloured all over with one uniform colour, the colour being always the same in the middle of the paper as at the edges. Newton's Opticks.
2. To soften; to moderate.
After all this ducanting and modifying upon the matter, there is hazard on the yielding side. L'Estrange.
Of his grace
He modifies his first severe decree,
The keener edge of battle to rebate. Dryden.
Mo'DILLON. n. f. [French; modulus, Lat.]
Modillions, in architecture, are little brackets which are often set under the corinthian and composite orders, and serve to support the projection of the frieze or the architrave; this part must be distinguished from the great modil, which is the diameter of the pillar; for, as the proportion of an edifice in general depends on the diameter of the pillar, so the size and number of the modillions, as also the interval between them, ought to have due relation to the whole fabric. Harris.
The modillions or dentelli make a noble show by their graceful projections. Spektor, N° 415.
Mo'DISH. adj. [from mode.] Fashionable; formed according to the reigning custom.
But you, perhaps, expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs, and wanton dances grac'd. Dryd.
Hypocrisy, at the fashionable end of the town, is very different from hypocrisy in the city; the modish hypocrite endeavours to appear more virtuous than he really is, the other kind of hypocrite more virtuous. Addison's Spect. N° 399.
Mo'DISHLY. adv. [from modish.] Fashionably.
Young children should not be much perplexed about putting off their hats, and making legs modishly. Locke.
Mo'DISHNESS. n. f. [from modish.] Affectation of the fashion.
To Mo'DULATE. v. a. [modulator, Latin.] To form found to a certain key, or to certain notes.
The nose, lips, teeth, palate, jaw, tongue, weasan, lungs, muscles of the chest, diaphragm, and muscles of the belly, all serve to make or modulate the sound. Grew's Cynosol.
Could any person so modulate her voice as to deceive so many. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.
Echo propagates around
Each charm of modulated sound. Anon.
MODULATION. n. f. [from modulate; modulation, Fr.]
1. The act of forming any thing to certain proportion.
The number of the simple original minerals have not been rightly fixt: the matter of two or more kinds being mixed together, and by the different proportion and modulation of that matter variously diversified, have been reputed all different kinds. Woodward.
The speech, as it is a sound resulting from the modulation of the air, has most affinity to the spirit, but, as it is uttered by the tongue, has immediate cognation with the body, and so is the fittest instrument to manage a commerce between the invisible powers of human souls clothed in flesh. Government of the Tongue.
2. Sound modulated; agreeable harmony.
Innumerable songsters, in the freshening shade,
Their modulations mix, mellifluous. Thomson's Spring.
Mo'DULATOR. n. f.

MOI

- Mo'DULATOR. n. f. [from modulate.] He who forms sounds to a certain key; a tuner; that which modulates.
The tongue is the grand instrument of taste, the faithful judge of all our nourishment, the artful modulator of our voice, and the necessary servant of mastication. Derham.
Mo'DULE. n. f. [modulus, Latin.] An empty representation; a model.
My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be uttered;
And then, all this thou seest, is but a clod
And module of confounded royalty. Shakespeare. King John.
Mo'DUS. n. f. [Latin.] Something paid as a compensation for tithes on the supposition of being a moderate equivalent.
One terrible circumstance of this bill, is turning the tithe of flax and hemp into what the lawyers call a modus, or a certain sum in lieu of a tenth part of the product. Swift.
Mo'DWALL. n. f. A bird. Ainsl.
MoE. adj. [ma, Saxon. See Mo.] More; a greater number.
The chronicles of England mention no mo than only six kings bearing the name of Edward since the conquest, therefore it cannot be there should be more. Hooker, b. ii.
Mo'HAIR. n. f. [moivre, moire, Fr.] Thread or stuff made of camels or other hair.
She, while her lover pants upon her breast,
Can mark the figures on an Indian chest,
And when the sees her friend in deep despair,
Observes how much a chintz exceeds mohair. Pope.
Mo'HOCK. n. f. The name of a cruel nation of America given to rustians who infested, or rather were imagined to infest, the streets of London.
From milk-'op he starts up moack. Prior.
Who has not trembled at the moack's name? Gay.
Thou hast fallen upon me with the rage of a mad dog, or a moack. Dennis.
Mo'NDERED. adj. Crazy. Ainsl.
Mo'NDRE. n. f. [mode, Fr.] A Portugal coin, rated at one pound seven shillings.
Mo'NETY. n. f. [moitié, French, from moien, the middle.] Half; one of two equal parts.
This company being divided into two equal moieties, the one before, the other since the coming of Christ; that part which, since the coming of Christ, partly hath embraced, and partly shall embrace, the Christian religion, we term as by a more proper name, the church of Christ. Hooker, b. iii.
The death of Antony
Is not a single doom, in that name lay
A moiet of the world. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Say, that she were gone,
Given to the fire, a moiet of my rest.
Might come to me. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
Touch'd with human gentleness and love,
Forgive a moiet of the principal. Shakespeare.
The militia was settled, a moiet of which should be nominated by the king, and the other moiet by the parliament. Cl.
As this is likely to produce a cessation of arms among one half of our island, it is reasonable that the more beautiful moiet of his majesty's subjects should establish a truce. Addison.
To MOIL. v. a. [moiller, French.]
1. To dawb with dirt.
All they which were left were moiled with dirt and mire by reason of the deepness of the rainy way. Knelles.
2. To weary.
No more tug one another thus, nor moil yourselves, receive Prize equal. Chapman's Iliad.
To MOIL. v. n. [moiller, French.]
1. To labour in the mire.
Moil not too much under-ground, for the hope of mines is very uncertain. Bacon's Essays.
2. To toil; to drudge.
They toil and moil for the interest of their masters, that in requital break their hearts; and the freer they are of their flesh, the more scandalous is the bondage. L'Estrange.
Oh the endless misery of the life I lead! cries the moiling husband; to spend all my days in ploughing. L'Estrange.
Now he must moil, and drudge, for one he loaths. Dry.
With thee 'twas Marian's dear delight
To moil all day, and merry-make at night. Gay's Post.
MOIST. adj. [moiste, moite, French.]
1. Wet, not dry; wet, not liquid; wet in a small degree.
Why were the moist in number so outdone,
That to a thousand dry they are but one. Blackmore.
Many who live well in a dry air, fall into all the diseases that depend upon a relaxation in a moist one.
Nor yet, when moist Arcturus clouds the sky,
The woods and fields their pleasing toils deny. Pope.
2. Juicy; succulent. Ainsl.
To MOIST. v. a. [from moist.] To make damp; to make
To MOISTEN. v. a. wet to a small degree; to damp.

Mo'ISTURE. n. f. [moiteur, Fr. from moist.] Small quantity of water or liquid.
Sometimes angling to a little river near hand, which, for the moisture it bestowed upon roots of some flourishing trees, was rewarded with their shadow. Sidney.
All my body's moisture
Scarce serves to quench my furnace-burning heat. Shak.
Set such plants as require much moisture upon sandy, dry grounds. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 526.
While dryness moisture, coldness heat refits,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists. Denham.
If some penurious source by chance appear'd
Scanty of waters, when you scoop'd it dry,
And offer'd the full helmet up to Cato,
Did he not dash th' untasted moisture from him. Addison.
MOKES of a net. The meshes. Ainsl.
Mo'KY. adj. Dark; as, moiky weather. Ainsl. It seems a corruption of murky: and in some places they call it muggy, dusky.
MOLÉ. n. f. [mol, Saxon; mole, Fr. mola, Lat.]
1. A mole is a formless concretion of extravasated blood, which grows unto a kind of flesh in the uterus, and is called a false conception. Quincy.
2. A natural spot or discolouration of the body.
To nourish hair upon the moles of the face, is the perpetuation of a very ancient custom. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Such in painting are the warts and *mole*s, which adding a likeness to the face, are not therefore to be omitted. Dryden.
That Timothy Trim and Jack were the same person, was proved, particularly by a mole under the left pap. Arbutnot.
The peculiarities in Homer are marks and *mole*s, by which every common eye distinguishes him. Pope.
3. [From mole, Lat. mole, Fr.] A mound; a dyke.

Mountains,

MOL

Mountains, which to your Maker's view Seem less than molehills do to you. Recommon.
Strange ignorance! that the same man who knows How far yond' mount above this molehill shows,
Should not perceive a difference as great Between small incomes and a vast estate! Dryden's Fuv.
To MOLEST. v. a. [molest, Fr. molestus, Lat.] To disturb;
to trouble; to vex.
If they will firmly persist concerning points which hitherto have been disputed of, they must agree that they have molested the church with needless opposition. Hooker, b. iii.
No man shall meddle with them, or molest them in any matter. 1 Mac. x. 35.
Pleasure and pain signify whatsoever delights or molests us.
Locke.

MO'LLIFIABLE. adj. [from mollify.] That may be softened.
MO'LLIFICATION. n. f. [from mollify.]
1. The act of mollifying or softening.
For induration or mollification, it is to be inquired what will make metals harder and harder, and what will make them softer and softer. Bacon.
2. Pacification; mitigation.
Some mollification, sweet lady. Shakespeare.
MO'LLIFIER. n. f. [from mollify.]
1. That which softens; that which appeases.
The root hath a tender, dainty heat; when, when it cometh above ground to the sun and air, vanisheth; for it is a great mollifier. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 863.
2. He that pacifies or mitigates.
To MO'LLIFY. v. a. [mollis, Latin; mollir, Fr.]
1. To soften; to make soft.
2. To alluage.
Neither herb, nor mollifying plaister, restored them to health. Wisd. xvi. 12.
Sores have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment. Isa. i. 6.
3. To appease; to pacify; to quiet.
Thinking her silent imaginations began to work upon somewhat, to mollify them, as the nature of mulick is to do,
I took up my harp. Sidney, b. ii.
He brought them to these savage parts,
And with sweet science mollify'd their stubborn hearts.
Fairy Queen, b. ii.
The crone, on the wedding-night, finding the knight's aversion, speaks a good word for herself, in hope to mollify the fullen bridegroom. Dryden.
4. To qualify; to lessen any thing harsh or burdensome.
They would, by yielding to some things, when they refused others, sooner prevail with the houses to mollify their demands, than at first to reform them. Clarendon, b. viii.
Cowley thus paints Goliath:
The valley, now, this monster seem'd to fill,
And we, methought, look'd up to him from our hill;
where the two words, seem'd and methought, have mollified
the figure. Dryden's Pref. to his State of Innocence.
MO'LTEN. part. pass. from melt.
Braft is molten out of the stone. Job xxviii. 2.
In a small furnace made of a temperate heat; let the heat be such as may keep the metal molten, and no more. Bacon.
Love's mystick form the artizans of Greece
In wounded stone, or molten gold express. Prior.
MO'LY. n. f. [moly, Latin; moly, French.]
The moly hath pinnated leaves, like those of the lentiscus, but are terminated by an odd lobe: the flower expands in the form of a rose, and the fruit resembles a grain of pepper.
Miller.
Moly, or wild garlick, is of several sorts; as the great moly of Homer, the Indian moly, the moly of Hungary, ferpent's moly, the yellow moly, Spanish purple moly, Spanish silver-capped moly, Dioscorides's moly, the sweet moly of Montpelier: the roots are tender, and must be carefully defended from frosts: as for the time of their flowering, the moly of Homer flowers in May, and continues till July, and so do all the rest except the last, which is late in September: they are hardy, and will thrive in any soil. Mortimer's Herb.

The sovereign plant he drew,
And shew'd its nature, and its wondrous pow'r;
Black was the root, but milky white the flow'r;
Moly the name.
MOLO'SSES. n. f. [mellezzo, Italian.] Treacle; the spume or MOLA'SSES. n. f. [mum, of the juice of the sugar-cane.]
MOME. n. f. A dull, stupid blockhead, a flock, a post: this owes its original to the French word momon, which signifies the gaming at dice in masquerade, the custom and rule of which is, that a strict silence is to be observed; whatsoever fun one stakes another covers, but not a word is to be spoken; from hence also comes our word mum for silence.
Hammer.
Mome, malthorse, capon, coxcomb, idiot, patch!
Either get thee from the door, or sit down at the hatch.
Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.
MO'MENT. n. f. [moment, Fr. momentum, Latin.]
1. Consequence; importance; weight; value.
We do not find that our Saviour reproved them of error, for thinking the judgment of the scribes to be worth the objecting, for esteeming it to be of any moment or value in matters concerning God. Hooker, b. ii.
I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment.
Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
What towns of any moment but we have?
It is an abstruse speculation, but also of far less moment and consequence to us than the others: seeing that without this we can evince the existence of God. Bentley's Sermon.
2. Force; impulsive weight; actuating power.
The place of publick prayer is a circumstance in the outward form, which hath moment to help devotion. Hooker.
Can these or such be any aid to us?
Look they as they were built to shake the world?
Or be a moment to our enterprise? Benj. Johnson.
Touch with lightest moment of impulse
His free-will, to her own inclining left In even scale. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
He is a capable judge; can hear both sides with an indiferent ear; is determined only by the moments of truth, and so retracts his past errors. Norris's Miscel.
3. An indivisible particle of time.
If I would go to hell for an eternal moment, or so, I could be knighted. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it: from this moment
The very firrings of my heart shall be
The firrings of my hand. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The imaginary reasoning of brutes is not a distinct reasoning, but performed in a physical moment. Hale.
Yet thus receiving and returning bliss
In this great moment, in this golden now,
When every trace of what, or when, or how,
Shou'd from my soul by raging love be torn. Prior.
MO'MENTALLY. adv. [from momentum, Latin.] For a moment.
Air but momentarily remaining in our bodies, hath no pro-portionable space for its conversion, only of length enough to refrigerate the heart. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
MO'MENTANEOUS. adj. [momentane, Fr. momentaneus, Lat.]
MO'MENTARY. adj. [lasting but a moment.]
Small difficulties, when exceeding great good is sure to ensue; and, on the other side, momentary benefits, when the hurt which they draw after them is unspeakable, are not at all to be respected. Hooker, b. i.
Flame above is durable and consistent; but with us it is a stranger and momentary. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 31.
MO'MENTARY. adj. [from moment.] Lasting for a moment;
done in a moment.
Momentary as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream. Shakespeare.
Scarce could the shady king
The horrid sum of his intentions tell,
But she, swift as the momentary wing
Of lightning, or the words he spoke, left hell. Craford.
Swift as thought the flitting shade
Through air his momentary journey made.
Onions, garlick, pepper, salt and vinegar, taken in great quantities, excite a momentary heat and fever. Arbutnot.
MO'MENTOUS. adj. [from momentum, Latin.] Important; weighty; of consequence.
Great Anne, weighing th' events of war
Momentous, in her prudent heart these chose. Philps.
If any false step be made in the more momentous concerns of life, the whole scheme of ambitious designs is broken. Ad.
MO'MMERY.

MON

MO'MMERY. n. f. [or mummery, from mummer, momerie, Fr.]
An entertainment in which maskers play frolics. See MOME.
All was jollity,
Feasting and mirth, light wantonness and laughter,
Piping and playing, minstrelsy and masking,
Till life fled from us like an idle dream.
A show of mummery without a meaning. Rotor.
MONACHAL. adj. [monachal, Fr. monachalis, Lat. μοναχικός.]
Monastick; relating to monks, or conventual orders.
MONACHISM. n. f. [monachisme, Fr.] The state of monks;
the monastick life.
MO'NAD. n. f. [μονάς.] An indivisible thing.
MO'NADE. n. f. [monade, Fr. monade, Lat. μοναδα.]
Disunity is the natural property of matter, which of itself is nothing else but an infinite congeries of physical monads.
More's Divine Dialogues.
MONARCH. n. f. [monarch, Fr. monarque, Lat. monarcha.]
1. A governor invested with absolute authority; a king.
I was
A morsel for a monarch. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth
Do all expect that you should rouse yourself. Shakespeare.
The father of a family or nation, that uses his servants like children, and advises with them in what concerns the commonweal, and thereby is willingly obeyed by them, is what the schools mean by a monarch. Temple's Miscel.
2. One superior to the rest of the same kind.
The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.
With ease distinguish'd is the regal race,
One monarch wears an open, honest face;
Shap'd to his size, and godlike to behold,
His royal body shines with specks of gold. Dryden's Virg.
Return'd with dire remorseless sway,
The monarch savage rends the trembling prey. Pope's Ody.
3. President.
Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plump Bacchus, with pink eyne,
In thy vast carers be drown'd. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.
MONARCHAL. adj. [from monarch.] Suiing a monarch; regal; princely; imperial.
Satan, whom now transcendent glory rais'd
Above his fellows, with monarchal pride, Conscious of highest worth, unmov'd thus spake. Milton.
MONARCHICAL. adj. [monarchique, Fr. monarchique, from monarch.] Vested in a single ruler.
That flock will only live in free states, is a pretty conceit to advance the opinion of popular policies, and from antipathies in nature to disparage monarchical government.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
The decretals resolve all into a monarchical power at Rome.
Baker's Reflections on Learning.
To MO'NARCHISE. v. n. [from monarch.] To play the king.
Allowing him a breath, a little scene
To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks. Shakespeare.
MO'NARCHY. n. f. [monarchie, Fr. monarchie.]
1. The government of a single person.
While the monarchy flourished, these wanted not a protector. Atterbury's Sermons.
2. Kingdom; empire.
I pass
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.
The first that there did greet my stranger soul,
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Who cried aloud, What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence. Shakespeare.
This small inheritance
Contenteth me, and 's worth a monarchy. Shakespeare.
MO'NASTERY. n. f. [monastere, Fr. monasterium, Lat.] House of religious retirement; convent. It is usually pronounced, and often written, monstry.
Then courts of kings were held in high renown;
There, virgins honourable vows receiv'd,
But chaste as maids in monasteries liv'd. Dryden.
In a monastery your devotions cannot carry you so far toward the next world, as to make this life the fight of you. Pope.
MONASTICK. adj. [monastique, Fr. monastique, Latin.] Religiously recluse; pertaining to a monk.
I drove my tutor to fortwear the full stream of the world, and to live in a nook merely monastick. Shakespeare.
The siliuous and hairy vests of the strictest orders of friars derive the institution of their monastick life from the example of John and Elias. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
When young, you led a life monastick,
And wore a vast ecclesiastick;
Now in your age you grow fantastick. Denham.
MONASTICALLY. adv. [from monastick.] Reclutely; in the manner of a monk.
I have a dozen years more to answer for, all monastically pass'd in this country of liberty and delight. Swift.

week.
MO'NEY. n. f. [mōnnoy, French; moneta, Latin.] It has properly no plural except when money is taken for a single piece; but monies was formerly used for sums; Metal coined for the purposes of commerce.
Importune him for monies; be not ceast
With slight denial. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
The jealous wittolly knave hath masses of money. Shakespeare.
You need my help, and you say,
Shylock, we would have monies. Shakespeare.
I will give thee the worth of it in money. 1 Kings xxi. 2.
Wives the readiest helps
To betray heady husbands, rob the easy,
And lend the monies on return of lust. Benj. Johnson.
Money differs from uncoined silver, in that the quantity of silver in each piece of money is ascertained by the stamp it bears, which is a publick voucher. Locke.
My discourse to the hen-peck'd has produced many correspondents; such a discourse is of general use, and every married man's money. Addison's Spect. No. 482.
People are not obliged to receive any monies, except of their own coinage by a publick mint. Swift.
Those hucksters or money jobbers will be found necessary, if this brass money is made current in the exchequer. Swift.
MO'NEYBAG. n. f. [money and bag.] A large purse.
Look to my house; I am right loth to go;
There is some ill a brewing towards my rest,
For I did dream of moneybags to-night. Shakespeare.
My place was taken up by an ill-bred puppy, with a moneybag under each arm. Addison's Guard. No. 106.
MO'NEYBOX. n. f. [money and box.] A till.
MO'NEYCHANGER. n. f. [money and change.] A broker in money.
The users or moneychangers being a scandalous employment at Rome, is a reason for the high rate of interest. Arbutnot.
MO'NEYED. adj. [from money.] Rich in money: often used in opposition to those who are possessed of lands.
Invite moneyed men to lend to the merchants, for the continuing and quickening of trade. Bacon's Essays.
If exportation will not balance importation, away must your silver go again, whether moneyed or not moneyed; for where goods do not, silver must pay for the commodities you spend. Locke.
Several turned their money into those funds, merchants as well as other moneyed men. Swift.
With these measures fell in all moneyed men; such as had raised vast sums by trading with stocks and funds, and lending upon great interest. Swift.
MO'NEYER. n. f. [monnoyer-eur, Fr. from money.]
1. One that deals in money; a banker.
2. A coiner of money.
MO'NEYLESS. adj. [from money.] Wanting money; penniless.
The strong expectation of a good certain salary will outweigh the loss by bad rents received out of lands in moneyless time. Swift.
MO'NEYMATTER. n. f. [money and matter.] Account of debtor and creditor.
What if you and I Nick should enquire how money matters stand between us? Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
MO'NEYSKRIVENER. n. f. [money and scrivener.] One who raises money for others.
Suppose a young unexperienced man in the hands of money-scriveners; such fellows are like your wire-drawing mills, if they get hold of a man's finger, they will pull in his whole body at last. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
MO'NEYWORT. n. f. A plant.
MO'NEYSWORTH. n. f. [money and worth.] Something value-able; something that will bring money.
There is either money or moneyworth in all the controversies of life; for we live in a mercenary world, and it is the price of all things in it. L'Estrange.
MO'NGCORN. n. f. [mang, Saxon, and corn.] Mixed corn:
as, wheat and rie.
MO'NGER. n. f. [mangepe, Saxon, a trader; from mangian, Saxon, to trade.] A dealer; a seller. It is used after the name of any commodity to express a seller of that commodity: as, a fishmonger; and sometimes a medler in any thing:
as, a whoremonger; a newsmonger.
Th' impatient states monger
Could now contain himself no longer. Hudibras, p. iii.
MO'NGREL. adj. [as mongern, from mang, Saxon, or mengern, to mix, Dutch.] Of a mixed breed.
This zealot
Is of a mongrel, divers kind,
Clerick before, and lay behind. Hudibras, p. i.
Ye mongrel work of heav'n, with human shapess,
That have but just enough of sense to know
The master's voice. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,
But mongrel mischievous. Dryden.
Bale,

MON

Base, groveling, worthless wretches;
Mongrels in faction; poor faint-hearted traitors. Addison.
 His friendship still to few confin'd,
 Were always of the middling kind;
 No fools of rank, or mongrel breed,
 Who fain would pass for lords indeed. Swift's Miscel.
MONIMENT. n. f. [from mones, Lat.] It seems here to signify inscription.
 Some others were driven and diftent
 Into great ingots and to wedges square,
 Some in round plates withouten monument. Fairy Queen.
TO MONISH. v. a. [from mones, Lat.] To admonish, of which it is a contraction.
Monish him gently, which shall make him both willing to amend, and glad to go forward in love. Alcham's Schoolmaster.
MONISHER. n. f. [from monish.] An admonisher; a monitor.
MONITION. n. f. [from monitus, Latin; monition, Fr.]
 1. Information; hint.
 We have no visible monition of the returns of any other periods, such as we have of the day, by successive light and darkness. Holder on Time.
 2. Instruction; document.
 Unruly ambition is deaf, not only to the advice of friends, but to the counsels and monitions of reason itself. L'Estrange.
 After sage monitions from his friends,
 He turns to politicks his dang'rous wit. Swift.
MONITOR. n. f. [Latin.] One who warns of faults, or informs of duty; one who gives useful hints. It is used of an upper scholar in a school commissioned by the master to look to the boys in his absence.
 You need not be a monitor to the king; his learning is eminent: be but his scholar, and you are safe. Bacon.
 It was the privilege of Adam innocent to have these notions also firm and untainted, to carry his monitor in his bosom, his law in his heart, and to have such a conscience as might be its own casuist. South's Sermons.
 We can but divine who it is that speaks; whether Perilus himself, or his friend and monitor, or a third person. Dryden.
 The pains that come from the necessities of nature, are monitors to us to beware of greater mischiefs. Locke.
MONITORY. adj. [from monitoire, Fr. monitorius, Lat.] Conveying useful instruction; giving admonition.
 Losses, miscarriages, and disappointments, are monitory and instructive. L'Estrange's Fables.
 He is so taken up still, in spite of the monitory hint in my essay, with particular men, that he neglects mankind. Pope.
MONITORY. n. f. Admonition; warning.
 A king of Hungary took a bishop in battle, and kept him prisoner; whereupon the pope writ a monitory to him, for that he had broken the privilege of holy church. Bacon.
MONK. n. f. [from monach, Saxon; monachus, Latin; μοναχός.] One of a religious community bound by vows to certain observances.
 'T would prove the verity of certain words, Spoke by a holy monk. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 Abdemeleck, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became a melancholy Mahometan monk. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
 The dromish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood,
 Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,
 And nestle in their ancient hives again. Rowe.
 Monks, in some respects, agree with regulars, as in the substantial vows of religion; but in other respects, monks and regulars differ; for that regulars, vows excepted, are not tied up to so strict a rule of life as monks are. Ayliffe's Parergon.
MONKEY. n. f. [from monikin, a little man.]
 1. An ape; a baboon; a jackanapes. An animal bearing some resemblance of man.
 One of them shewed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey: Tubal, it was my turquoise; I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys. Shakespeare.
 More new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey. Shakespeare. As you like it.
 Other creatures, as well as monkeys, destroy their young ones by senseless fondness. Locke on Education.
 With glittering gold and sparkling gems they shine,
 But apes and monkeys are the gods within. Granville.
 2. A word of contempt, or slight kindness.
 This is the monkey's own giving out; she is persuaded I will marry her. Shakespeare's Othello.
 Poor monkey! how wilt thou do for a father? Shakespeare.
MONKERY. n. f. [from monk.] The monkastick life.
 Neither do I meddle with their evangelical perfection of vows, nor the dangerous servitude of their rash and impotent votaries, nor the inconveniences of their monkery. Hall.
MONKHOOD. n. f. [from monk and hood.] The character of a monk.
 He had left off his monkhood too, and was no longer obliged to them. Atterbury.
MONKISH. adj. [from monk.] Monkastick; pertaining to monks; taught by monks.
 Those public charities are a greater ornament to this city than all its wealth, and do more real honour to the reformed religion, than redounds to the church of Rome from all those monkish and superstitious foundations of which the vainly boasts.

 Rise, rise, Roscommon, see the Blenheim mule,
 The dull constraint of monkish rhyme refuse. Smith.
MONK'S-HOOD. n. f. A plant.
MONK'S-RHUBARB. n. f. A species of dock: its roots are used in medicine.
MONOCHORD. n. f. [from μόνος and χορδή.]
 1. An instrument of one string: as, the trumpet marine. Har.
 2. A kind of instrument anciently of singular use for the regulating of sounds: the ancients made use of it to determine the proportion of sounds to one another: when the chord was divided into two equal parts, so that the terms were as one to one, they called them unisons; but if they were as two to one, they called them octaves or diapasons; when they were as three to two, they called them fifths or diapentes; if they were as four to three, they called them fourths or diatesseron; if the terms were as five to four, they called it diton, or a tierce major; but if the terms were as six to five, then they called it a demi-diton, or a tierce minor; and, lastly, if the terms were as twenty-four to twenty-five, they called it a demiton or dieze: the monochord being thus divided, was properly that which they called a system, of which there were many kinds, according to the different divisions of the monochord. Harris.
MONOCULAR. adj. [from μόνος and oculus.] One-eyed; having only one eye.
 He was well served who, going to cut down an antient white hawthorn tree, which, because the budded before others, might be an occasion of superstition, had some of the prickles flew into his eyes, and made him monocular. Houel.
 Those of China repute all the rest of the world monocular. Glanville's Sep.
MONODY. n. f. [from μόνος and ᾠδή, Fr.] A poem sung by one person not in dialogue.
MONOGAMIST. n. f. [from μόνος and γάμος; monogame, Fr.] One who disallows second marriages.
MONOGAMY. n. f. [from μόνος and γάμος.] Marriage of one wife.
MONOGRAM. n. f. [from μόνος and γράμμα; monogramme, Fr.] A cypher; a character compounded of several letters.
MONOLOGUE. n. f. [from μόνος and λόγος; monologue, Fr.] A scene in which a person of the drama speaks by himself; a soliloquy.
 He gives you an account of himself, and of his returning from the country, in monologue; to which unnatural way of narration Terence is subject in all his plays. Dryden.
MONOMACHY. n. f. [from μόνος and μάχη.] A duel; a single combat.
MONOME. n. f. [from monome, Fr.] In algebra, a quantity that has but one denomination or name; as, a, b, aab, aaab. Harris.
MONOPETALOUS. adv. [from μόνος and πέταλον.] It is used for such flowers as are formed out of one leaf, howsoever they may be seemingly cut into many small ones, and those fall off together. Quincy.
MONOPOLIST. n. f. [from monopoleur, French.] One who by engrossing or patent obtains the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.
TO MONOPOLIZE. v. a. [from μόνος and πωλεῖν; monopoleur, Fr.] To have the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.
 He has such a prodigious trade, that if there is not some stop put, he will monopolize; nobody will sell a yard of drapery, or mercery ware, but himself. Arbutnot.
MONOPOLY. n. f. [from μόνος and πωλή.] The exclusive privilege of selling any thing.
 Dost thou call me fool, boy?
 —All thy other titles hast thou given away; that thou wast born with.
 —Lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly on't they would have part on't. Shakespeare. King Lear.
 One of the most oppressive monopolies imaginable; all others can concern only something without us, but this fastens upon our nature, yea upon our reason. Go. of the Tongue.
 Shakespeare rather write happily than knowingly and jolly; and Johnson, who by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, yet seemed to envy to posterity that knowledge, and to make a monopoly of his learning. Dryden's Jew.
MONOPROTE. n. f. [from μόνος and πρωτός.] Is a noun used only in some oblique case. Clarke's Latin Grammar.
MONOSTICH. n. f. [from μόνος and στιχόν.] A composition of one verse.
MONOSYLLABICAL. adj. [from μόνος and σύνταγμα.] Consisting of words of one syllable.
MONOSYLLABLE. n. f. [from μόνος and σύνταγμα.] Consisting of words of one syllable.
 My name of Ptolemy!
 It is so long it asks an hour to write it:
 I'll change it into Jove or Mars!
 Or any other civil monosyllable,
 That will not tire my hand. Dryden's Cleopatra.

MON

These, although not insensible how much our language was already over-stocked with monosyllables, yet, to save time and pains, introduced that barbarous custom of abbreviating words, to fit them to the measure of their verses. Swift.
Monosyllable lines, unless artfully managed, are stiff or languishing; but may be beautiful to express melancholy. Pope.
MONOSYLLABLED. adj. [from μόνος and σύνταγμα, Fr. from monosyllable.] Consisting of one syllable.
 Nine taylor, if rightly spell'd,
 Into one man are monosyllabled. Cleaveland.
MONOTONY. n. f. [from μόνος and τόνος; monotonie, Fr.] Uniformity of sound; want of variety in cadence.
 I could object to the repetition of the same rhymes within four lines of each other as tiresome to the ear through their monotony. Pope's Letters.
MONSIEUR. n. f. [French.] A term of reproach for a Frenchman.
 A Frenchman his companion;
 An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves
 A Gallian girl. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
MONSOON. n. f. [from monsoon, Fr.]
Monsoons are shifting trade winds in the East Indian ocean, which blow periodically; some for half a year one way, others but for three months, and then shift and blow for six or three months directly contrary. Harris.
 The monsoons and trade winds are constant and periodical even to the thirtieth degree of latitude all around the globe, and seldom transgress or fall short of those bounds. Ray.
MONSTER. n. f. [from monstrare, Fr. monstrum, Latin.]
 1. Something out of the common order of nature.
 It ought to be determined whether monsters be really a distinct species; we find, that some of these monstrous productions have none of those qualities that accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive. Locke.
 2. Something horrible for deformity, wickedness, or mischief.
 If the live long,
 And, in the end, meet the old course of death,
 Women will all turn monsters. Shakespeare. King Lear.
 All human virtue
 Finds envy never conquer'd but by death:
 The great Alcides ev'ry labour pass'd,
 Had still this monster to subdue at last. Pope.
TO MONSTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put out of the common order of things. Not in use.
 Her offence
 Must be of such unnatural degree
 That monsters it. Shakespeare. King Lear.
 I had rather have one scratch my head if th' sun,
 When the alarm were struck, than idly fit
 To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
MONSTROUSITY. n. f. [from monstrous.] The state of being monstrous or monstrous.
 This is the monstrousity in love, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cressida.
 Such a tacit league is against such routs and shoals of people, as have utterly degenerated from nature, as have in their very body and frame of estate a monstrousity. Bacon.
 We read of monstrous births, but we often see a greater monstrousity in educations: thus, when a father has begot a man, he trains him up into a beast. South's Sermons.
 By the same law monstrousity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness the case of hermaphrodites. Arbutnot and Pope.
MONSTROUS. adj. [from monstruus, Fr. monstruosus, Latin.]
 1. Deviating from the stated order of nature.
 Every thing that exists has its particular constitution; and yet some monstrous productions have few of those qualities which accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive their originals. Locke.
 2. Strange; wonderful. Generally with some degree of dislike.
 Is it not monstrous that this player here
 But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
 Could force his soul so to his conceit,
 That, from her working, all his visage wan'd. Shakespeare.
 O monstrous! but one halfpenny worth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack. Shakespeare.
 3. Irregular; enormous.
 No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appear,
 The whole at once is bold and regular. Pope.
 4. Shocking; hateful.
 This was an invention given out by the Spaniards, to save the monstrous scorn their nation received.
MONSTROUS. adv. Exceedingly; very much. A cant term.
 Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a dram of each, turn into a mouldy substance, there residing a fair cloud in the bottom, and a monstrous thick oil on the top.
 She was easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estrange.
 Add, that the rich have still a gibe in store,
 And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden's Jew.

MONSTROUSLY. adv. [from monstrous.]
 1. In a manner out of the common order of nature; shockingly; terribly; horribly.
 He walks;
 And that self chain about his neck,
 Which he forwore most monstrously to have. Shakespeare.
 Tiberius was bad enough in his youth, but superlatively and monstrously so in his old age. South's Sermons.
 2. To a great or enormous degree.
 These truths with his example you disprove,
 Who with his wife is monstrously in love. Dryden's Jew.
MONSTROUSNESS. n. f. [from monstrous.] Enormity; irregular nature or behaviour.
 See the monstrousness of man,
 When he looks out in an ungrateful shape! Shakespeare.
MONTH. n. f. [French.] A term in fencing.
 Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?
 —To see thee fight, to see thee pass thy puncto, thy flock, thy traverse, thy distance, thy month. Shakespeare.
MONTEIRO. n. f. [Spanish.] A horseman's cap.
 His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish monters. Bacon.
MONTEITH. n. f. [from the name of the inventor.] A vessel in which glasses are washed.
 New things produce new words, and thus Monteth
 Has by one vessel sav'd his name from death. King.
MONTH. n. f. [from monath, Saxon.] A space of time either measured by the sun or moon: the lunar month is the time between the change and change, or the time in which the moon comes to the same point: the solar month is the time in which the sun passes through a sign of the zodiac: the calendar months, by which we reckon time, are unequally of thirty or one-and-thirty days, except February, which is of twenty-eight, and in leap year of twenty-nine.
 Till the expiration of your month,
 Sojourn with my sister. Shakespeare. King Lear.
 From a month old even unto five years old. Lev. xxvii. 6.
Months are not only lunar, and measured by the moon, but also solar, and determined by the motion of the sun, in thirty degrees of the ecliptic. Brown's Vulgar Errors; b. iv.
 As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
 So many years is the condemn'd by fate.
 To daily death. Dryden's Thea. and Honoria.
MONTH'S MIND. n. f. Longing desire.
 You have a month's mind to them. Shakespeare.
 For if a trumpet sound, or drum beat,
 Who has not a month's mind to combat? Hudibras; p. i.
MONTHLY. adj. [from month.]
 1. Continuing a month; performed in a month.
 I would ask concerning the monthly revolutions of the moon about the earth, or the diurnal ones of the earth upon its own axis, whether these have been finite or infinite. Bentley.
 2. Happening every month.
 The youth of heav'nly birth I view'd,
 For whom our monthly victims are renew'd. Dryden.
MONTHLY. adv. Once in a month.
 If the one may very well monthly, the other may as well even daily, be iterated. Hooker, b. v.
 O swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
 That changes monthly in her circl'd orb;
 Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakespeare.
MONTHLY. n. f. [French.] In horsemanship, a stone as high as the stirrups, which Italian riding-masters mount their horses from, without putting their foot in the stirrup. DiA.
MONTHLY. n. f. An under gunner, or assistant to a gunner, engineer, or fire-master. DiA.
MONUMENT. n. f. [from monumentum, Fr. monumentum, Latin.]
 1. Any thing by which the memory of persons or things is preserved; a memorial.
 In his time there remained the monument of his tomb in the mountain Jafus. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 He is become a notable monument of unprosperous disloyalty. King Charles.
 So many grateful altars I would rear
 Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
 Of lustre from the brook; in memory,
 Or monument to ages; and thereon Offer sweet-smelling gums. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
 Of ancient British art
 A pleasing monument, not less admir'd
 Than what from Attick or Etruscan hands Arose. Philips.
 Collect the best monuments of our friends, their own images in their writings. Pope to Swift.
 2. A tomb; a cenotaph; something erected in memory of the dead.
 On your family's old monument
 Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
 That appertain unto a burial. Shakespeare.
 The flowers which in the circling valley grow,
 Shall on his monument their odours throw. Sandys's Paraph.
 In a heap of slain,
 Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress'd

Of slaughter'd foes, whom first to death they sent,
The trophies of their strength, a bloody monument. Dryd.
With thee on Raphael's monument I mourn,
Or wait inspiring dreams at Maro's urn. Pope's Miscel.
MONUMENTAL. adj. [from monument.] Memorial; preserving memory.
When the sun begins to sting
His flaming beams, me, goddess, bring
To arched walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown that Sylvan loves,
Of pine or monumental oak. Milton.
The destruction of the earth was the most monumental proof that could have been given to all the succeeding ages of mankind. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. ii.
The polish'd pillar different sculptures grace,
A work outlasting monumental brass. Pope.
2. Raised in honour of the dead; belonging to a tomb.
Perseverance keeps honour bright;
To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shakespeare.
I'll not fear that whiter skin of her than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shakespeare. Othello.
Therefore if he needs must go,
And the fates will have it so,
Softly may he be posset
Of his monumental rest. Craibaw.
MOOD. n. f. [mode, Fr. modus, Latin.]
1. The form of an argument.
Mood is the regular determination of propositions according to their quantity and quality, i. e. their universal or particular affirmation or negation. Watts's Logic.
Aristotle reduced our loose reasonings to certain rules, and made them conclude in mode and figure. Baker on Learning.
2. Stile of musick.
They move
In perfect phalanx, to the Dorian mood
Of flutes, and soft recorders. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
Their found seems a tune
Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his complaint. Milton.
3. The change the verb undergoes in some languages, as the Greek, Latin, and French, to signify various intentions of the mind, is called mood. Clarke's Lat. Grammar.
4. [From mod, Gothick; moos, Saxon; moed, Dutch; and generally in all Teutonic dialects.] Temper of mind; state of mind as affected by any passion; disposition.
The trembling ghosts, with sad amazed mood,
Chattering their iron teeth, and flaring wide
With stony eyes. Fairy Queen, b. i.
The kingly beast upon her gazing stood.
With pity calm'd, down fell his angry mood. Fairy Qu.
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakespeare. Othello.
Clorinda changed to ruth her warlike mood,
Few silver drops her vermeil cheeks depaint. Fairfax.
Solyman, in a melancholy mood, walked up and down in his tent a great part of the night. Kneller.
She was in fittest mood
For cutting corns, or letting blood. Hudibras, p. ii.
These two kids t'appeal his angry mood
I bear, of which the furies give him good. Dryden.
He now profuse of tears,
In suppliant mood fell prostrate at our feet. Addison.
5. Angry; rage; heat of mind. Mod, in Gothick, signifies habitual temper.
That which we move for our better instruction's sake, turn-eth into anger and choler in them; yet in their mood they cast forth somewhat wherewith, under pain of greater displeasure, we must rest contented. Hooker, b. v.
Mo'ony. adj. [from mood.]
1. Angry; out of humour.
How now, moody?
What is't thou canst demand?
Chide him rev'rently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth;
But being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Every peevish, moody malecontent
Shall set the senseless rabble in an uproar? Rowe.
2. Mental; intellectual: moos in Saxon signifies the mind.
Give me some musick; musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.
MOON. n. f. [from men, Gothick; mena, Saxon; mona, Hlandick; maane, Danish; mane, German; maen, Dutch.]
1. The changing luminary of the night, called by poets Cynthia or Phoebe.
The moon shines bright: 'twas such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakespeare.
O swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Left that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakespeare.

MOO

Diana hath her name from moisture, which is the property of the moon, being by nature cold and moist, and is assigned to be a goddess huntress. Peacham.
Ye moon and stars bear witness to the truth!
2. A month.
3. [In fortification.] It is used in composition to denote a figure resembling a crescent: as, a half moon.
MOON-BEAM. n. f. [moon and beam.] Rays of lunar light.
The division and quavering, which please so much in musick, have an agreement with the glittering of light, as the moon-beams playing upon a wave. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
On the water the moon-beams played, and made it appear like floating quicksilver. Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.
MOON-CALF. n. f. [moon and calf.]
1. A monster; a false conception: supposed perhaps anciently to be produced by the influence of the moon.
How canst thou be the siege of this moon-calf? Shak.
2. A dolt; a stupid fellow.
The potion works not on the part design'd,
But turns his brain, and stupifies his mind;
The fotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden's Juvenal.
MOON-EYED. adj. [moon and eye.]
1. Having eyes affected by the revolutions of the moon.
2. Dim eyed; purblind. Ans.
MOONFEERN. n. f. A plant. Ans.
MOON-FISH. n. f.
Moon-fish is so called, because the tail fin is shaped like a half moon, by which, and his odd trusted shape, he is sufficiently distinguished. Grew's Muscum.
MOONLESS. adj. [from moon.] Not enlightened by the moon.
Afflicted by a friend, one moonless night,
This Palamon from prison took his flight. Dryden.
MOONLIGHT. n. f. [moon and light.] The light afforded by the moon.
Their bishop and his clergy, being departed from them by moonlight, to choose in his room any other bishop, had been altogether impossible. Hooker.
Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love. Shakespeare.
MOONLIGHT. adj. Illuminated by the moon.
If you will patiently dance in our round,
And see our moonlight revels, go with us. Shakespeare.
What beck'ning ghost along the moonlight shade Invites my steps, and points to yonder glade? Pope.
MOON-SEED. n. f. [menispermum, Latin.]
The moon-seed hath a tofaceous flower, consisting of several small leaves, which are placed round the embryo in a circular order: the pointal, which is divided into three parts at the top, afterward becomes the fruit or berry, in which is included one flat seed, which is, when ripe, hollowed like the appearance of the moon. Miller.
MOONSHINE. n. f. [moon and shine.]
1. The lustre of the moon.
Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
Till candles, and starlight, and moonshine be out. Shakespeare.
I, by the moonshine, to the windows went:
And, ere I was aware, sigh'd to myself. Dryd. Span. Fr.
2. [In burlesque.] A month.
I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines Lag of a brother. Shakespeare's King Lear.
MOONSHINE. } adj. [moon and shine.] Illuminated by the moon:
MOONSHINY. } both seem a popular corruption of moonshining.
Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
You moonshine revellers, and shades of night. Shakespeare.
Although it was a fair moonshine night, the enemy thought not fit to assault them. Clarendon, b. viii.
I went to see them in a moonshiny night. Addison.
MOONSTONE. n. f. A kind of stone. Ans.
MOONSTRUCK. adj. [moon and struck.] Lunatick; affected by the moon.
Demoniack phrensy, moaping melancholy,
And moonstruck madness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
MOON-TREFOIL. n. f. [medicago, Latin.] A plant.
The moon-trefoil hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empelement arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a plain orbiculated fruit, shaped like an half moon. Miller.
MOONWORT. n. f. [moon and wort.] Stationflower; honesty.
The flower of the moonwort consists of four leaves in form of a cross; the ovary which arises in the centre of the flower becomes a compressed perfectly-smooth fruit, divided into two cells, and filled with seeds. Miller.
MOONY. adj. [from moon.] Lunated; having a crescent for the standard resembling the moon.
Encount'ring fire
The Solymeian sultan, he o'erthrew
His moony troops, returning bravely smeared With Panim blood. Philips.
The Soldan galls th' Illyrian coast;
But loon the miscreant moony host
Before the victor-cross shall fly. Forten.
MOOR. n. f. [moer, Dutch; mudder, Teutonic, clay.]
1. A marsh; a fen; a bog; a tract of low and watry grounds.
While

MOP

While in her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor, it chanced that a London merchant passing by saw her, and liked her, begged her of her poor parents, and carried her to his home. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
In the great level near Thorny, several trees of oak and fir stand in firm earth below the moor. Hale.
Let the marsh of Eltham Bruges tell,
What colour were their waters that same day,
And all the moor 'twixt Elverham and Dell. Fairy Qu.
2. [Maurus, Latin.] A negro; a black-a-moor.
I shall answer that better than you can the getting up of the negro's belly; the moor is with child by you. Shakespeare.
To Moor. v. a. [moer, French.] To fasten by anchors or otherwise.
Three more fierce Eurus in his angry mood
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving flood,
And in mid ocean left them moor'd at hand. Dryden.
To Moor. v. n. To be fixed; to be stationed.
Enas gain'd Cajeta's bay:
At length on oozy ground his gallees moor,
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their stems to shore. Dryd.
My vessel, driv'n by a strong gulf of wind, Moor'd in a Chian creek. Addison's Ovid.
He visited the top of Taurus and the famous Ararat, where Noah's ark first moor'd. Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
To blow a Moor. [at the fall of a deer, corrupted from a moor, French.] To found the horn in triumph, and call in the whole company of hunters. Ans.
MOORCOCK. n. f. [moor and cock.] The male of the moorhen.
MOORHEN. n. f. [moor and hen.] A fowl that feeds in the fens, without web feet.
Water fowls, as sea-gulls and moorhens, when they flock and fly together from the sea towards the shores, foreflew rain and wind. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 823.
MOORISH. n. f. [from moor.] Fenmy; marshy; watry.
In the great level near Thorny, several oaks and firs have lain there till covered by the inundation of the fresh and salt waters, and moorish earth exaggerated upon them. Hale.
Along the moorish fens
Sighs the sad genius of the coming storm. Thomson.
MOORLAND. n. f. [moor and land.] Marsh; fen; watry ground.
In the fourth part of Staffordshire they go to the north for feed corn, and they of the north to the south, except in the moorlands. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Or like a bridge that joins a marsh
To moorlands of a different parish. Swift.
MOORSTONE. n. f. A species of granite.
The third stratum is of great rocks of moorstone and sandy earth. Woodward on Fossils.
MOORY. adj. [from moor.] Marshy; fenmy; watry.
The dult fields and pastures covers,
As when thick mists arise from moory vales. Fairfax.
In Essex, moory-land is thought the most proper. Mortimer.
MOOSE. n. f. The large American deer; the biggest of the species of deer.
To Moor. v. a. [from moorian, moor, gemoor, meeting together,
Saxon, or perhaps, as it is a law term, from moor, French.]
To plead a mock cause; to state a point of law by way of exercise, as was commonly done in the Inns of court at appointed times.
MOOR CASE or POINT. A point or case unsettled and disputable, such as may properly afford a topic of disputation.
In this moor case your judgment to refuse,
Is present death. Dryden's Juvenal.
Would you not think him crack'd, who would require another to make an argument on a moor point, who understands nothing of our laws? Locke on Education.
Let us drop both our pretences; for I believe it is a moor point, whether I am more likely to make a master Bull, or you a master Strut. Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.
MOOTED. adj. Plucked up by the root. Ans.
MOOTER. n. f. [from moor.] A disputer of moot points.
Mop. n. f. [from moor.] A mop.
1. Pieces of cloth, or locks of wool, fixed to a long handle, with which maids clean the floors.
Such is that sprinkling which some careless quean
Flirts on you from her mop, but not to clean.
You fly, invoke the gods; then turning, stop
To rail; the singing still whirls on her mop. Swift.
2. [Perhaps corrupted from mop.] A wry mouth made in contempt.
Each one, tripping on his toe,
Will be here with mop and moor. Shakespeare. Tempest.
To Mop. v. a. [from the noun.] To rub with a mop.
To Mop. v. n. [from mop.] To make wry mouths in contempt.
Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obidicut; Hobblidicut, prince of dumbbells; Mahu, of stealing; Mohu, of murder; and Flibbertigibbet, of mapping and mowing, who since possesses chamber-maids. Shakespeare.
An ass fell a moping and braying at a lion. L'Estrange.
To MOPE. v. n. [Of this word I cannot find a probable etymology.] To be stupid; to drowse; to be in a constant daydream; to be spiritless, unactive and inattentive; to be stupid and delirious.

MOR

What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers. Shakespeare.
Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling fans all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so mope. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Ev'n in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping hither. Shakespeare. Tempest.
Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
Demoniack phrensy, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
The busy craftsman and o'erlabour'd hind,
Forget the travel of the day in sleep;
Care only wakes, and moping pensiveness;
With meagre discontented looks they sit,
And watch the wasting of the midnight taper. Rowe.
To MOPE. v. a. To make spiritless; to deprive of natural powers.
They say there are charms in herbs, said he, and so threw a handful of grass; which was so ridiculous, that the young thief took the old man to be moped. L'Estrange.
Severity breaks the mind; and then in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a low-spirited moped creature. Locke on Education.
MOPE-EYED. adj. Blind of one eye. Ans.
MOPEET. } n. f. [perhaps from mop.] A puppet made of rags, MOPEY. } as a mop is made; a fondling name for a girl.
Our sovereign lady: made for a queen?
With a globe in one hand, and a sceptre in t'other?
A very pretty mopeet! Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
MORPUS. n. f. [A cant word from mope.] A drone; a dreamer.
I'm grown a mere mopus; no company comes
But a rabble of tenants. Swift's Miscel.
MORAL. adj. [moral, Fr. moralis, Latin.]
1. Relating to the practice of men towards each other, as it may be virtuous or criminal; good or bad.
Keep at the least within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue. Hooker, b. ii.
Laws and ordinances positive he distinguisheth from the laws of the two tables, which were moral. Hooker, b. iii.
In moral actions divine law helpeth exceedingly the law of reason to guide man's life, but in supernatural it alone guideth.
Hooker, b. i.
Now, brandish'd weapons glitt'ring in their hands,
Mankind is broken loose from moral bands;
No rights of hospitality remain,
The guest, by him who harbour'd him, is slain. Dryden.
2. Reasoning or instructing with regard to vice and virtue.
France spreads his banners in our noiseless land,
With plumed helm thy fly'r begins his threats,
Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still and criest. Shakespeare.
2. Popular; such as is known or admitted in the general business of life.
We have found it, with a moral certainty, the seat of the Mosaical abyss. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Mathematical things are capable of the strictest demonstration; conclusions in natural philosophy are capable of proof by an induction of experiments; things of a moral nature by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson's Sermons.
A moral universality, is when the predicate agrees to the greatest part of the particulars which are contained under the universal subject. Watts's Logic.
MORAL. n. f.
1. Morality; practice or doctrine of the duties of life: this is rather a French than English sense.
Their moral and economy,
Most perfectly they made agree. Prior.
2. The doctrine inculcated by a fiction; the accommodation of a fable to form the morals.
Get you some distill'd carduus benedictus, and lay it to your heart; it is the only thing for a qualm.
—Benedictus? why benedictus? you have some moral in this benedictus.
Moral! No, by my troth I have no moral meaning; I meant plain holy thistle. Shakespeare. Much ado about nothing.
Left behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew.
The moral is the first business of the poet, as being the ground-work of his instruction; this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden's Duffrenoy.
I found a moral first, and then studied for a fable, but could do nothing that pleased me. Swift to Gay.
To MORAL. v. n. [from the adjective.] To moralise; to make moral reflections.
When I did hear
The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like chanticleer,
That fools should be so deep contemplative. Shakespeare.
MORALIST.

MON

MORALIST. n. f. [moraliste, French.] One who teaches the duties of life.

The advice given by a great moralist to his friend was, that he should compose his passions; and let that be the work of reason, which would certainly be the work of time. Addison.

MORALITY. n. f. [moralité, Fr. from moral.]

1. The doctrine of the duties of life; ethics.
The system of moralité, to be gathered out of the writings of ancient sages, falls very short of that delivered in the gospel. Swift's Miscel.

A necessity of sinning is as impossible in moralité, as any the greatest difficulty can be in nature. Baker on Learning.
2. The form of an action which makes it the subject of reward, or punishment.

The moralité of an action is founded in the freedom of that principle, by virtue of which it is in the agent's power, having all things ready and requisite to the performance of an action, either to perform or not perform it. South's Sermons.

TO MORALIZE. v. a. [moraliser, French.]

1. To apply to moral purposes; to explain in a moral sense.
He 'as left me here behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

—I pray thee moralize them. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
Did he not moralize this spectacle?
—O yes, into a thousand families. Shakespeare.

This fable is moralized in a common proverb. L'Estrange.
2. In Spenser it seems to mean, to furnish with manners or examples.

Fierce warres and faithful loves shall moralize my song. Fairy Queen, b. i.

3. In Prior, who imitates the foregoing line, it has a sense not easily discovered, if indeed it has any sense.

High as their trumpets tune his lyre he strung,
And with his prince's arms he moraliz'd his song. Prior.

TO MORALIZE. v. n. To speak or write on moral subjects.

MORALIZER. n. f. [moralizer, Lat.] He who moralizes.

MORALLY. adv. [from moral.]

1. In the ethical sense.
By good, good morally so called, bonum honestum, ought chiefly to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure, the bonum utile or jucundum, hardly come into any account here. South's Sermons.

Because this, of the two brothers killing each other, is an action morally unnatural; therefore, by way of preparation, the tragedy would have begun with heaven and earth in disorder, something physically unnatural. Rymer.

2. According to the rules of virtue.

To take away rewards and punishments, is only pleasing to a man who resolves not to live morally. Dryden.

3. Popularly; according to the common occurrences of life; according to the common judgment made of things.

It is morally impossible for an hypocrite to keep himself long upon his guard. L'Estrange.

The concurring accounts of many such witnesses render it morally, or, as we might speak, absolutely impossible that these things should be false. Athenian's Sermons.

MORALS. n. f. [without a singular.] The practice of the duties of life; behaviour with respect to others.

Some, as corrupt in their morals as vice could make them, have yet been solicitous to have their children soberly, virtuously, and piously brought up. South's Sermons.

Learn then what morals critics ought to shew:

'Tis not enough wit, art, and learning join;
In all you speak, let truth and candor shine. Pope.

MORA'SS. n. f. [mayais, French.] Fen; bog; moor.

Landchapes point out the fairest and most fruitful spots, as well as the rocks, and wildernesses, and mora'sses of the country. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Nor the deep mora'ss

Refuse, but through the shaking wilderness
Pick your nice way. Thomson's Autumn, l. 480.

MORBID. n. f. [morbidus, Latin.] Diseased; in a state contrary to health.

Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are there diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbutnot.

MORBIDNESS. n. f. [from morbid.] State of being diseased.

MORBIFICAL. n. f. [morbis and facio, Lat. morbificus, Fr.]

MORBIFICK. v. Causing diseases.

The air appearing so malicious in this morbifick conspiracy, exacts a more particular regard; wherefore initiate consumptives must change their air. Harvey on Consumptions.

This disease is cured by the critical resolution, concoction, and evacuation of the morbifick matter. Arbutnot.

Four reapers danced a morrice to oaten pipes. Speator.

MOR

Mo'rsel. n. f. [morcellus, low Latin, from morfus.]

1. A piece fit for the mouth; a mouthful.
Yet can't thou to a morsel of this feast,
Having fully din'd before. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

I was Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

A morsel for a monarch. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

And me his parent would full soon devour
For want of other prey, but knows that I Should prove a bitter morsel, and his bane. Milton.

Every morsel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion. South's Sermons.

He boils the flesh,
And lays the mangled morsels in a dish. Dryden.

A wretch is pris'ner made,
Whose flesh torn off by lumps, the rav'nous foe
In morsels cut, to make it farther go. Tate's Juvenal.

A letter to the keeper of the lion requested that it may be the first morsel put into his mouth. Addison.

2. A piece; a meal.
On these herbs, and fruits and flow'rs,
Feed first; on each beast next, and fish and fowl,
No homely morsels! Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

A dog crossing a river with a morsel of flesh in his mouth, faw, as he thought, another dog under the water, upon the very same adventure. L'Estrange's Fables.

A small quantity. Not proper.

Of the morsels of native and pure gold, he had seen some weighed many pounds. Boyle.

Mo'rsure. n. f. [morfura, Fr. morfura, Latin.] The act of biting.

MORT. n. f. [morte, French.]

1. A tune founded at the death of the game.
To be making practis'd smiles,
As in a looking-glass, and to sigh as 'twere
The mort o' th' deer; oh that is entertainment
My bosom likes not. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

[Morgt, Islandick.] A great quantity. Not in elegant use.

Mo'rtal. adj. [mortalis, Lat. mortel, Fr.]

1. Subject to death; doomed sometime to die.
Nature does require
Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I her frail son amongst my brethren mortal Must give my attendance to. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. 1 Cor. xv. 53.

Heav'nly powers, where shall we find such love!
Which of ye will be mortal to redeem
Man's mortal crime; and just, th' unjust to save. Milton.

Know,
The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die;
From that day mortal: and this happy state Shalt lose. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

2. Deadly; destructive; procuring death.
Come all you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me from the crown to th' toe, top full Of cruelty. Shakefp. Macbeth.

The mortalest poisons practis'd by the West Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man. Bacon.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world, and all our woe. Milton.

Some circumstances have been great discouragers of trade, and others are absolutely mortal to it. Temple.

Hope not, base man! unquestion'd hence to go,
For I am Palamon, thy mortal foe. Dryden.

3. Bringing death.
Safe in the hand of one disposing pow'r,
Or in the natal, or the mortal hour. Pope's Essay on Man.

Human; belonging to man.
They met me in the day of success; and I have learned by the perfected report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Shakefp. Macbeth.

The voice of God
To mortal ear is dreadful; They beseech,
That Moses might report to them his will,
And terror cease. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

Success, the mark no mortal wit,
Or surest hand can always hit. Butler.

No one enjoyment but is liable to be lost by ten thousand accidents, out of all mortal power to prevent. South's Sermon.

5. Extreme; violent. A low word.
The birds were in a mortal apprehension of the beetles, till the sparrow reasoned them into understanding. L'Estrange.

The nymph grew pale and in a mortal fright,
Spent with the labour of so long a flight;
And now despairing, cast a mournful look Upon the streams. Dryden.

MOR

Mo'rtal. n. f.

1. Man; human being.
Warn poor mortals left behind. Tickel.

2. This is often used in ludicrous language.
I can behold no mortal now;
For what's an eye without a brow? Prior.

MORTALITY. n. f. [from mortal.]

1. Subjection to death; state of a being subject to death.
I point out mistakes in life and religion, that we might guard against the springs of error, guilt, and sorrow, which surround us in every state of mortality. Watts's Logic.

2. Death.

I beg mortality,
Rather than life preserv'd with infamy. Shakefp.

Gladly would I meet Mortality my sentence. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

3. Power of destruction.
Live in thy tongue and heart. Shakefp. Meas. for Measure.

4. Frequency of death.
The life of keeping those accounts first began in the year 1592, being a time of great mortality. Grant.

5. Human nature.
A single vision so transports them, that it makes up the happines of their lives; mortality cannot bear it often. Dryden.

Take these tears, mortality's relief,
And till we share your joys, forgive our grief. Pope.

Mo'rtally. adv. [from mortal.]

1. Irrecoverably; to death.
In the battle of Landen you were not only dangerously, but, in all appearance, mortally wounded. Dryden.

2. Extremely; to extremity.
Adrian mortally envied poets, painters, and artificers, in works wherein he had a vein to excel. Bacon's Essay.

Know all, who would pretend to my good grace,
I mortally dislike a damning face. Granville.

Mo'rtar. n. f. [mortarium, Lat. mortier, Fr.]

1. A strong vessel in which materials are broken by being pounded with a pestle.
Except you could bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould it into a new paste, there is no possibility of an holy war. Bacon's holy War.

The action of the diaphragm and muscles serves for the communion of the meat in the stomach by their constant agitation upwards and downwards, resembling the pounding of materials in a mortar. Ray on Creation.

2. A short wide cannon out of which bombs are thrown.
Those arms which for nine centuries had brav'd
The wrath of time on antique stone engrav'd,
Now torn by mortars stand yet undefac'd. Granville.

Mo'rtar. n. f. [mortier, Dutch; mortier, French.] Cement made of lime and sand with water, and used to join stones or bricks.

Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and sand mixed up with water, serving as a cement, and used by masons and bricklayers in building of walls of stone and brick.
Wolffius observes, that the sand should be dry and sharp, so as to prick the hands when rubbed, yet not earthy, so as to foul the water it is wash'd in: he also finds fault with masons and bricklayers as committing a great error, in letting their lime slacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and also in letting their mortar cool and die before they use it; therefore he advises, that if you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little at a time, that the mortar may not lie long before it be used.

I will tread this unbolst villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakefp. King Lear.

They had brick for stone, and slime for mortar. Gen. xi. 3.

Lime hot out of the kiln mixed soft with water, putting sand to it, will make better mortar than other. Mortimer.

Mo'rtgage. n. f. [mort and gage, French.]

1. A dead pledge; a thing put into the hands of a creditor.
Th' estate runs out, and mortgages are made, Dryden.

Their fortune ruin'd, and their fame betray'd.
The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages. Arbutnot.

The broker,
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks bye-streets, and faves th' expensive coach. Gay.

2. The state of being pledged.
The land is given in mortgage only, with full intention to be redeemed within one year. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

To Mo'rtgage. v. a. [from the noun.] To pledge; to put to pledge; to make over to a creditor as a security.

Let men contrive how they disentangle their mortgag'd souls. Decay of Piety.

They make the widows mortgag'd ox their prey. Saunders.

Their not abating of their expensive way of living, has forced them to mortgage their best manors. Arbutnot.

MORTGAGEE.

MOR

MORTGAGEE. n. f. [from mortgage.] He that takes or receives a mortgage.

An act may pass for publick registries of land, by which all purchasers or mortgagees may be secured of all monies they lay out. Temple's Miscel.

Mo'rtgager. n. f. [from mortgage.] He that gives a mortgage.

MORTIFEROUS. adj. [mortifer, Latin.] Fatal; deadly; destructive.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's im-portunity, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from so dead, so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life. Hammond's Fundamentals.

These murmuring, like a mortiferous herb, are poisonous even in their first spring. Government of the Tongue, f. 10.

MORTIFICATION. n. f. [mortification, Fr. from mortif.]

1. The state of corrupting, or losing the vital qualities; gangrene.
It appeareth in the gangrene, or mortification of flesh, either by opiates, or intense colds. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N.º. 333.

My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicable,
Rattle and fester, and gangrene, Milton's Agonist. l. 617.

To black mortification.

2. Destruction of active qualities.
Inquire what gives impediment to union or restitution, which is called mortification; as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine. Bacon's Physical Remains.

3. The act of subduing the body by hardships and macerations.
A diet of some fish is more rich and alkalescent than that of flesh, and therefore very improper for such as practise mortification. Arbutnot or Aliments.

4. Humiliation; subjection of the passions.
The mortification of our lusts has something in it that is troublesome, yet nothing that is unreasonable. Tillotson.

5. Vexation; trouble.
It is one of the most vexatious mortifications of a studious man, to have his thoughts disordered by a tedious visit. L'Estrange.

We had the mortification to lose the fight of Munich, Augsburg, and Ratibon. Addison on Italy.

To Mo'rtify. v. a. [mortifier, French.]

1. To destroy vital qualities.
2. To destroy active powers, or essential qualities.

What gives impediment to union or restitution is called mortification, as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine or pittle. Bacon.

He mortified pearls in vinegar, and drunk them up. Hakew.

Oil of tartar per deliquium has a great faculty to find out and mortify acid spirits. Boyle.

3. To subdue inordinate passions.
The breath no sooner left his father's body,
But that his wildness mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too. Shakefp. Henry V.

Their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm Excite the mortified man. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Suppress thy knowing pride,
Mortify thy learned lust,
Vain are thy thoughts, while thou thyself art dust. Prior.

He modestly conjectures,
His pupil might be tir'd with lectures,
Which help'd to mortify his pride. Swift.

4. To macerate or harass the body to compliance with the mind.
We mortify ourselves with fish, and think we fare coarsely if we abstain from flesh. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Mortify'd he was to that degree,
A poorer than himself he would not see. Dryden.

5. To humble; to depress; to vex.
Let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shakefp.

He is controul'd by a nod, mortified by a frown, and transpired by a smile. Addison's Guard. N.º. 113.

How often is the ambitious man mortified with the very praises he receives, if they do not rise so high as he thinks they ought. Addison's Spect. N.º. 256.

To Mo'rtify. v. n.

1. To gangrene; to corrupt.
Try it with capon laid abroad, to see whether it will mortify and become tender sooner; or with dead flies with water cast upon them, to see whether it will putrefy. Bacon.

2. To be subdu'd; to die away.

Mo'rtise. n. f. [mortaise, mortaise, Fr.] A hole cut into wood that another piece may be put into it and form a joint.

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise. Shakefp. Othello.

Under one skin are parts variously mingled, some with cavities, as mortelles to receive, others with tenons to fit cavities. Ray.

To Mo'rtise. v. a.

1. To cut with a mortise; to join with a mortise.
'Tis a massy wheel,
To whose huge spoke ten thousand lesser things
Are mortis'd and adjoin'd. Shakefp. Hamlet.

The walls of spiders legs are made,
Well mortis'd and finely laid. Drayton's Nymphid.

2. It seems in the following passage improperly used.
The one half of the ship being finished, and by help of a screw launched into the water, the other half was joined by great brals nails mortis'd with lead. Arbutnot on Coins.

Mo'rtmain. n. f. [morte and main, Fr.] Such a state of possession as makes it unalienable; whence it is said to be in a dead hand, in a hand that cannot shift away the property.

It were meet that some small portion of lands were allotted, since no more mortmains are to be looked for. Spenfer.

Mo'rtpay. n. f. [mort and pay.] Dead pay; payment not made.

This parliament was merely a parliament of war, with some statutes conducting therunto; as the severe punishing of mortpays, and keeping back of soldiers wages. Bacon.

Mo'rtress. n. f. [from mortier de sageste.] Skinner. A dish of meat of various kinds beaten together.

A mortress made with the brawn of capons, stamped, strained, and mingled with like quantity of almond butter, is excellent to nourish the weak. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Mo'rtuary. n. f. [mortuare, Fr. mortuarium, Latin.] A gift left by a man at his death to his parish church, for the recompence of his personal tythes and offerings not duly paid in his life-time. Harri.

Mosa'ick. adj. [mosaïque, French, supposed corrupted from mosaicus, Latin.]

Mosaic is a kind of painting in small pebbles, cockles, and shells of sundry colours; and of late days likewise with pieces of glass figured at pleasure; an ornament in truth, of much beauty, and long life, but of most use in pavements and floorings. Wotton's Architecture.

Each beauteous flow'r,
Iris all hues, roses, and jessamin,
Rear'd high their flourish'd heads between, and wrought Mosaic. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.

The most remarkable remnant of it is a very beautiful mo-saick pavement, the finest I have ever seen in marble; the parts are so well joined together, that the whole piece looks like a continued picture. Addison on Italy.

Mo'schattel. n. f. [moschatellina, Lat.] A plant.

The moschattel hath a flower consisting of one leaf, which is divided at the brim into many parts, from whose cup arises the pointal, fixed like a nail in the middle of the flower, which becomes a soft succulent berry, in which are contained many flat seeds. Miller.

Mosque. n. f. [mosquée, French; moskit, Turkish.] A Mahometan temple.

MOSS. n. f. [muscus, Lat. meor; Saxon.] A plant.

Though moss was formerly supposed to be only an excres-cence produced from the earth and trees, yet it is no less a perfect plant than those of greater magnitude, having roots, flowers, and seeds, yet cannot be propagated from seeds by any art: the botanists distinguish it into many species: it chiefly flourishes in cold countries, and in the winter season, and is many times very injurious to fruit trees: the only remedy in such cases, is to cut down part of the trees, and plough up the ground between those left remaining; and in the Spring, in moist weather, you should with an iron instrument scrape off the moss. Miller.

Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees; but it may be better sort'd as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.

Houses then were caves, or homely sheds,
With twining ozers fenc'd, and moss their beds. Dryden.

Such mosses as grow upon walls, roofs of houses, and other high places, have seeds that, when shaken out of their vessels, appear like vapour or smoke. Ray on Creation.

The cleft tree
Offers its kind concealment to a few,
Their food its insects, and its moss their nests. Thomson.

To Moss. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with moss.

An oak whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity. Shakefp.

Will these moss'd trees,
That have out-liv'd the eagle page thy heels,
And skip when thou point'st out. Shakefp.

Mo'ssiness. n. f. [from mossy.] The state of being covered or overgrown with moss.

The herbs withered at the top, sheweth the earth to be very cold, and so doth the mossiness of trees. Bacon.

Mo'ssy. adj. [from moss.] Overgrown with moss; covered with moss.

MOV

- But when no female arts his mind could move,
She turn'd to furious hate her impious love. Dryden's Art.
What can thy mind to this long journey move,
Or need'st thou absence to renew thy love? Dryden.
4. To affect; to touch pathetically; to stir passion.
If he see aught in you that makes him like,
That any thing he fees, which moves his liking,
I can with ease translate it to my will. Shaksp. K. John.
It was great ignorance, Gloster's eyes being out,
To let him live; where he arrives he moves
All hearts against us. Shaksp. King Lear.
Should a shipwreck'd sailor sing his woe,
Would'st thou be mov'd to pity, or bestow
An alms? Dryden's Persius.
Images are very sparingly to be introduced; their proper place is in poems and orations, and their use is to move pity or terror, compassion and resentment. Felton on the Classics.
O let thy sister, daughter, handmaid, move
Or all those tender names. Pope.
5. To make angry.
From those bloody hands
Throw your distemper'd weapons to the ground,
And hear the sentence of your mov'd prince. Shaksp. Deut. xxxii. 21.
They have mov'd me to jealousy.
6. To put into commotion.
When they were come to Bethlehem, all the city was mov'd about them. Ruth i. 19.
7. To conduct regularly in motion.
They, as they move
Their starry dance in numbers that compute Days, months, and years, tow'rd his all cheering lamp, Turn swift their various motions. Milton.
- To MOVE, v. n.
1. To go from one place to another.
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I lay a moving grove. Shaksp. Macbeth.
In him we live, move, and have our being. Acts xvii. 28.
Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you. Gen.
On the green bank I sat and listen'd long,
Nor till her lay was ended could I move,
But wish'd to dwell for ever in the grove.
The senses represent the earth as immoveable; for though it do move in itself, it rests to us who are carried with it. Glan.
This saying, that God is the place of spirits, being literal, makes us conceive that spirits move up and down, and have their distances and intervals in God, as bodies have in space. Locke.
When we are come to the utmost extremity of body, what is there that can put a stop, and satisfy the mind, that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke.
Any thing that moves round about in a circle in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move, but seems to be a perfect entire circle of that matter. Locke.
- The goddess moves
To visit Paphos, and her blooming groves. Pope's Odyssey.
2. To walk; to bear the body.
See great Marcellus! how inur'd to toils
He moves with manly grace, how rich with regal spoils. Dryden's En.
3. To go forward.
Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium. Dryden's En.
4. To change the posture of the body in ceremony.
When Haman saw Mordecai that he stood not up, nor mov'd for him, he was full of indignation. Ezra. v. 9.
- MOVABLE, adj. [from move.]
1. Capable of being moved; not fixed; portable; such as may be carried from place to place.
In the vast wilderness, when the people of God had no settled habitation, yet a moveable tabernacle they were commanded of God to make. Hooker, b. v.
When he made his prayer, he found the boat he was in moveable and unbound, the rest remained still fast. Bacon.
Any heat whatsoever promotes the ascent of mineral matter, which is subtle, and is consequently moveable more easily. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. iv.
Any who sees the Teverone must conclude it to be one of the most moveable rivers in the world, that is so often shifted out of one channel into another. Addison on Italy.
2. Changing the time of the year.
The lunar month is natural and periodical, by which the moveable festivals of the Christian church are regulated. Hilder.
- MOVABLES, n. f. [mouables, Fr.] Goods; furniture; distinguished from real or immoveable possessions: as, lands or house.
- We seize
The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables, Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possessor. Shaksp.

MOU

- Let him that moved you hither,
Remove you hence; I knew you at the first
You were a moveable. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.
—Why, what's a moveable?
—A joint stool.
- MOVABLENESS, n. f. [from moveable.] Mobility; possibility to be moved.
MOVABLY, adv. [from moveable.] So as it may be moved.
His back-piece is composed of eighteen plates, moveably joined together by as many intermediate skins. Grew.
- MOVABLES, adj. Unmov'd; not to be put out of the place.
The lungs, though untouched, will remain moveables as to any expansion or contraction of their substance. Boyle.
The Grecian phalanx, moveable as a tow'r,
On all sides batter'd, yet resists his power. Pope's Iliad.
- MOVEMENT, n. f. [mouvement, French.]
1. Manner of moving.
What farther relieves descriptions of battles, is the art of introducing pathetic circumstances about the heroes, which raise a different movement in the mind, compassion and pity. Pope's Essay on Homer.
Under workmen are expert enough at making a single wheel in a clock, but are utterly ignorant how to adjust the several parts, or regulate the movement. Swift.
2. Motion.
MOVING, adj. [mouens, Latin.] Moving.
If it be in some part movens, and in some part quiescent, it must needs be a curve line, and so no radius. Grew's Cof.
- MOVING, n. f. [mouens, Lat.] That which moves another.
That there is a motion which makes the vicissitudes of day and night, sense may assure us; but whether the sun or earth be the common movens, cannot be determined but by a further appeal. Glazville's Serp.
- MOVING, n. f. [from move.]
1. The person or thing that gives motion.
O thou eternal mover of the heav'ns,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
The strength of a spring were better assisted by the labour of some intelligent mover, as the heavenly orbs are supposed to be turned. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
2. Something that moves, or stands not still.
You as the soul, as the first mover, you Vigour and life on ev'ry part bestow. Waller.
So orbs from the first mover motion take,
Yet each their proper revolutions make. Dryden.
3. A proposer.
See here these movers, that do prize their honours
At a crack'd drachm; cushions, leaden spoons, Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
If any question be moved concerning the doctrine of the church of England express'd in the thirty-nine articles, give not the least ear to the movers thereof. Bacon.
- MOVING, participial adj. [from move.] Pathetic; touching; adapted to affect the passions.
Great Jupiter,
The moving pray'r of Æacus did grant,
And into men and women turn'd the ant. Blackmore.
- MOVINGLY, adj. [from moving.] Pathetically; in such a manner as to seize the passions.
The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Psalms do both more briefly and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hooker, b. v.
- I would have had them writ more movingly. Shaksp.
His air, his voice, his looks, and honest soul,
Speak all so movingly in his behalf,
I dare not trust myself to hear him talk. Addison's Cato.
- MOUGHT, for might. Obsolete.
- MOULD, n. f. [mugel, Swedish.]
1. A kind of concretion on the top or outside of things kept, motionless and damp; now discovered by microscopes to be perfect plants.
All moulds are inceptions of putrefaction, as the moulds of pies and flesh, which moulds turn into worms. Bacon.
Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees, but may be better sort'd as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.
Another special affinity is between plants and mould, or putrification; for all putrefaction, if it dissolve not in arefaction, will, in the end, issue into plants. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The malt made in Summer is apt to contract mould. Mort.
A hermit, who has been shut up in his cell in a college, has contracted a sort of mould and rust upon his soul, and all his airs have awkwardness in them. Watts.
2. [Mole, Saxon.] Earth; soil; ground in which any thing grows.
Those moulds that are of a bright chestnut or hazelly colour are accounted the best; next to that, the dark grey and russet moulds are accounted best; the light and dark ash-colour are reckoned the worst, such as are usually found on common or heathy ground: the clear tawny is by no means to be approved, but that of a yellowish colour is reckoned the worst of all; this is commonly found in wild and waste parts of the country, and for the most part produces nothing but goss, furz, and fern. All good lands after rain, or breaking up by the spade, will emit a good smell; that being always the best that is neither too unctuous or too lean, but such as will easily dissolve; of a just consistence between fat and clay. Miller.
Though worms devour me, though I turn to mould,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold. Sandys's Paraph.
The black earth, every-where obvious on the surface of the ground, we call mould. Woodward.
3. Matter of which any thing is made.
When the world began,
One common mass compos'd the mould of man. Dryden.
Nature form'd me of her softest mould,
Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,
And sunk me even below my weak sex. Addison's Cato.
4. [Molds, Spanish; moule, French.] The matrix in which any thing is cast; in which any thing receives its form.
If the liturgies of all the ancient churches be compared,
it may be easily perceived they had all one original mould. Hooker, b. v.
A dangerous president were left for the casting of prayers into certain poetical moulds. Hooker, b. v.
French churches all cast according unto that mould which Calvin had made. Hooker.
My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould
Wherein this trunk was fram'd. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
New honours come upon him,
Like our strange garments cleave not to their mould,
But with the end of use. Shaksp. Macbeth.
You may have fruit in more accurate figures, according as you make the moulds. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 502.
- The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then what might else be wrought Futile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
We may hope for new heavens and a new earth, more pure and perfect than the former; as if this was a refiner's fire, to purge out the dross and coarse parts, and then cast the mass again into a new and better mould. Burnet.
Sure our souls were near allied, and thine
Cast in the same poetick mould with mine. Dryden.
Here in fit moulds to Indian nations known,
Are cast the several kinds of precious stone. Blackmore.
4. Cast; form.
No mates for you,
Unless you were of gentler, milder mould. Shaksp. Lear.
William earl of Pembroke was a man of another mould, and making, and of another fame, being the most universally belov'd of any man of that age; and, having a great office in the court, he made the court itself better esteem'd, and more reverenced in the country. Clarendon.
- Learn
What creatures there inhabit, of what mould,
Or substance, how endu'd, and what their pow'r,
And where their weakness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
So must the writer, whose productions should Take with the vulgar, be of vulgar mould. Waller.
From their main-top joyful news they hear
Of ships, which by their mould bring new supplies. Dryd.
Hans Carvel, impotent and old,
Married a lass of London mould. Prior.
5. The future or contexture of the skull.
TO MOULD, v. a. [from the noun.] To contract concreted matter; to gather mould.
In woods, in waves, in wars she wants to dwell,
And will be found with peril and with pain;
Ne can the man that moulds in idle cell
Unto her happy mansion attain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
There be some houses wherein sweet meats will relent, and baked meats will mould, more than in others. Bacon.
- TO MOULD, v. a. To cover with mould; to corrupt by mould.
Very coarse, hoary, moulded bread the soldiers thrust upon their spears, railing against Ferdinand, who made no better provision. Knoles's Hist. of the Turks.
- TO MOULD, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To form; to shape; to model.
I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
Here is the cap your worship did bespeak;
Why this was moulded on a poringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
The king had taken such liking of his person, that he resolved to make him a master-piece, and to mould him plato-nically to his own idea. Wotton's Buckingham.
Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay
To mould me man?
He forgeth and mouldeth metals, and builds houses. Hale.

- By the force of education we may mould the minds and manners of youth into what shape we please, and give them the impressions of such habits as shall ever afterwards remain.
Atterbury's Sermons.
- Then rose the seed of chaos, and of night,
Of dull and vena a new world to mould,
And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold. Dunciad, b. iv.
A faction in England, under the name of puritan, moulded up their new schemes of religion with republican principles in government. Swift.
- For you alone he stole
The fire that forms a manly soul;
Then, to compleat it ev'ry way,
He moulded it with female clay. Swift's Miscel.
Fabellus would never learn any moral lessons till they were moulded into the form of some fiction or fable like those of Æsop. Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i.
2. To knead: as, to mould bread.
MOVABLE, adj. [from mould.] What may be moulded.
The differences of figurative and not figurative, mouldable and not mouldable, are piebeian notions. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- MOULDER, n. f. [from mould.] He who moulds.
TO MOULDER, v. n. [from mould.] To be turned to dust; to perish in dust; to be diminished.
If he had fat still, the enemies army would have mouldered to nothing, and been exposed to any advantage he would take. Clarendon, b. viii.
Whatsoever moulders, or is washed away, is carried down into the lower grounds, and nothing ever brought back again.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Those formed stones despoiled of their shells, and exposed upon the surface of the ground, in time decay, wear, and moulder away, and are frequently found defaced, and broken to pieces. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. v.
- To them by smiling Jove 'twas giv'n, Great William's glories to recall,
When statues moulder, and when arches fall. Prior.
Finding his congregation moulder every Sunday, and hearing what was the occasion of it, he resolv'd to give his parish a little Latin in his turn. Addison's Spect. No. 221.
- TO MOULDER, v. a. [from mould.] To turn to dust; to crumble.
The natural histories of Switzerland talk of the fall of those rocks when their foundations have been mouldered with age, or rent by an earthquake. Addison on Italy.
With nodding arches, broken temples spread,
The very tombs now vanish'd like their dead;
Some felt the silent stroke of mould'ring age,
Some, hostile fury. Pope.
- MOULDINESS, n. f. [from mouldy.] The state of being mouldy.
Flesh, fish, and plants, after a mouldiness, rottenness, or corrupting, will fall to breed worms. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- MOULDING, n. f. [from mould.] Ornamental cavities in wood or stone.
Hollow mouldings are required in the work. Mason.
- MOULDWARP, n. f. [mols and jeoppan, Saxon.] A mole;
a small animal that throws up the earth.
Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,
Whose base effect through cowardly distrust
Of his own wings, dare not to heaven flye,
But like a mouldwarp in the earth doth lie. Spenser.
While they play the mouldwarps, unfavoury damps diffem-per their heads with annoyance only for the present. Carew.
With gins we betray the vermin of the earth, namely, the fichat and the mouldwarp. Walton's Angler.
- MOULDRY, adj. [from mould.] Overgrown with concretions.
Is thy name mouldy?
—Yea.
—'Tis the more time thou wert us'd.
—Ha, ha, ha; most excellent: things that are mouldy lack use. Well said, Sir John. Shaksp. Henry IV.
The marble looks white and fresh, as being exposed to the winds and salt sea-vapours, that by continually fretting it preserves itself from that mouldy colour which others contract.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.
- TO MOULT, v. n. [muyten, Dutch.] To shed or change the feathers; to lose feathers.
Some birds upon moulting turn colour, as Robin-red-breasts, after their moulting, grow to be red again by degrees. Bacon.
Time shall moult away his wings,
E'er he shall discover
In the wide whole world again
Such a constant lover. Suckling.
The widow'd turtle hangs her moulting wings,
And to the woods in mournful murmur sings. Garth.
- TO MOUNCH, } v. a. [mouch, to eat much. Ains.] This word is retained in Scotland, and denotes the ob-tunded action of toothless gums on a hard crust, or any thing eatable: it seems to be a corruption of the French word manger. Macbean.
A sailor's wife had chestnuts in her lap,
And mouncht, and mouncht, and mouncht. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Mound.

MOU

MOUND. n. f. [munian, Saxon, to defend.] Any thing raised to fortify or defend: usually a bank of earth and stone.
His broad branches laden with rich fee,
Did stretch themselves without the utmost bound
Of this great garden, compass'd with a mound. Fairy Qu.
The sea's a thief, whose liquid fuge resolves
The mounds into salt tears. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.
God had thrown
That mountain as his garden mound, high rais'd. Milton.
Such as broke through all mounds of law, such as laughed at the sword of vengeance which divine justice brandish'd in their faces. South's Sermons.
Nor cold shall hinder me with horns and hounds
To thrud the thickets, or to leap the mounds. Dryden.
The state of Milan is like a vast garden forronded by a noble mound-work of rocks and mountains. Addison.
TO MOUND. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify with a mound.
MOUNT. n. f. [mont, French; mons, Latin.]
1. A mountain; a hill.
Jacob offered sacrifice upon the mount. Gen. xxxi. 54.
Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounds of snow. Dryden.
2. An artificial hill raised in a garden, or other place.
He might see what mounds they had in short time cast, and what a number there was of brave and warlike soldiers.
Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
3. A publick treasure; a bank. Now obsolete.
These examples confirmed me in a resolution to spend my time wholly in writing; and to put forth that poor talent God hath given me, not to particular exchanges, but to banks or mounds of perpetuity, which will not break. Bacon.
TO MOUNT. v. n. [monter, French.]
1. To rise on high.
Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, and make her nest on high? Job iii. 27.
I'll strive, with troubl'd thoughts, to take a nap;
Left leaden slumber poize me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory. Shakesp.
A base ignoble mind,
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shakesp.
The fire of trees and houses mounts on high,
And meets half-way new fires that show'r from sky. Cowley.
If the liturgy should be offered to them, it would kindle jealousy, and as the first range of that ladder which should serve to mount over all their customs. Clarendon.
Ambitious meteors set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun; not considering, that they have no more time allowed them in their mounting than the single revolution of a day; and that when the light goes from them, they are of necessity to fall. Dryd.
2. To tower; to be built up to great elevation.
Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet he shall perish. Job xx. 6.
3. To get on horseback.
He
Like a full acorn'd boar, a churning on,
Cry'd, oh! and mounted. Shakesp.'s Cymbeline.
4. [For amount.] To rise in value.
Bring then these blessings to a strict account,
Make fair deductions, see to what they mount. Pope.
TO MOUNT. v. a.
1. To raise aloft; to lift on high.
The fire that mounts the liquor till 't runs o'er,
Seeming to augment, wastes it. Shakesp.
What power is it which mounts my love so high,
That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye? Shakesp.
The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by. Ral.
2. To ascend; to climb.
Shall we mount again the rural throne,
And rule the country kingdoms, once our own? Dryden.
3. To place on horseback.
Of these he chose the fairest and the best,
To mount the Trojan troop. Dryden's En.
Clear reason, acting in conjunction with a well-disciplined, but strong and vigorous fancy, seldom fail to attain their end:
fancy without reason, is like a horse without a rider; and reason without fancy is not well mounted. Grew's Cos. b. ii.
4. To embellish with ornaments.
5. To mount guard. To do duty and watch at any particular post.
6. To mount a cannon. To set a piece on its wooden frame for the more easy carriage and management in firing it.
MO'UNTAIN. n. f. [montaigne, French.] A large hill; a vast protuberance of the earth.
I had been drowned; a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man, and what a thing should I have been when I had been swelled? I should have been a mountain of mummy.
Shakesp.'s Merry Wives of Windsor.
She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe,
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where fits deformity to mock my body. Shakesp.

MOU

From Acmon's hands a rolling-stone there came,
So large, it half deferr'd a mountain's name! Dryden.
MO'UNTAIN. adj. [montanus, Latin.] Found on the mountains; pertaining to the mountains; growing on the mountains.
Now for our mountain sport, up to yond hill,
Your legs are young. Shakesp.'s Cymbeline.
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakesp.
MO'UNTAIN-ER. n. f. [from mountain.]
1. An inhabitant of the mountains.
A few mountaineers may escape, enough to continue human race; and yet illiterate rufficks, as mountaineers always are.
Bentley's Sermons.
Amitemian troops, of mighty fame,
And mountaineers, that from Severus came. Dryden's En.
2. A savage; a free booter; a ruffick.
Yield, ruffick mountaineer. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
No savage, fierce banditti, or mountaineer,
Will dare to foil her virgin purity. Milton.
MO'UNTAIN-ET. n. f. [from mountain.] A hillock; a small mount. Elegant, but not in use.
Her breasts sweetly rose up like two fair mountaints in the pleasant vale of Tempe. Sidney.
MO'UNTAINOUS. adj. [from mountain.]
1. Hilly; full of mountains.
The ascent of the land from the sea to the foot of the mountains, and the height of the mountains from the bottom to the top, are to be computed, when you measure the height of a mountain, or of a mountainous land, in respect of the sea. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. Large as mountains; huge; bulky.
What custom wills in all things, shou'd we do't,
Mountainous error wou'd be too highly heapt
For truth to o'erpeer. Shakesp.
On earth, in air, amidst the seas and skies,
Mountainous heaps of wonders rise;
Whole tow'ring strength will ne'er submit
To reason's batteries, or the mincs of wit. Prior.
3. Inhabiting mountains.
In destructions by deluge and earthquake, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant and mountainous people, that can give no account of the time past. Bacon's Essays.
MO'UNTAINOUSNESS. n. f. [from mountainous.] State of being full of mountains.
Armenia is so called from the mountainousness of it.
Brevewood on Learning.
MO'UNTAIN-PARSLEY. n. f. [oreoselinum, Lat.] A plant.
The mountain-parsley hath a rose-shaped umbellated flower, consisting of several leaves, placed in a circular order, resting on the empanclement, which afterwards becomes a fruit composed of two seeds, which are oval, plain, large, streaked and bordered, and sometimes cast off their cover; the leaves are like parsley. Miller.
MO'UNTAIN-ROSE. n. f. [schameryhododendron, Lat.] A plant.
The mountain-rose hath a tubulous flower, consisting of one leaf, shaped somewhat like a funnel; from whose cup arises the point, fixed like a nail in the hinder part of the flower, which afterwards becomes an oblong fruit, divided into five cells, in which are contained many very small seeds. Miller.
MO'UNTANT. adj. [montans, Lat.] Rising on high.
Hold up, you flouts,
Your aprons mountant; you're not oatable,
Although, I know, you'll swear. Shak. Timon of Athens.
MO'UNTEBANK. n. f. [montare in banco, Italian.]
1. A doctor that mounts a bench in the market, and boasts his infallible remedies and cures.
I bought an unction of a mountebank
So mortal, that but dip a knife in it,
Where it draws blood, no cataplasm so rare,
Can save the thing from death. Shakesp. Hamlet.
She, like a mountebank, did wound
And stab herself with doubts profound,
Only to shew with how small pain
The sores of faith are cur'd again. Hudibras, p. i.
But Æschylus, says Horace in some pages, Dryden.
Was the first mountebank that trod the stage.
It looks so like a mountebank to boast of infallible cures.
Baker's Reflections on Learning.
2. Any boastful and false pretender.
As nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like liberties of sin. Shakesp.
There are mountebanks, and snatterers in state. L'Estrange.
Nothing so impossible in nature but mountebanks will undertake. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
TO MO'UNTEBANK. v. a. [from the noun.] To cheat by false boasts or pretences.
I'll mountebank their loves, Shakesp.'s Coriolanus.
Cog their hearts from them. Stenjer.
MO'UNTENANCE. n. f. Amount of a thing. MO'UNTER.

MOU

MO'UNTER. n. f. [from mount.] One that mounts.
Though they to the earth were thrown,
Yet quickly they regain'd their own,
Such nimbleness was never shown;
They were two gallant mounters. Drayton's Nymphid.
Few bankers will to heav'n be mounters. Swift.
MO'UNTY. n. f. [montie, French.] The rise of a hawk.
The sport which Basilus would shew to Zemanie, was the mounty at a heron, which getting up on his waggling wings with pain, as though the air next to the earth were not fit to fly through, now diminished the sight of himself. Sidney.
TO MOURN. v. n. [mupnan, Saxon.]
1. To grieve; to be sorrowful.
Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep. Genes.
I mourn in my complaint. Psal. lv. 2.
This day is holy; mourn not, nor weep. Neb. viii. 9.
The people shall mourn over it. Hof. x. 5.
My vineyard being desolate, mourneth unto me. Jer. xii.
They made an appointment to mourn with him, and to comfort him. Job ii. 11.
They rejoice at the presence of the sun, and mourn at the absence thereof. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 493.
2. To wear the habit of sorrow.
We mourn in black; why mourn we not in blood? Shak.
Friends in sable weeds appear,
Grieve for an hour, perhaps they mourn a year;
They bear about the mockery of woe
To midnight dances, and the puppet-show. Pope.
3. To preserve appearance of grief.
The days of mourning for my father are at hand, then will I lay Jacob. Gen. xxvii. 41.
Feign thyself to be a mourner, and put on mourning apparel. 2 Sam. xiv. 2.
Publish it that she is dead;
Maintain a mourning ostentation, longer, or a wider mouth, could not have consisted with a foul. Loche.

2. The opening; that at which any thing enters; the entrance;
the part of a vessel by which it is filled and emptied.
He came and lay at the mouth of the haven, daring them to fight. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
Set a candle lighted in the bottom of a basin of water, and turn the mouth of a glass over the candle, and it will make the water rise. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 889.
The mouth is low and narrow; but, after having entered pretty far in, the grotto opens itself in an oval figure. Addison.
The navigation of the Arabick gulf being more dangerous toward the bottom than the mouth, Ptolemy built Berenice at the entry of the gulf. Arbutnot on Coins.
3. The instrument of speaking.
Riotous madnefs,
To be entangled with these mouth-made vows,
Which break themselves in swearing. Shakesp.
Either our history shall with full mouth
Speak freely of our acts; or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worshipp'd with a waxen epitaph. Shakesp. Henry V.
We will call the damsel, and inquire at her mouth.
Every body's mouth will be full on it for the first four days, and in four more the story will talk itself asleep. L'Estrange.
In the innocent age of the world, it was in every body's mouth that the son was about to marry. L'Estrange.

To wipe the flabbings of thy snotty wit. Dorset.
To Mu'CKER. v. n. [from muck.] To scramble for money; to hoard up; to get or save meanly: a word used by Chaucer, and still retained in conversation.
Mu'CKERER. n. f. [from mucker.] One that muckers.
Mu'CKHILL. n. f. [muck and hill.] A dunghill.
Old Euclio in Plautus, as he went from home, seeing a crowscat upon the muck-hill, returned in all haste, taking it for an ill sign his money was digged up. Burton.
Mu'CKINESS.

MUD

MU'CKINESS. n. f. [from mucky.] Naftiness; filth.
MU'CKLE. adj. [mycel, Saxon.] Much.
MU'CKSWEAT. n. f. [muck and sweat: in this low word, muck signifies wet, moist.] Profuse sweat.
MU'CKWORM. n. f. [muck and worm.]
 1. A worm that lives in dung.
 2. A miser; a curmudgeon.
 Worms suit all conditions;
 Misers are muckworms, silkworms beaus,
 And death-watches physicians. Swift's Miscel.
MU'CKY. adj. [from muck.] Nasty; filthy.
Mucky filth his branching arms annoys,
 And with uncomely weeds the gentle wave accloys. Fairy Queen.
MU'COUS. adj. [mucosus, Latin.] Slimy; viscous.
 The salamander being cold in the fourth, and moist in the third degree, and having also a mucous humidity above and under the skin, may a while endure the flame. Brown.
 About these the nerves and other vessels make a fine web, covered over with a mucous substance, to moisten these papillae pyramidales. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.
MU'COUSNESS. n. f. [from mucous.] Slime; viscosity.
MUCRO. n. f. [Latin.] A point.
 The mucro or point of the heart inclineth unto the left, by this position it giving way unto the attention of the midriff. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
MU'CRONATED. n. f. [mucro, Latin.] Narrowed to a sharp point.
 Gems are here shot into cubes consisting of six sides, and mucronated or terminating in a point. Woodward.
MU'CULENT. adj. [from mucus, Lat.] Viscous; slimy. Diſt.
MUCUS. n. f. [Latin.] Is most properly used for that which flows from the papillary processes through the os cribriforme into the nostrils; but it is also used for any slimy liquor or moisture, as that which daubs over and guards the bowels and all the chief passages in the body; and it is separated by the mucilaginous glands. Quincy.
 In the action of chewing, the mucus mixeth with the aliment: the mucus is an humour different from the spittle, and the great quantity of air which it contains helps to dissolve the aliment. Arbutnot on Aliments.
MUD. n. f. [modder, Dutch.] The slime and uliginous matter at the bottom of still water.
 The purest spring is not so free from mud,
 As I am clear from treason. Shakeſp. Henry VI. p. iii.
 Water in mud doth putrefy, as not able to preserve itself. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. N<sup>o</sup>. 696.
 The channel was dried up, and the fish left dead and sticking in the mud. L'Eſtrange.
 The force of the fluid will separate the smallest particles, so as to leave vacant interstices, which will be again filled up by particles carried on by the succeeding fluid, as a bank by the mud of the current, which must be reduced to that figure which gives least resistance to the current. Arbutnot.
 A fountain in a darksome wood,
 Nor stain'd with falling leaves nor rising mud. Addiſon.
TO MUD. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To bury in the slime or mud.
 I wiſh
 Myself were mudded in that oozy bed,
 Where my son lies. Shakeſp. Henry VI. p. iii.
 2. To make turbid; to pollute with dirt; to dash with dirt; to fowl by stirring up the sediment.
 I shall not stir in the waters which have been already mudded by so many contentious enquiries. Glanville's Seep.
MU'DDILY. adv. [from muddy.] Turbidly; with foul mixture.
 Lucilius writ not only loosely and muddily, with little art, and much less care, but also in a time which was not yet sufficiently purged from barbarism. Dryden.
MU'DDINESS. n. f. [from muddy.] Turbidity; foulness caused by mud, dregs, or sediment.
 Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber: the season of the year, the muddiness of the stream, with the many green trees hanging over it, put me in mind of the delightful image that Virgil has given when Æneas took the first view of it. Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.
 Turn the bottle upside down; by this means you will not lose one drop, and the froth will conceal the muddiness. Su.
TO MU'DDLE. v. a. [from mud.]
 1. To make turbid; to fowl; to make muddy.
 The neighbourhood told him, he did ill to muddle the water and spoil the drink. L'Eſtrange's Fables.
 Yet let the goddess smile or frown,
 Bread we shall eat, or white or brown;
 And in a cottage, or a court,
 Drink fine champagne, or muddled port. Prior.
 2. To make half drunk; to cloud or stupefy.
 I was for five years often drunk, always muddled; they carried me from tavern to tavern. Arbutnot's Hiſt. of J. Bull.
 Epicurus seems to have had his brains so muddled and confounded, that he scarce ever kept in the right way, though the main maxim of his philosophy was to trust to his senses, and follow his nose. Bentley's Sermon.

MUF

MU'DDY. adj. [from mud.]
 1. Turbid; foul with mud.
 A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled,
 Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
 Her garments, heavy with their drink,
 Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
 To muddy death. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
 Carry it among the whiffers in Datchet mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch close by the Thames. Shakeſp.
 Who can a pure and crystal current bring
 From such a muddy and polluted spring? Sandys's Paraph.
 I strove in vain th' infected blood to cure,
 Streams will run muddy where the spring's impure. Rosam.
 Till by the fury of the storm full blown,
 The muddy bottom o'er the clouds is thrown. Dryden.
 Out of the true fountains of science painters and statuary are bound to draw, without amusing themselves with dipping in streams which are often muddy, at least troubled; I mean the manner of their masters after whom they creep. Dryden.
 2. Impure; dark; gross.
 There's not the smallest orb which thou beholdest,
 But in his motion like an angel wings,
 Still quiring to the young eye'd cherubims;
 Such harmony is in immortal sounds;
 But whilst this muddy vesture of decay
 Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
 If you chuse, for the composition of such ointment, such ingredients as do make the spirits a little more gross or muddy, thereby the imagination will fix the better. Bacon.
 2. A bird so called. Ans.
 3. Soiled with mud.
 His passengers
 Expos'd in muddy weeds, upon the miry shore. Dryden.
 4. Dark; not bright.
 The black
 A more inferior station seeks,
 Leaving the fiery red behind,
 And mingles in her muddy cheeks. Swift's Miscel.
 5. Cloudy; dull.
 Doſt think I am so muddy, so unsettle'd,
 To appoint myself in this vexation. Shak. Winter's Tale.
 Yet I
 A dull and muddy mettled rascal, peak,
 Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
 And can say nothing. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
TO MU'DDY. v. a. [from mud.] To make muddy; to cloud; to disturb.
 The people muddled
 Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
 Excess, either with an apoplexy, knocks a man on the head; or with a fever, like fire in a strong-water-shop, burns him down to the ground; or if it flames not out, charks him to a coal; muddies the best wit, and makes it only to flutter and froth high. Grew's Cosmol. b. iii.
MU'DSUCKER. n. f. [mud and suck.] A sea fowl.
 In all water-fowl, their legs and feet correspond to that way of life; and in mudsuckers, two of the toes are somewhat joined, that they may not easily sink. Dorham.
MUDWALL. n. f. [mud and wall.]
 1. A wall built without mortar, by throwing up mud and suffering it to dry.
 If conscience contract rust or soil, a man may as well expect to see his face in a mudwall, as that such a conscience should give him a true report of his condition. South's Sermon.
 2. A bird so called. Ans.
MUDWALLED. adj. [mud and wall.] Having a mudwall.
 As folks from mudwall'd tenement
 Bring landlords pepper-corn for rent;
 Present a turkey, or a hen,
 To those might better spare them ten. Prior.
TO MUE. v. a. [muer, Fr.] To moult; to change feathers.
MUFF. n. f. [muff, Swedish.] A soft cover for the hands in winter.
 Feel but the difference soft and rough,
 This a gantlet, that a muff. Cleveland.
 What! no more favours, not a ribbon more,
 Not fan, not muff. Suckling.
 The lady of the spotted muff began.
 A child that stands in the dark upon his mother's muff, says he stands upon something, he knows not what. Locke.
TO MU'FFLE. v. a. [from muffle, French, a winter glove.]
 1. To cover from the weather.
 His muffled feature speaks him a recluse,
 His ruins prove him a religious house. Cleveland.
 You must be muffled up like ladies. Dryden.
 The face lies muffled up within the garment. Addiſon.
 2. To blindfold.
 Alas that love, whose view is muffled still,
 Should without eyes see pathways to his ill. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
 We've

We've caught the woodcock, and will keep him muffed.
Shakeſp. All's well that ends well.
 Our understandings lie grovelling in this lower region, muffed up in mists and darkness. Glanville's Seep.
 Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the forerunner of death: when the malefactor comes once to be muffed, and the fatal cloth drawn over his eyes, we know that he is not far from his execution. South's Sermons.
 Bright Lucifer
 That night his heav'nly form obscur'd with tears;
 And since he was forbid to leave the skies,
 He muffed up in the infallibility of his fact, will not enter into debate with a person that will question any of those things which to him are sacred. Locke.
 3. To conceal; to involve.
 This is one of the strongest examples of a personation that ever was: although the king's manner of shewing things by pieces, and by dark lights, hath so muffed it, that it hath left it almost as a mystery. Bacon's Henry VII.
 No muffling clouds, nor shades infernal, can
 From his inquiry hide offending man. Sandys's Paraph.
 The thoughts of kings are like religious groves,
 The walks of muffed gods. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
 They were in former ages muffed up in darkness and superstition. Arbutnot's Hiſt. of John Bull.
TO MU'FFLE. v. n. [maffelen, moffelen, Dutch.] To speak inwardly; to speak without clear and distinct articulation.
 The freedom or apertness and vigour of pronouncing, as in the Bocca Romana, and giving somewhat more of aspiration; and the closeness and muffling, and laziness of speaking, render the sound of speech different. Helder.
MU'FFLER. n. f. [from muffle.]
 1. A cover for the face.
 Fortune is painted with a muffler before her eyes, to signify to you that fortune is blind. Shakeſp. Henry V.
 Mr. Hales has found out the best expedients for preventing immediate suffocation from tainted air, by breathing through mufflers which imbibe these vapours. Arbutnot on Air.
 2. A part of a woman's dress by which the face was covered.
 There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a handkerchief, and so escape. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 The Lord will take away your tinkling ornaments, chains, bracelets, and mufflers. Iſa. iii. 19.
MUFFTI. n. f. [a Turkish word.] The high priest of the Mahometans.
MUG. n. f. [Skinner derives it from mugel, Welsh, warm.] A cup to drink in.
 Ah Bowzybee, why didst thou stay so long?
 The mugs were large, the drink was wondrous strong. Gay.
MUGGY. adj. [A cant word.] Moist; damp; mouldy.
MUGGISH. adj. [A cant word.] Moist; damp; mouldy.
 Cover with stones, or muggy straw, to keep it moist. Mortimer's Husbandry.
MUGHOUSE. n. f. [mug and house.] An alehouse; a low house of entertainment.
 Our sex has dar'd the mughouse chiefs to meet,
 And purchas'd fame in many a well fought street. Tickell.
MUGIENT. adj. [mugiens, Latin.] Bellowing.
 That a bittern maketh that mugient noise or bumping, by putting its bill into a reed, or by putting the same in water or mud, and after a while retaining the air, but suddenly excluding it again, is not easily made out. Brown.
MUGWORT. n. f. [mugwort, Saxon; artemisia, Lat.]
 The flowers and fruit of the mugwort are very like those of the wormwood, but grow erect upon the branches; the flowers are of a purplish colour, and the leaves terminate in sharp points cut into many segments; they are of a dark green on the upper side, and hoary on the under side. Miller.
 Some of the most common similes which we in England are comfry, bugle, Paul's-betony, and mugwort. Wifeman.
MULATTO. n. f. [Spanish; mulat, French, from mulus, Lat.] One begot between a white and a black, as a mule between different species of animals.
MULBERRY.
MULBERRY tree. n. f. [morbeyuz, Saxon; morus, Lat.]
 The mulberry tree hath large, rough, roundish leaves; the male flowers, or catkins, which have a calyx consisting of four leaves, are sometimes produced upon separate trees, at other times at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree: the fruit is composed of several protuberances, to each of which adhere four small leaves; the seeds are roundish, growing singly in each protuberance; it is planted for the delicacy of the fruit. The white mulberry is commonly cultivated for its leaves to feed silkworms, in France and Italy, though the Persians always make use of the common black mulberry for that purpose. Miller.
 Morton, archbishop of Canterbury, was content to use mor upon a tun; and sometimes a mulberry tree, called morus in Latin, out of a tun. Camden's Remains.

 The ripeſt mulberry,
 That will not hold the handling. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
 A body black, round, with small grain like tubercles on the surface; not very unlike a mulberry. Woodward's Fossils.
MULCT. n. f. [mulctus, Latin.] A fine; a penalty: used commonly of pecuniary penalty.
 Because this is a great part, and Eusebius hath yet said nothing, we will, by way of mulct or pain, lay it upon him. Bacon's holy War.
 Look humble upward, see his will disclose
 The forfeit first, and then the fine impose;
 A mulct thy poverty could never pay,
 Had not eternal wisdom found the way. Dryden.
TO MULCT. v. a. [mulcto, Lat. mulctus, Fr.] To punish with fine or forfeiture.
 Marriage without consent of parents they do not make void, but they mulct it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents inheritance. Bacon's New Atlantis.
MULE. n. f. [mule, mulet, Fr. mula, Latin.] An animal generated between a he ass and a mare, or sometimes between a horse and a she ass.
 You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
 Which, like your asses, and your dogs, and mules,
 You use in abject and in slavish part. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
 Five hundred asses yearly took the horse,
 Producing mules of greater speed and force. Sandys.
 Those effluvia in the male seed have the greatest stroke in generation, as is demonstrable in a mule, which doth more resemble the parent, that is, the ass, than the female. Ray.
 Twelve young mules, a strong laborious race. Pope.
MULETEER. n. f. [muletier, Fr. mulio, Lat.] Mule-driver; horse-boy.
 Bate muleteers,
 Like peasant foot-boys, do they keep the walls,
 And dare not take up arms like gentlemen. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
 Your ships are not well mann'd,
 Your mariners are muleteers, reapers. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
MULIEBRITY. n. f. [muliebris, Lat.] Womanhood; the contrary to virility; the manners and character of woman.
TO MULL. v. a. [mollitus, Latin.]
 1. To soften and dispirit, as wine is when burnt and sweetened. Hannet.
 Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy Mull'd, deaf, sleepy, insensible. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
 2. To heat any liquor, and sweeten and spice it.
 Drink new cyder mull'd, with ginger warm. Gay.
MULLAR. n. f. [mouleur, French.] A stone held in the hand with which any powder is ground upon a horizontal stone. It is now often called improperly mullet.
 The best grinder is the porphyry, white or green marble, with a mullar or upper stone of the same, cut very even without flaws or holes; you may make a mullar also of a flat pebble, by grinding it smooth at a grind-stone. Peachment.
MULLEIN. n. f. [verbascum, Lat.] A plant.
 The flower of the mullein consists of one leaf, which expands in a circular form, and is cut into several segments; out of the centre arises the pointal, which afterward becomes an oval-pointed fruit, divided into two cells by a middle partition filled with small angular seeds. Miller.
MULLET. n. f. [mulus, Lat. mulet, Fr.] A sea fish.
 Of carps and mullets why prefer the great?
 Yet for small turbot such esteem profess. Pope's Horace.

MULTIPLICATE. n. f. [from multiplicare, Latin.] Consisting of more than one.

In this multiply number of the eye, the object seen is not multiplied, and appears but one, though seen with two or more eyes. Derham's Physico-Theol.

MULTIPLICATION. n. f. [from multiplicatio, Latin.]

1. The act of multiplying or increasing any number by addition or production of more of the same kind.

Although they had divers files for God, yet under many appellations they acknowledged one divinity; rather conceiving thereby the evidence or acts of his power in several ways than a multiplication of essence, or real distractions of unity in any one. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

2. [In arithmetick.]

Multiplication is the increasing of any one number by another, so often as there are units in that number, by which the one is increased. Cocker's Arithmetick.

A man had need be a good arithmetician to understand this author's works: his description runs on like a multiplication table. Addison on ancient Medals.

MULTIPLICATOR. n. f. [from multiplicator, Fr. from multiplicare, Latin.] The number by which another number is multiplied.

MULTIPLICITY. n. f. [from multiplicité, French.]

1. More than one of the same kind.

Had they discoursed rightly but upon this one principle, that God was a being infinitely perfect, they could never have asserted a multiplicity of gods: for, can one God include in him all perfection, and another God include in him all perfections too? Can there be any more than all? And if this all be in one, can it be also in another? South's Sermons.

Company, he thinks, lessens the shame of vice, by sharing it; and abates the torrent of a common odium, by deriving

MUMMY. n. f. [from munie, Fr. munia, Lat. derived by Salmafus from animum, by Bahrt from the Arabic.]

1. A dead body preserved by the Egyptian art of embalming.

We have two different substances preserved for medicinal use under the name of mummy: one is the dried flesh of human bodies embalmed with myrrh and spice; the other is the liquor running from such mummies when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damps: this is sometimes of a liquid, sometimes of a solid form, as it is preserved in vials well stopp'd, or suffered to dry and harden in the air: the first kind is brought to us in large pieces, of a lax and friable texture, light and puffy, of a blackish brown colour, and often black and clammy on the surface; it is of a strong but not agreeable smell: the second sort, in its liquid state, is a thick, opaque, and viscous fluid, of a blackish and a strong, but not disagreeable smell: in its indurated state it is a dry, solid substance, of a fine shining black colour and close texture, easily broken, and of a good smell: this sort is extremely dear, and the first sort for cheap, that as all kinds of mummy are brought from Egypt we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggists are supplied with is the flesh of executed criminals, or of any other bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen so plentiful in that part of the world, and adding aloe, and some other cheap ingredients, send them to be baked in an oven till the juices are exhaled, and the embalming matter has penetrated so thoroughly that the flesh will keep. Mummy has been esteemed resolvent and balsamick; and besides it, the skull, and even the mors growing on the skulls of human skeletons, have been celebrated for antiepileptick virtues; the fat also of the human body has been recommended in rheumatisms, and every other part or humour have been in repute for the cure of some disease: at present we are wise enough to know, that the virtues ascribed to the parts of the human body are all either imaginary, or such as may be found in other animal substances: the mummy and the skull alone of all these horrid medicines retain their places in the shops. Hill's Mat. Med.

MUN

The filk

Was dy'd in mummy, which the skilful Convey'd of maidens hearts. Shakespeare's Othello.

It is strange how long carcases have continued uncorrupt, as appeareth in the mummies of Egypt, having lasted some of them three thousand years. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 771.

 Lodona's fate, in long oblivion cast,
 The musé shall sing. Pope.
 To MUSE. v. n. [musé, Fr. musé, Dutch; musse, Latin.]
 1. To ponder; to think close; to study in silence.
 If he spake courteously, he angled the people's hearts; if he were silent, he musé upon some dangerous plot. Sidney.
 St. Augustine, speaking of devout men, noteth, how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they give unto the chapters read, how careful they were to remember the same, and to musé thereupon by themselves. Hooker.
 Cæsar's father oft,
 When he hath mus'd of taking kingdoms in,
 Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place,
 As it rain'd kisses. Shakefp.
 My mouth shall speak of wisdom; and my heart musé of understanding. Psalm xlix. v. 3.
 Her face upon a sudden glittered, so that I was afraid of her, and musé what it might be. 2 Esdras x. 25.
 All men musé in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ or not. Luke iii. 15.
 On these he mus'd within his thoughtful mind. Dryden.
 We musé so much on the one, that we are apt to overlook and forget the other. Atterbury's Sermons.
 Man superiour walks
 Amid the glad creation, musé praise,
 And looking lively gratitude. Thomson's Spring.
 2. To be absent of mind; to be attentive to something not present; to be in a brown study.
 Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks?
 And given my treasures and my rights of thee;
 To thick-ey'd musé and curs'd melancholy. Shakespeare.
 You suddenly arose and walk'd about,
Musé and fighting with your arms across. Shakespeare.
 The sad king
 Feels sudden terror and cold shivering, Lifts not to eat, still musé, sleeps unbound. Daniel.

3. To wonder; to be amazed.
Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed;
 For what I will, I will.
 Do not *mus*e at me,
 I have a strange infirmity. Shakesp. Macbeth.
MUSEFUL. adj. [from *mus*e.] Deep thinking; silently thoughtful.
 Full of musical moping, which preface
 The loss of reason, and conclude in rage. Dryden.
MUSER. n. f. [from *mus*e.] One who mules; one apt to be absent of mind.
MUSER. n. f. [in hunting.] The place through which the hare goes to relief. Bailey.
MUSEUM. n. f. [μῦσεον.] A repository of learned curiosities.
MUSHROOM. n. f. [musheron, French.]
 1. Mushrooms are by curious naturalists esteemed perfect plants, though their flowers and seeds have not as yet been discovered: the true champion or mushroom appears at first of a roundish form like a button, the upper part of which, as also the stalk, is very white, but being opened, the under part is of a livid flesh colour, but the fleshy part, when broken, is very white; when they are suffered to remain undisturbed, they will grow to a large size, and explicate themselves almost to a flannel, and the red part underneath will change to a dark colour: in order to cultivate them, open the ground about the roots of the mushrooms, where you will find the earth very often full of small white knobs, which are the off-sets or young mushrooms; these should be carefully gathered, preserving them in lumps with the earth about them, and planted in hot beds. Miller.
 2. An upstart; a wretch risen from the dunghill; a director of a company.
 Mushrooms come up in a night, and yet they are unfown; and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms. Bacon's Natural History.
 Tully, the humble mushroom scarcely known,
 The lowly native of a country town. Dryden.
MUSHROOMSTONE. n. f. [mushroom and stone.] A kind of fossil.
 Fifteen mushroomstones of the same shape. Woodward.
MUSICK. n. f. [μουσική; musique, Fr.]
 1. The science of harmonical sounds.
 The man that hath no musick in himself,
 Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
 Is fit for treasons. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
 Now look into the musick-master's gains,
 Where noble youth at vast expence is taught,
 But eloquence not valu'd at a groat. Dryden's Juvenal.
 2. Instrumental or vocal harmony.
 When the spake,
 Sweet words, like dropping honey, she did shed;
 And 'twixt the pearls and rubies softly brake
 A silver sound, that heavenly musick seem'd to make. F. Qu.
 Such musick
 Before was never made,
 But when of old the sons of morning sung. Milton.
 By musick minds an equal temper know,
 Nor swell too high, nor sink too low;
 Warriours the fires with animated sounds,
 Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pope.
 We have dancing-masters and musick-masters. Arb. and Pope.
MUSICAL. adj. [musical, Fr. from musick.]
 1. Harmonious; melodious; sweet sounding.
 The merry birds
 Chanted above their cheerful harmony,
 And made amongst themselves a sweet consort,
 That quicken'd the dull spirit with musical comfort. F. Qu.
 Sweet bird that thum'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholly;
 'Tis chauntress oft the wood among,
 I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton.
 Neither is it enough to give his author's sense, in poetical expressions and in musical numbers. Dryden.
 2. Belonging to musick.
 Several musical instruments are to be seen in the hands of Apollo's muses, which might give great light to the dispute between the ancient and modern music. Addison.
MUSICALLY. adv. [from musical.] Harmoniously; with sweet sound.
 Valentine, musically coy, Shun'd Phædra's arms. Addison.
MUSICALNESS. n. f. [from musical.] Harmony.
MUSICIAN. n. f. [musicus, Lat. musician, Fr.] One skilled in harmony; one who performs upon instruments of music.
 Though the musicians that shall play to you,
 Hand in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
 Yet 'tis they shall be here. Shakesp. Henry IV.
 The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
 When every goose is cackling, would be thought
 No better a musician than the wren. Shakesp.
 A painter may make a better face than ever was; but he must do it by a kind of felicity, as a musician that maketh an excellent air in music, and not by rule. Bacon's Essays.

- The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung;
 Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young. Dryden.
MUSK. n. f. [muschio, Italian; musc, Fr.]
Musk is a dry, light and friable substance of a dark blackish colour, with some tinge of a purplish or blood colour in it, feeling somewhat smooth or unctuous: its smell is highly perfumed, and too strong to be agreeable in any large quantity:
 its taste is bitterish: it is brought from the East Indies, mostly from the kingdom of Bantam, some from Tonquin and Cochin China: the animal which produces it is of a very singular kind, not agreeing with any established genus: it is of the size of a common goat but taller; its head resembles that of the greyhound, and its ears stand erect like those of the rabbit: its tail is also erect and short, its legs moderately long, and its hoofs deeply cloven: its hair is a dusky brown, variegated with a faint cast of red and white, every hair being part-coloured: the bag which contains the musk, is three inches long and two wide, and situated in the lower part of the creature's belly; it consists of a thin membrane covered thinly with hair, resembling a small purse, and when genuine, the scent is so strong as to offend the head greatly: toward the orifice of the bag there are several glands, which serve for the secretion of this precious perfume, for the sake of which the Indians kill the animal. Hill.
 Some putrefactions and excrements yield excellent odours;
 as civet and musk. Bacon's Natural History.
MUSK. n. f. [musca, Lat.] Grape hyacinth or grape flower.
Musk hath a bulbous shoot; the leaves are long and narrow; the flower is hermaphrodite, consisting of one leaf, and shaped like a pitcher, and cut at the top into six segments, which are reflexed; the ovary becomes a triangular fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of round seeds. Miller.
MUSKAPPLE. n. f. A kind of apple, Ans.
MUSKCAT. n. f. [musk and cat.] The animal from which musk is got.
MUSKCHERRY. n. f. A sort of cherry. Ans.
MUSKET. n. f. [mouquet, Fr. moschetto, Italian, a small hawk.
 Many of the fire-arms are named from animals.]
 1. A soldier's handgun.
 Thou
 Wait shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
 Of smoky musquets. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.
 Practice to make swifter motions than any you have out of your musquets. Bacon.
 They charge their musquets, and with hot desire
 Of full revenge, renew the fight with fire. Waller.
 He perceived a body of their horse within musket-shot of him, and advancing upon him. Clarendon.
 One was brought to us, shot with a musket-ball on the right side of his head. Wise's Surgery.
 2. A male hawk of a small kind, the female of which is the sparrow hawk; so that cyas musket is a young unfledged male hawk of that kind. Hanmer.
 Here comes little Robin.—
 —How now my eyas musket, what news with you. Shak.
 The musket and the coytiel were too weak,
 Too fierce the falcon; but above the rest,
 The noble buzzard ever pleas'd me best. Dryden.
MUSKETTER. n. f. [from musket.] A soldier whose weapon is his musket.
 Notwithstanding they had lined some hedges with musketters, they pursued them till they were dispersed. Clarendon.
MUSKETTOON. n. f. [mouqueton, Fr.] A blunderbuss; a short gun of a large bore. Ditt.
MUSKINESS. n. f. [from musk.] The scent of musk.
MUSKMELOON. n. f. [musk and melon.] A fragrant melon.
 The way of maturation of tobacco must be from the heat of the earth or sun; we see some leading of this in muskmelons, which are sown upon a hot bed duned below, upon a bank turned upon the South sun. Bacon.
MUSKPEAR. n. f. [musk and pear.] A fragrant pear.
MUSKROSE. n. f. [musk and rose.] A rose so called, I suppose, from its fragrance.
 In May and June come roses of all kinds, except the musk, which comes later. Bacon's Essays.
 Thyris, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
 The huddling brook to hear his madrigal, Milton.
 And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale. Boyle.
 The muskrose will, if a lusty plant, bear flowers in Autumn without cutting.
MUSKY. adj. [from musk.] Fragrant; sweet of scent.
 There eternal summer dwells,
 And West winds, with musky wings,
 About the cedar's allies sing. Milton.
 Nard and Cassia's balmy smells.
MUSLIN. n. f. A fine stuff made of cotton.
 By the use of certain attire made of cambric or muslin upon her head, she attained to such an evil art in the motion of her eyes. Tatler, N° 110.
 In half-whipt muslin needles useless lie,
 And shuttle-cocks across the counter fly. Gay.
MUSROL

MUS

- MUSROL*. n. f. [musrole, French] The noseband of a horse's bridle. Bailey.
MUSS. n. f. A scramble.
 When I cry'd ho!
 Like boys unto a mus, kings would start forth,
 And cry, your will? Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
MUSSTATION. n. f. [musstis, Lat.] Murmur; grumble.
MUSULMAN. n. f. A Mahometan believer.
MUST. verb. imperf. [musse, Dutch.] To be obliged. It is only used before a verb. Mus is of all persons and tenses, and used of persons and things.
 Do you confess the bond?
 —I do.
 —Then must the Jew be merciful.
 —On what compulsion must I? tell me that. Shakespeare.
Must I needs bring thy son unto the land from whence thou camest? Gen. xxiv. 5.
 Fade, flowers, fade, nature will have it so;
 'Tis but what we must in our Autumn do. Waller.
 Because the same self-existent being necessarily is what he is, 'tis evident that what he may be, or hath the power of being, he must be. Grew.
 Every father and brother of the convent has a voice in the election, which must be confirmed by the pope. Addison.
MUST. n. f. [mustum, Latin.] New wine; new wort.
 If in the must of wine, or wort of beer, before it be turned, the burrage stay a small time, and be often changed, it makes a sovereign drink for melancholy. Bacon's Natural History.
 As a swarm of flies in vintage time,
 About the wine-press where sweet must is pour'd,
 Beat off, returns as oft with humming sound. Milton.
 The wine itself was suiting to the rest,
 Still working in the must, and lately press'd. Dryden.
 A frugal man that with sufficient must
 His casks replenish'd yearly; he no more Desir'd, nor wanted. Philips.
 Liquors, in the act of fermentation, as must and new ale, produce spasms in the stomach. Arbutnot on Aliments.
TO MUST. v. a. [mus, Welsh, sinking; mus, Dutch, mouldiness; or perhaps from must.] To mould; to make mouldy.
 Others are made of stone and lime; but they are subject to give and be moist, which will must corn. Mortimer.
TO MUST. v. n. To grow mouldy.
MUSTACHES. n. f. [mustaches, French.] Whiskers; hair on the upper lip.
 This was the manner of the Spaniards, to cut off their beards, save only their mustaches, which they wear long. Spens.
MUSTARD. n. f. [mustard, Welsh; musta, Fr.] A plant.
 The flower consists of four leaves, which are placed in form of a cross, out of whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a fruit or pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides, and are filled with roundish seeds: these pods generally end in a fungous horn, containing the like seeds. To these marks must be added, an acrid burning taste, peculiar to mustard. Milner.
 The pancakes were naught, and the mustard was good. Shak.
 Sauce like himself, offensive to its foes,
 The roguish mustard, dangerous to the nose. King.
Mustard, taken in great quantities, would quickly bring the blood into an alkaline state, and destroy the animal.
Arbutnot.
 'Tis your's to shake the soul,
 With thunder rumbling from the mustard bowl. Pope.
 Stick your candle in a bottle, a coffee cup, or a mustard
 pot. Swift.
 Common mustard seed is attenuant and resolvent: it warms the stomach, and excites appetite; but its principal medicinal use is external in sinapisms. Hill's Mat. Med.
TO MUSTER. v. n. To assemble in order to form an army.
 Why does my blood thus muster to my heart,
 So disposing all my other parts Of necessary fitness? Shakesp. Meas. for Measure.
 They reach the destin'd place,
 And muster there, and round the centre swarm,
 And draw together. Blackmore's Creation.
TO MUSTER. v. a. [musteren, Dutch.]
 1. To review forces.
 The captain, half of whose soldiers are dead, and the other quarter never mustered nor seen, demands payment of his whole account. Spenser on Ireland.
 The principal scribe of the host mustered the people. 2 Kings.
 Old Anchises
 Review'd his muster'd race, and took the tale. Dryden.
 A man might have three hundred and eighteen men in his family, without being heir to Adam, and might muster them up, and lead them out against the Indians. Locke.
 2. To bring together.
 Had we no quarrel to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
 From twelve to seventy. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
 I'll muster up my friends, and meet your grace. Shakesp.

MUT

- I could muster up, as well as you, Donne.
 My giants and my witches too.
 A daw tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster. L'Estrange.
 All the wise sayings and advices which philosophers could muster up to this purpose, have proved ineffectual to the common people. Tilleyson.
 Having mustered up all the forces he could think of, the clouds above, and the deeps below: these, says he, are all the stores we have for water; and Moses directs us to no other for the causes of the deluge. Woodward's Natural History.
MUSTER. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A review of a body of forces.
 All the names
 Of thy confederates too, be no less great
 In hell than here: that when we would repeat
 Our strengths in muster, we may name you all. Ben. Jonson.
 2. A register of forces mustered.
 Ye publish the musters of your own bands, and proclaim them to amount to thousands. Hoker.
 Deception takes wrong measures, and makes false musters, which sounds a retreat instead of a charge, and a charge instead of a retreat. South's Sermons.
 3. A collection: as, a muster of peacocks. Ainsworth.
 4. To pass MUSTER. To be allowed.
 Such excuses will not pass muster with God, who will allow no man's idleness to be the measure of possible or impossible.
South's Sermons.
 Double dealers may pass muster for a while; but all parties wash their hands of them in the conclusion. L'Estrange.
MUSTERBOOK. n. f. [muster and book.] A book in which the forces are registered.
 Shadow will serve for Summer: prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the musterbook. Shakesp. H. IV.
MUSTERMASTER. n. f. [muster and master.] One who superintends the muster to prevent frauds.
 A noble gentleman, then mustermaster, was appointed em-bassador unto the Turkish emperor. Koeller's History.
Mustermasters carry the best and ablest men in their pockets.
Raigh's Essays.
MUSTER-ROLL. n. f. [muster and roll.] A register of forces.
 How many insignificant combatants are there in the Christian camp, that only lend their names to fill up the muster-roll, but never dream of going upon service? Decay of Piety.
 One tragick sentence, if I dare decide,
 Which Betterton's grave action dignify'd;
 Or well-mouth'd Booth with emphasis proclaims,
 Though but perhaps a muster-roll of names. P. p.
MUSTILY. adv. [from musty.] Mouldily.
MUSTINESS. n. f. [from musty.] Mould; damp foulness.
 Keep them dry and free from mustiness. Ever's Calendar.
MUSTY. adj. [from must.]
 1. Mouldy; spoiled with damp; moist and fetid.
 Was't thou fain, poor father,
 To hovel thee with wine and rogues forlorn,
 In short and musty straw. Shakesp. King Lear.
 Pittachoes, so they be good and not musty, made into a milk, are an excellent nourisher. Bacon's Natural History.
 2. Stale; spoiled with age.
 While the grass grows—the proverb is somewhat musty. Sh.
 Let those that go by water to Graveend prefer lying upon the boards, than on musty infectious straw. Farvey.
 3. Vapid with fetidness.
 Let not, like Nævius, every error pass;
 The musty wine, foul cloth, or greasy glass. Pope.
 4. Dull; heavy; wanting activity; wanting practice in the occurrences of life.
 Xantippe, being married to a bookish man who has no knowledge of the world, is forced to take his affairs into her own hands, and to spirit him up now and then, that he may not grow musty and unfit for conversation. Adiif. Spectator.
MUTABILITY. n. f. [mutabilit, Fr. mutabilis, Latin.]
 1. Changeableness; not continuance in the same state.
 The mutability of that end, for which they are made,
 maketh them also changeable. Hooker.
 My fancy was the air, most free,
 And full of mutability,
 Big with chimeras. Suckling.
 Plato confesses that the heavens and the frame of the world are corporeal, and therefore subject to mutability. Stillingsfleet.
 2. Inconstancy; change of mind.
 Ambitions, covetings, change of prides, disdain,
 Nice longings, flanders, mutability. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
MUTABLE. adj. [mutabilis, Latin.]
 1. Subject to change; alterable.
 Of things of the most accidental and mutable nature, accidental in their production, and mutable in their continuance, yet God's prescience is as certain in him as the memory is or can be in us. South's Sermons.
 2. Inconstant; unsettled.
 For the mutable rank-scented many,
 Let them regard me, as I do not flatter. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
 I saw

I saw thee mutable
Of fancy, fear'd lest one day thou would'st leave me. Milt.
MUTABLENESS. n. f. [from mutable.] Changeableness; uncertainty; instability.
MUTATION. n. f. [mutation, French; mutatio, Lat.] Change; alteration.
His honour
Was nothing but mutation, ay, and that
From one bad thing to worse. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
The vicissitude or mutation in the superior globe are no fit matter for this present argument. Bacon's Essays.
To make plants grow out of the sun or open air is a great mutation in nature, and may induce a change in the feed. Bacon.
MUTE. adj. [mut, French; mutus, Latin.]
1. Silent; not vocal; not having the use of voice.
Why did he reason in my soul implant,
And speech, th' effect of reason? To the mute
My speech is lost; my reason to the brute. Dryden.
Mute solemn sorrow, free from female noise,
Such as the majesty of grief destroys. Dryden.
2. Having nothing to say.
Say she be mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll commend her volubility. Shakespeare.
All fat mute,
Pondering the danger with deep thoughts. Milton.
All the heav'nly choir stood mute,
And silence was in heav'n. Milt. Paradise Lost, l. iii.
The whole perplex'd ignoble crowd,
Mute to my questions, in my praises loud, Echo'd the word. Prior.
MUTE. n. f.
1. One that has no power of speech.
Either our history shall with full mouth
Speak freely of our acts; or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth. Shakef.
Your mute I'll be;
Of heav'n's words, then let mine eyes not see. Shakef.
He that never hears a word spoken, no wonder if he remain speechless; as one mute do, who from an infant should be bred up amongst mute, and have no teaching. Holder.
Let the figures, to which art cannot give a voice, imitate the muties in their actions. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. A letter which without a vowel can make no sound.
Grammarians note the easy pronunciation of a mute before a liquid, which doth not therefore necessarily make the preceding vowel long. Holder's Elements of Speech.
TO MUTE. v. n. [mutir, French.] To dung as birds.
Mine eyes being open, the sparrows mutied warm dung into mine eyes. Tob. ii. 10.
I could not fright the crows,
Or the least bird from muting on my head. Ben. Johnson.
The bird not able to digest the fruit, from her inconverted
muting ariseth this plant. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
MUTELY. adv. [from mute.] Silently; not vocally.
Driving dumb silence from the portal door,
Where he had mutely sat two hours before. Milton.
TO MUTILATE. v. a. [mutiler, Fr. mutilo, Latin.] To deprive of some essential part.
Such fearing to concede a monstrosity, or mutilate the integrity of Adam, preventively conceive the creation of thirteen ribs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Sylburgius justly complains that the place is mutilated. Still.
Among the mutilated poets of antiquity there is none whose fragments are so beautiful as those of Sappho. Addison.
Aristotle's works were corrupted, from Strabo's account of their having been mutilated and consumed with moisture. Baker.
MUTILATION. n. f. [mutilation, Fr. mutilatio, from mutilo, Lat.]
Deprivation of a limb, or any essential part.
The subject had been oppressed by fines, imprisonments, mutilations, pillories, and banishments. Clarendon.
Mutilations are not transmitted from father to son, the blind begetting such as can see: cripples, mutilate in their own persons, do come out perfect in their generations. Brown.
MUTINE. n. f. [mutin, French.] A mutineer; a mover of insurrection. Not in use.
In my heart there was a kind of fighting,
That would not let me sleep; methought I lay Worse than the mutines in the bilboes. Shakef. Hamlet.
Like the mutines of Jerusalem,
Be friends a while. Shakespeare's King John.
MUTINEER. n. f. [from mutin, French.] A mover of sedition; an opposer of lawful authority.
The war of the duke of Urbino, head of the Spanish mutineers, was unjust. Bacon's War with Spain.
Set wide the muti's garden-gate;
For there our mutineers appoint to meet. Dryden.
They have cashiered several of their followers as mutineers, who have contradicted them in political conversations. Addi.
MUTINOUS. adj. [mutin, French.] Seditious; busy in insurrection; turbulent.

M U T

It tauntingly replied
To th' discontented members, th' mutinous parts,
That envied his receipt. Shakef. Coriolanus.
The laws of England should be administered, and the mutinous severely suppressed. Hayward.
Lend me your guards, that if persuasion fail,
Force may against the mutinous prevail. Waller.
My ears are deaf with this impatient crowd;
Their wants are now grown mutinous and loud. Dryden.
MUTINOUSLY. adv. [from mutinous.] Seditiously; turbulently.
A woman, a young woman, a fair woman, was to govern a people in nature mutinously proud, and always before used to hard governors. Sidney.
Men imprudently often, seditiously and mutinously sometimes, employ their zeal for persons. Spratt's Sermon.
MUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from mutinous.] Seditiousness; turbulence.
TO MUTIN. v. n. [mutiner, French.] To rise against authority; to make insurrection; to move sedition.
The spirit of my father begins to mutiny against this ser-vitute. Shakespeare's As you like it.
The people mutiny, the fort is mine,
And all the soldiers to my will incline. Waller.
When Caesar's army mutinied, and grew troublesome, no argument could appease them. South's Sermon.
MUTINY. n. f. [from the verb.] Insurrection; sedition.
The king fled to a strong castle, where he was gathering forces to suppress this mutiny. Sidney.
I th' war
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they shew'd
Most valour, spoke not for them. Shakef. Coriolanus.
In most strange postures We've seen him set himself.
—There is a mutiny in's mind. Shakef. Henry VIII.
Less than if this frame
Of heav'n were falling, and these elements
In mutiny had from her axle torn
The steadfast earth. Milton's Parad. Lost, l. ii.
Soldiers grow pernicious to their master who becomes their servant, and is in danger of their mutinies, as much as any government of seditions. Temple.
TO MUTTER. v. n. [mutire, muttare, Latin.] To grumble;
to murmur.
What would you ask me, that I would deny,
Or stand so mutt'ring on? Shakespeare's Othello.
How! what does his cashier'd worship mutt'? Shakef.
Sky low'd, and mutt'ring thunder some sad drops
Wept, at completing of the mortal sin
Original! Milton's Par. Lost, l. ix.
They may freely trespass, and do as they please; no man dare accuse them, no, not so much as mutter against them.
Burton on Melancholy.
Bold Britons, at a brave bear-garden fray,
Are rous'd; and clatt'ring sticks cry, play, play, play:
Mean time your filthy foreigner will stare,
And mutt'? to himself, ha, gens barbare!
And it is well he mutters, well for him;
Our butchers else would tear him limb from limb. Dryden.
When the tongue of a beautiful female was cut out, it could not forbear muttering. Addison's Spectator.
TO MUTTER. v. a. To utter with imperfect articulation; to grumble forth.
Amongst the soldiers this is mutt'ered,
That here you maintain fev'ral factions. Shakef. Hen. VI.
A kind of men, so loose of soul,
That in their sleep will mutt'? their affairs. Shakef. Othello.
Your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath mutt'ered per-verfenes. Jf. lxx. 2.
A hateful prattling tongue,
That blows up jealousies, and heightens fears,
By muttering poisonous whispers in mens ears. Creech.
MUTTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Murmur; obscure utterance.
Without his rod revers'd,
And backward mutters of dissembling power, Milton.
We cannot free the lady.
MUTTERER. n. f. [from mutt'?] Grumbler; murmurer.
MUTTERINGLY. adv. [from muttering.] With a low voice;
without distinct articulation.
MUTTON. n. f. [mutton, French.]
1. The flesh of sheep dressed for food.
The fat of roasted mutton or beef, falling on the birds, will baste them. Swift's Directions to the Cook.
2. A sheep: now only in ludicrous language.
Here's too small a pasture for such store of muttons. Shak.
The flesh of muttons is better tasted where the sheep feed upon wild thyme and wholesome herbs. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Within a few days were brought out of the country two thousand muttons. Hayward's Edw. VI.
MUTTONIST.

M Y O

MUTTONIST. n. f. [mutton and ist.] A hand large and red.
Will he who saw the soldiers muttonist,
And saw thee maul'd appear within the list
To witness truth. Dryden's Juvenal, sat. 16.
MUTUAL. adj. [mutuel, French; mutuus, Lat.] Reciprocal; each acting in return or correspondence to the other.
Note a wild and wanton herd,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud,
If they perchance but hear a trumpet sound,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
By the sweet power of musick. Shakef. Merch. of Venice.
What should most excite a mutual flame,
Your rural cares and pleasures are the same. Pope.
MUTUALLY. adv. [from mutual.] Reciprocally; in return.
He never bore
Like labour with the rest; where th' other instruments
Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,
And mutually participate. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
Who mutually hath answer'd my affection. Shakespeare.
The tongue and pen mutually assist one another, writing what we speak, and speaking what we write. Holder.
Pelucid substances act upon the rays of light at a distance, in refracting, reflecting and inflecting them, and the rays mutually agitate the parts of those substances at a distance for heating them. Newton's Opticks.
They mutually teach, and are taught, that lesson of vain confidence and security. Asterbury's Sermons.
May I the sacred pleasures know
Of friendship's amity, nor ever want
A friend with whom I mutually may share Gladness and anguish. Philips.
MUTUALITY. n. f. [from mutual.] Reciprocation.
Villanous thoughts, Roderigo! when these mutualities fo marshall the way, hard at hand comes the incorporate conclusion. Shakespeare's Othello.
MUZZLE. n. f. [museau, French.]
1. The mouth of any thing; the mouth of a man in contempt.
But ever and anon turning her muzzle toward me, she threw such a prospect upon me, as might well have given a surfeit to any weak lover's stomach. Sidney, b. ii.
Huygens has proved, that a bullet continuing in the velocity with which it leaves the muzzle of the cannon, would require twenty-five years to pass from us to the sun. Cheyne.
If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with the tongs; if the tongs be not at hand, use the muzzle of the bellows. Swift's Rules to Servants.
2. A fastening for the mouth, which hinders to bite.
The fifth Harry from curbed licence plucks
The muzzle of refrainment; and the wild dog Shall flesh his tooth on ev'ry innocent. Shakef. Henry IV.
Greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair;
With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound. Dryden.
TO MUZZLE. v. n. To bring the mouth near.
The bear muzzles, and smells to him, puts his nose to his mouth and to his ears, and at last leaves him. L'Estrange.
TO MUZZLE. v. a.
1. To bind the mouth.
This butcher's cur is venom mouth'd, and I Have not the pow'r to muzzle him; therefore best Not wake him in his slumber. Shakef. Henry VIII.
My dagger muzzled,
Left it should bite its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous. Shak. Winter's Tale.
The bear, the boar, and every savage name,
Wild in effect, though in appearance tame,
Lay waste thy woods, destroy thy blissful bow'r,
And muzzled though they seem, the mutes devour. Dryden.
Through the town with flow and solemn air,
Led by the nostril, walks the muzzled bear. Gey's Past.
2. To fondle with the mouth close. A low word.
The nurse was then muzzling and coaxing of the child.
L'Estrange's Fables.
My pronoun possessive. [See MINE.] Belonging to me. My is used before a substantive, and mine anciently and properly before a vowel. My is now commonly used indifferently before both. My is used when the substantive follows, and mine when it goes before: as, this is my book; this book is mine.
Her feet lie in my neck doth place.
I conclude my reply with the words of a Christian poet.
Bramhall.
If my soul had free election
To dispose of her affection.
I shall present my reader with a journal. Waller.
MYNCHEN. n. f. [mynchen, Saxon.] A nun. Addison.
MYOGRAPHY. n. f. [μυογραφία.] A description of the muscles.
MYOLOGY. n. f. [myologie, French.] The description and doctrine of the muscles.

M Y S

To instance in all the particulars, were to write a whole system of myology. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.
MYOPY. n. f. Shortness of sight.
MYRIAD. n. f. [μυριάς.]
1. The number of ten thousand.
2. Proverbially any great number.
Assemble thou,
Of all those myriads, which we lead, the chief. Milton.
Are there legions of devils who are continually designing and working our ruin? there are also myriads of good angels who are more cheerful and officious to do us good. Tilleyson.
Safe sits the goddess in her dark retreat;
Around her, myriads of ideas wait,
And endless shapings. Prior.
MYRMIDON. n. f. [μυρμιδών.] Any rude ruffian; so named from the soldiers of Achilles.
The mass of the people will not endure to be governed by Clodius and Curio, at the head of their myrmidons, though these be ever so numerous, and composed of their own representatives. Swift.
MYROBALAN. n. f. [myrobalanus, Latin.] A fruit.
The myrobalans are a dried fruit, of which we have five kinds: they are fleshy, generally with a stone and kernel, having the pulpy part more or less of an austere acid taste:
they are the production of five different trees growing in the East Indies, where they are eaten preserved: they serve also for making and for dressing leather: they have been long in great esteem for their quality of opening the bowels in a gentle manner, and afterwards strengthening them by their astringency; but the present practice rejects them all. Hill.
The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures; for it is sweet, and yet astringent. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 644.
MYROPOLIST. n. f. [μυροπώλη.] One who sells unguents.
MYRRH. n. f. [myrrha, Latin; myrrhe, Fr.] A gum.
Myrrh is a vegetable product of the gum resin kind, sent to us in loose granules from the size of a pepper corn to that of a walnut, of a reddish brown colour, with more or less of an admixture of yellow: its taste is bitter and acrid, with a peculiar aromatick flavour, but very nauseous: its smell is strong, but not disagreeable: it is brought from Ethiopia, but the tree which produces it is wholly unknown. Our myrrh is the very drug known by the ancients under the same name: internally applied it is a powerful resolvent, and externally applied it is discutient and vulnerary. Hill's M. Med.
I dropt in a little honey of roses, with a few drops of tincture of myrrh. Wifeman's Surgery.
MYRRHINE. adj. [myrrhinus, Latin.] Made of the myrrhine stone.
How they quaff in gold,
Crystal and myrrhine cups imboid with gems
And studs of pearl. Milton's Par. Reg. b. iv.
MYRTIFORM. n. f. [myrtus and form.] Having the shape of myrtle.
MYRTLE. n. f. [myrtus, Latin; myrte, Fr.] A fragrant tree sacred to Venus.
The flower of the myrtle consists of several leaves disposed in a circular order, which expand in form of a rose; upon the top of the foot-stalk is the ovary, which has a short star-like cup, divided at the top into five parts, and expanded; the ovary becomes an oblong umbilicated fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.
There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle
Imbroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.
I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the morn dew on the myrtle leaf
To his grand sea. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.
Democritus would have Concord like a fair virgin, holding in one hand a pomegranate, in the other a bundle of myrtle; for such is the nature of these trees, that if they be planted though a good space one from the other, they will meet, and with twining one embrace the other. Peachment.
Nor can the muse the gallant Sidney pass
The plume of war! with early lawrels crown'd,
The lover's myrtle and the poet's bay. Thomson's Summer.
MYSELF. n. f. [my and self.]
1. An emphatical word added to I: as, I myself do it; that is, not I by proxy; not another.
As his host,
Not bear the knife myself. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
2. The reciprocal of I, in the oblique case.
They have missed another pain, against which I should have been at a loss to defend myself. Swift's Examiner.
MYSTAGOGUE. n. f. [μυσταγωγός; mystagogus, Latin.] One who interprets divine mysteries; also one who keeps church relics, and shews them to strangers.
MYSTERIARCH. n. f. [μυστηριάρχης.] One presiding over mysteries.

MYSTERIOUS.

M Y S

MYSTÉRIOUS. adj. [mysterieux, French, from mystery.]
1. Inaccessible to the understanding; awfully obscure.

To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd, Though in mysterious terms. Milton's Par. Lost. b. x.
Then the true Son of knowledge first appear'd,
And the old dark mysterious clouds were clear'd. Denham.
2. Artfully perplexed.
Those princes who were most distinguished for their mysterious skill in government, found, by the event, that they had ill consulted their own quiet, or the happiness of their people. Swift's Thoughts on the State of Affairs.

MYSTÉRIOUSLY. adv. [from mysterious.]
1. In a manner above understanding.

2. Obscurely; enigmatically.
Our duty of preparation contained in this one word, try or examine, being after the manner of mysteries, mysteriously and secretly described, there is reason to believe that there is in it very much duty. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
Each fair mysteriously was meant. Milton.

MYSTÉRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from mysterious.]
1. Holy obscurity.

My purpose is, to gather together into an union all those several portions of truth, and differing apprehensions of mysteriousness. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
2. Artful difficulty or perplexity.

To MYSTÉRISE. v. a. [from mystery.] To explain as enigmas.
Mysterizing their enigmas, they make the particular ones of the twelve tribes accommodable unto the twelve signs of the zodiac. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

MYSTERY. n. f. [μυστήριον; myster, Fr.]

1. Something above human intelligence; something awfully obscure.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Upon holy days, let the matter of your meditations be according to the mystery of the day; and to your ordinary devotions of every day, add the prayer which is fitted to the mystery. Taylor.
If God should please to reveal unto us this great mystery of the trinity, or some other mysteries in our holy religion, we should not be able to understand them, unless he would bestow on us some new faculties of the mind. Swift's Sermon.

2. An enigma; any thing artfully made difficult.
To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter. Shak. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
Important truths still let your fables hold,
And moral mysteries with art unfold. Granville.

3. A trade; a calling: in this sense it should, according to Warburton, be written mystery, from mysteria, French, a trade.
And that which is the noblest mystery,
Brings to reproach and common infamy. Hubbard's Tale.

M Y T

Instruction, manners, mysteries and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakespeare.

MYSTICAL. adj. [mysticus, Latin.]

1. Sacredly obscure.

Let God himself that made me, let not man that knows not himself, be my instructor concerning the mystical way to heaven.
From salvation all flesh being excluded this way, God hath revealed a way mystical and supernatural. Hooker, b. i.
2. Involving some secret meaning; emblematical.

Ye five other wand'ring fires! that move
In mystical dance not without song, refund
His praise, who out of darkness call'd up light. Milton.
It is Christ's body in the sacrament and out of it; but in the sacrament not the natural truth, but the spiritual and mystical. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
It is plain from the Apocalypse, that mystical Babylon is to be consumed by fire. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Obscure; secret.

Left new fears disturb the happy state,
Know, I have search'd the mystical rolls of fate. Dryden.
MYSTICALLY. adv. [from mystical.] In a manner, or by an act, implying some secret meaning.

These two in thy sacred bosom hold,
Till mystically join'd but one they be. Dante.
MYSTICALNESS. n. f. [from mystical.] Involvement of some secret meaning.

MYTHOLOGICAL. adj. [from mythology.] Relating to the explication of fabulous history.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and by tradition stole into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense and morality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MYTHOLOGICALLY. adv. [from mythology.] In a manner suitable to the system of fables.

MYTHOLOGIST. n. f. [from mythology.] A relator or expounder of the ancient fables of the heathens.

The grammarians and mythologists seem to be altogether unacquainted with his writings. Cruch.
It was a celebrated problem among ancient mythologists, What was the strongest thing, what the wisest, and what the greatest? Norris's Miscell.

To MYTHOLOGIZE. v. n. [from mythology.] To relate or explain the fabulous history of the heathens.

MYTHOLOGY. n. f. [μυθολογία and λόγος; mythologia, French.] System of fables; explication of the fabulous history of the gods of the heathen world.

The modesty of mythology deserves to be commended: the scenes there are laid at a distance; it is once upon a time, in the days of yore, and in the land of Utopia. Bentley.

As father of his family, he clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts. Milton, P. Lost.

Ungrateful men,
Behold my bosom naked to your swords;
And let the man that's injur'd strike the blow. Addison.

2. Unarmed; defenceless; unprovided.

Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

3. Plain; evident; not hidden.

The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

4. Mere; bare; wanting the necessary additions; simple; abstracted.

Not that God doth require nothing unto happiness at the hands of men, saving only a naked belief, for hope and charity we may not exclude; but that without belief all other things are as nothing, and it is the ground of those other divine virtues. Hooker, b. i. p. 37.

NAKEDLY. adv.

1. Without covering.

2. Simply; merely; barely; in the abstract.

Though several single letters nakedly considered, are found to be articulations only of spirit or breath, and not of breath vocalized; yet there is that property in all letters of aptness, to be conjoined in syllables. Hilder.

3. Discoverably; evidently.

So blinds the sharpest counsels of the wise
This overshadowing Providence on high,
And dazzleth all their clearest sighted eyes,
That they see not how nakedly they lie. Daniel's Civil War.

NAKEDNESS. n. f. [from naked.]

1. Nudity; want of covering.

My face I'll grime with filth;
And with presented nakedness out-face
The winds and persecutions of the sky. Shak. K. Lear.

Nor he their outward only, with the skins
Of beasts; but inward nakedness, much more Opprobrious! with his robe of righteousness
Arraying, cover'd from his father's sight. Milton.

I entreat my gentle readers to slow o'er their tuckers again, and not to imitate the nakedness, but the innocence of their mother Eve. Addison's Guard. N. 100.

Thou to be strong must put off every dross,
Thy only armour is thy nakedness. Prior.

2. Want of provision for defence.

Spies, to see the nakedness of the land are come. Gen. xlii. 9.

- Naphtha is a very pure, clear, and thin mineral fluid, of a very pale yellow, with a cast of brown in it. It is soft and oily to the touch, of a sharp and unpleasing taste, and of a brisk and penetrating smell; of the bituminous kind. It is extremely ready to take fire, and in places where it is frequent, it exhales a vapour that takes fire at the approach of any flame, and burns to a great distance, sometimes spreading in an instant over half a mile or more of ground, and continuing alight a great while. It is found floating on the waters of fountains. It is principally used externally in para-lytick cases, and in pains of the limbs.
- Hill's Mat. Med.*
- Strabo represents it as a liquation of bitumen. It swims on the top of the water of wells and fountains. That found

NARROWNESS. n. f. [from narrow.]
 1. Want of breadth or wideness.
 In our Gothic cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, or run out in length. Addison on Italy.
 2. Want of extent; want of comprehension.
 That prince, who should be so wise and godlike, as by established laws of liberty to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind, against the oppression of power, and narrowness of party, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke's Works.
 3. Confined state; contractedness.
 The most learned and ingenious society in Europe, confers the narrowness of human attainments. Glauv. Scept.
 Cheap vulgar arts, whose narrowness affords
 No flight for thoughts, but poorly sticks at words. Denham.
 The Latin, a most severe and compendious language, often expresses that in one word, which either the barbarity or the narrowness of modern tongues cannot supply in more. Dryden.
 4. Meanness; poverty.
 If God will fit thee for this passage, by taking off thy load, and emptying thy bags, and so suit the narrowness of thy fortune to the narrowness of the way thou art to pass, is there any thing but mercy in all this? South's Sermons.
 5. Want of capacity.
 Another disposition in men, which makes them improper for philosophical contemplations, is not so much from the narrowness of their spirit and understanding, as because they will not take time to extend them. Burn. Theo. of the Earth.
NAT. [from ne has, or has not.]
 For pity'd is mishap that nas remedy,
 But scorn'd been deeds of fond foolery. Spenser.
NATURAL. adj. [natus, Latin.] Belonging to the nose.
 To pronounce the nasals, and some of the vowels spirally, the throat is brought to labour, and it makes a guttural pronunciation. Holder's Elements of Speech.
 When the discharge lessens, pass a small probe through the nasal duct into the nose every time it is dress'd, in order to dilate it a little. Sharp's Surgery.
NAT'ICORNIOUS. adj. [natus and cornu.] Having the horn on the nose.
 Some unicorns are among insects; as those four kinds of nasicornous beetles described by Muffetus. Brown's V. Err.
NASTY. adj. [nast, nat, German, wet.]
 1. Dirty; filthy; fordid; nauseous; polluted.
 Sir Thomas More, in his answer to Luther, has thrown out the greatest heap of nasty language that perhaps ever was put together. Aubrey.
 A nice man, is a man of nasty ideas. Swift.
 2. Obscene; leud.
NASTILY. adv. [from nasty.]
 1. Dirtily; filthily; nauseously.
 The most pernicious infection next the plague, is the smell of the jail, when prisoners have been long and close and nastily kept. Bacon's Natural History.
 2. Obscenely; grossly.
NASTINESS. n. f. [from nasty.]
 1. Dirt; filth.
 This caused the feditious to remain within their station, which by reason of the nastiness of the beastly multitude, might more fitly be termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward.
 Haughty and huge, as high Dutch bride,
 Such nastiness and so much pride
 Are oddly join'd by fate, Swift.
 2. Obscenity; grossness of ideas.
 Their nastiness, their dull obscene talk and ribaudry, cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any who does not baulk his own reason, out of love to their vice. South.
 A divine might have employed his pains to better purpose, than in the nastiness of Plautus and Aristophanes. Dry.
NATAL. adj. [natal, Fr. natalis, Latin.] Native; relating to nativity.
 Since the time of Henry III. princes children took names from their natal places, as Edward of Carnarvon, Thomas of Brotherton. Camden.
 Propitious star! whose sacred pow'r
 Presided o'er the monarch's natal hour,
 Thy radiant voyages ever run. Prior.
NATATION. n. f. [natio, Latin.] The act of swimming.
 In progressive motion, the arms and legs move successively, but in nation both together. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
NATHELESS. ad. [na, that is, not the less, Saxon.] Nevertheless; formed thus, nathelless, nath'less. Obsolete.
 Nath'less, my brother since we parted are Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Spenser.
 The torrid clime
 Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with fire.
 Nath'less he so endur'd, 'till on the beach
 Of that inflamed sea he stood, and call'd
 His legions. Milton's Paradise Lost.
NATHMORE. adv. [na the more.] Never the more.
 Yet nathmore by his bold hearty speech,

Could his blood-frozen heart embolden'd be. Spenser.
NATION. n. f. [nation, Fr. natio, Latin.] A people distinguished from another people; generally by their language, original, or government.
 If Edward III. had prospered in his French wars, and peopled with English the towns which he won, as he began at Calais driving out the French, his successors holding the same course, would have filled all France with our nation. Rel.
 A nation properly signifies a great number of families derived from the same blood, born in the same country, and living under the same government. Temple.
NATIONAL. adj. [national, Fr. from nation.]
 1. Publick; general; not private; not particular.
 They in their earthly Canaan plac'd,
 Long time shall dwell and prosper: but when sins National interrupt their public peace. Milton's P. Lst.
 Such a national devotion inspires men with sentiments of religious gratitude, and swells their hearts with joy and exultation. Addison's Freeholder, No. 49.
 The astonishing victories our armies have been crowned with, were in some measure the blessings returned upon that national charity which has been so conspicuous. Addison.
 God, in the execution of his judgments, never visits a people with public and general calamities, but where their sins are public and national too. Rogers's Sermons.
 2. Bigotted to one's own country.
NATIONALLY. adv. [from national.] With regard to the nation.
 The term adulterous chiefly relates to the Jews, who being nationally espoused to God by covenant, every sin of theirs was in a peculiar manner spiritual adultery. South.
NATIONALNESS. n. f. [from national.] Reference to the people in general.
NATIVE. adj. [nativus, Latin; natif-ve, Fr.] Produced by nature; natural, not artificial.
 She more sweet than any bird on bough,
 Would oftentimes amongst them bear a part,
 And strive to pass, as she could well enough,
 Their native mulick by her skillful art. Fairy Q. ii.
 This doctrine doth not enter by the ear,
 But of itself is native in the breast. Davies.
 2. Natural; such as is according to nature.
 The members retired to their homes, reassume the native fedateness of their temper. Swift.
 3. Conferred by birth.
 But ours is a privilege ancient and native,
 Hangs not on an ordinance, or power legislative;
 And first, 'tis to speak whatever we please. Denham.
 4. Relating to the birth; pertaining to the time or place of birth.
 If these men have defeated the law, and outrun native punishment; though they can outstrip men they have no wings to fly from God. Shakespeare's Henry V.
 Many of our bodies shall, no doubt,
 Find native graves. Shakespeare's Hen. V.
 5. Original; natural.
 Have I now seen death? is this the way
 I must return to native dust? O fight
 Of terror, foul, and ugly to behold. Milt. Par. Lst.
NATIVE. n. f.
 1. One born in any place; original inhabitant.
 TH' accusation,
 All cause unborn, could never be the native
 Of our so frank donation. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Make no extirpation of the natives, under pretence of planting religion, God surely will no way be pleased with such sacrifices. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
 Tully, the humble mushroom scarcely known,
 The lowly native of a country town. Dryden's Juv.
 There stood a monument to Tacitus the historian, to the emperors Tacitus and Florianus, all natives of the place. Addison on Italy.
 2. Offspring.
NATIVENESS. n. f. [from native.] State of being produced by nature.
NATIVITY. n. f. [nativité, French.]
 1. Birth; issue into life.
 Concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour, in whose birth the births of all are only blessed. Bacon.
 2. Time, place, or manner of birth.
 My husband, and my children both,
 And you the calenders of their nativity,
 Go to a gossip's feast. Shakespeare's Com. of Errors.
 They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Shakespeare's Merry W. of Windsor.
 When I vow, I weep; and vows so born,
 In their nativity all truth appears. Shakespeare's Mid. N. Dream.
 Thy birth and thy nativity is of Canaan. Exek. xvi. 3.
 3. State or place of being produced.
 These, in their dark nativity, the deep Shall yield us, pregnant with infernal flame. Milton.
NATURAL. adj. [naturel, French, from nature.]
 1. Pro-

NAT

1. Produced or effected by nature.
 There is no natural motion of any particular heavy body, which is perpetual, yet it is possible from them to contrive such an artificial revolution as shall constantly be the cause of itself. Wilkins's Dedalus.
 2. Illegitimate.
 This would turn the vein of that we call natural, to that of legal propagation; which has ever been encouraged as the other has been disfavoured by all institutions. Temple.
 3. Bestowed by nature.
 If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem that the advantage lies on the side of children born from noble and wealthy parents. Swift.
 4. Not forced; not faretched; dictated by nature.
 I will now deliver a few of the properest and naturallest considerations that belong to this piece. Wotton's Arch.
 5. Consonant to natural notions.
 Such unnatural connections become, by custom, as natural to the mind as sun and light: fire and warmth go together, and so seem to carry with them as natural an evidence as self-evident truths themselves. Locke.
 6. Tender; affectionate by nature.
 To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
 He wants the natural touch. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 7. Unaffected; according to truth and reality.
 What can be more natural than the circumstances in the behaviour of those women who had lost their husbands on this fatal day. Addison.
 8. Opposed to violent; as, a natural death.
NATURAL. n. f. [from nature.]
 1. An idiot; one whom nature debars from understanding; a fool.
 That a monster should be such a natural. Shakespeare.
 Take the thoughts of one out of that narrow compass he has been all his life confined to, you will find him no more capable of reasoning than a perfect natural. Locke.
 2. Native; original inhabitant.
 The inhabitants and naturals of the place, should be in a state of freedom. Abbot's Description of the World.
 Oppression, in many places, wears the robes of justice, which domineering over the naturals may not spare strangers, and strangers will not endure it. Raleigh's Essays.
 3. Gift of nature; nature; quality.
 The wretchedness are the contempters of all helps; such as presuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they understand not things. Bem. Johnson.
 To consider them in their pure naturals, the earl's intellectual faculties were his stronger part, and the duke, his practical. Wotton.
NATURALIST. n. f. [from natural.] A student in physics, or natural philosophy.
 Admirable artifice! wherewith Galen, tho' a mere naturalist, was so taken, that he could not but adjudge the honour of a hymn to the wife creator. More.
 It is not credible, that the naturalist could be deceived in his account of a place that lay in the neighbourhood of Rome. Addison on Italy.
NATURALIZATION. n. f. [from naturalize.] The act of investing aliens with the privileges of native subjects.
 The Spartans were nice in point of naturalization; where-by, while they kept their camps, they stood firm; but when they did spread, they became a windfall. Bacon's Essay.
 Encouragement may be given to any merchants that shall come over and turn a certain stock of their own, as naturalization, and freedom from customs the two first years. Temple.
 Enemies, by taking advantage of the general naturalization act, invited over foreigners of all religions. Swift.
 To NATURALIZE. v. a. [from natural.]
 1. To adopt into a community; to invest with the privileges of native subjects.
 The great lords informed the king, that the Irish might not be naturalized without damage to themselves or the crown. Davies on Ireland.
 2. To make natural; to make easy like things natural.
 He rises fresh to his hammer and anvil; custom has naturalized his labour to him. South's Sermons.
NATURALLY. adv. [from natural.]
 1. According to the power or impulses of unassisted nature.
 Our sovereign good is desired naturally; God, the author of that natural desire, hath appointed natural means whereby to fulfill it; but man having utterly disabled his nature unto these means, hath had other revealed, and hath received from heaven a law to teach him, how that which is desired naturally, must now supernaturally be attained. Hooker.
 If sense be not certain in the reports it makes of things to the mind, there can be naturally no such thing as certainty or knowledge. South's Sermon.
 2. According to nature; without affectation.
 That part
 Was aptly fitted, and naturally perform'd. Shakespeare.
 This answers fitly and naturally to the place of the abyss before the deluge, inclos'd within the vault of the earth. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

 The thoughts are to be measured only by their propriety; that is, as they flow more or less naturally from the persons and occasions. Dryden.
 3. Spontaneously.
NATURALNESS. n. f. [from natural.]
 1. The state of being given or produced by nature.
 The naturalness of a desire, is the cause that the satisfaction of it is pleasure, and pleasure importunes the will; and that which importunes the will, puts a difficulty on the will refusing or forbearing it. South's Sermon.
 2. Conformity to truth and reality; not affectation.
 He must understand what is contained in the temperament of the eyes, in the naturalness of the eyebrows. Dryden.
 Horace speaks of these parts in an ode that may be reckoned among the finest for the naturalness of the thought, and the beauty of the expression. Addison.
NATURE. n. f. [natura, Latin; nature, French.]
 1. An imaginary being supposed to preside over the material and animal world.
 Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law
 My services are bound. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
 When it was said to Anaxagoras, the Athenians have condemned you to die; he said again, and nature them. Bacon.
 Let the postilion nature mount, and let
 The coachman art be set. Cowley.
 Heav'n bellows
 At home all riches that wife nature needs. Cowley.
 Simple nature to his hope has giv'n,
 Beyond the cloud-topp'd hill an humbler heav'n. Pope.
 2. The native state or properties of any thing, by which it is discriminated from others.
 Between the animal and rational province, some animals have a dark resemblance of the influxes of reason: so between the corporeal and intellectual world, there is man participating much of both natures. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.
 3. The constitution of an animated body.
Nature, as it grows again tow'rd earth,
 Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy. Shakespeare.
 We're not ourselves,
 When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
 To suffer with the body. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 4. Disposition of mind; temper.
 Nothing could have subdu'd nature
 To such a lowliness but his unkind daughters. Shakespeare.
 A credulous father, and a brother noble,
 Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
 That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
 My practices ride easy. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 5. The regular course of things.
 My end
 Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence. Shakespeare.
 6. The compass of natural existence.
 If their dam may be judge, the young apes are the most beautiful things in nature. Glauv.
 7. Natural affection, or reverence; native sensations.
 Have we not seen
 The murd'ring son ascend his parent's bed,
 Thro' violated nature force his way,
 And stain the sacred womb where once he lay? Pope.
 8. The state or operation of the material world.
 He binding nature fast in fate,
 Left conscience free and will. Pope.
 9. Sort; species.
 A dispute of this nature caused mischief in abundance betwixt a king and an archbishop. Dryden.
 10. Sentiments or images adapted to nature, or conformable to truth and reality.
 Only nature can please those tastes which are unprejudiced and refined. Addison.
Nature and Homer were he found the same. Pope.
 11. Physics; the science which teaches the qualities of things.
Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night,
 God said, let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.
NATURALITY. n. f. [from nature.] The state of being produced by nature. A word not used.
 This cannot be allowed, except we impute that unto the first cause which we impose not on the second; or what we deny unto nature we impute unto naturity. Brown's V. Err.
NATAL. adj. [natal, Fr. natalis, Latin.]
 1. Consisting of ships.
 Encamping on the main,
 Our naval army had besieged Spain;
 They that the whole world's monarchy design'd,
 Are to their ports by our bold fleet confin'd.
 As our high vessels pass their watry way,
 Let all the naval world due homage pay. Prior.
 2. Belonging to ships.
 Masters of such numbers of strong and valiant men, as well

NAV

well as of all the naval stores that furnish the world. Temple.
NAVE. n. f. [nap, Saxon.]
 1. The middle part of the wheel in which the axle moves.
 Out, out, thou strumpet fortune! all you gods
 In general synod take away her power;
 Break all the spokes and felines from her wheel,
 And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n,
 As low as to the fiends. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 In the wheels of waggons the hollows of the naves, by their swift rotations on the ends of the axle-trees, produce a heat sometimes so intense as to set them on fire. Ray.
 2. [From navis, nave, old Fr.] The middle part of the church distinct from the aisles or wings.
 It comprehends the nave or body of the church, together with the chancel. Ayliffe's Par.
NAVEL. n. f. [navela, navela, Saxon.]
 1. The point in the middle of the belly, by which embryos communicate with the parent.
 The use of the navel is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
 As children, while within the womb they live,
 Feed by the navel: here they feed not so. Davies.
 There is a superintending Providence, that some animals will hunt for the teat before they are quite gotten out of the secundines and parted from the navelstring. Derham.
 2. The middle; the interior part.
 Being prest to the war,
 Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
 They would not thread the gates. Shakespeare's Cor.
 Within the navel of this hideous wood,
 Immur'd in cypres shades, a forcerer dwells. Milton.
NAVELGALL. n. f.
Navelgall is a bruise on the top of the chine of the back, behind the saddle, right against the navel, occasioned either by the saddle being split behind, or the stuffing being wanting, or by the crupper buckle fitting down in that place, or some hard weight or knobs lying directly behind the saddle.
NAVELWORT. n. f.
 It hath the appearance of housebeck; from which it differs only in having an oblong tubulous flower of one leaf, divided at the top into five parts. This plant is used in medicine, and grows wild upon old walls. Miller.
NAVEW. n. f. [napus, Lat. navet, navet, Fr.]
 It agrees in most respects with the turnep; but has a lesser root, and somewhat warmer in taste. The species are three. In the Isle of Ely the third species, which is wild, is very much cultivated, it being the cole seed from which they draw the oil. Miller.
NAUGHT. adj. [naht, naphht, Saxon; that is, ne aught, not any thing.] Bad; corrupt; worthless.
 With them that are able to put a difference between things naught and things indifferent in the church of Rome, we are yet at controversy about the manner of removing that which is naught. Hooker, b. iv.
 Thy fitter's naught: Oh Regan! she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness like a vulture here. Shakespeare.
NAUGHT. n. f. Nothing. This is commonly, though improperly, written naught. See AUGHT and UGHT.
 Be you contented
 To have a son set your decrees at naught,
 To pluck down justice from your awful bench. Shakespeare.
NAUGHTILY. adv. [from naughty.] Wickedly; corruptly.
NAUGHTINESS. n. f. [from naughty.] Wickedness; badness.
 Slight wickedness or perversity, as of children.
 No remembrance of naughtiness delights but mine own;
 and methinks the accusing his traps might in some manner excuse my fault, which certainly I loth to do. Sidney, b. ii.
NAUGHTY. adj. [See NAUGHT.]
 1. Bad; wicked; corrupt.
 A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father. Sidney, b. ii.
 These naughty times
 Put bars between the owners and their rights. Shakespeare.
 How far that little candle throws his beams!
 So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shakespeare.
 2. It is now seldom used but in ludicrous censure.
 If gentle flumbers on thy temples creep,
 But naughty man, thou dost not mean to sleep,
 Betake thee to thy bed. Dryden.
NAVICULAR. adj. [navicularis, Lat. naviculaire, Fr.] In anatomy, the third bone in each foot that lies between the astragalus and ossa cuneiformia. Diét.
NAVIGABLE. adj. [navigable, Fr. navigabilis, Latin.] Capable of being passed by ships or boats.
 The first-peopled cities were all founded upon these na- vigable rivers, or their branches, by which the one might give succour to the other. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 Almighty Jove surveys
 Earth, air, and shores, and navigable seas. Dryden.

NAU

NAVIGABLENESS. n. f. [from navigable.] Capacity to be passed in vessels.
NAVIGATE. v. n. [navigo, Lat. naviger, Fr.] To sail;
 to pass by water.
 The Phenicians navigated to the extremities of the western ocean. Arbutnot on Cais.
NAVIGATE. v. a. To pass by ships or boats.
 Drusus, the father of the emperor Claudius, was the first who navigated the northern ocean. Arbutnot on Cais.
NAVIGATION. n. f. [navigation, Fr. from navigare.]
 1. The act or practice of passing by water.
 Our shipping for number, strength, mariners, pilots, and all things that appertain to navigation, is as great as ever.
Bacon.
 The loadstone is that great help to navigation.
 Rude as their ships, was navigation then,
 No useful compass or meridian known;
 Coasting, they kept the land within their ken,
 And knew no north but when the polestar shone. Dryden.
 When Pliny names the Pœni as inventors of navigation, it must be understood of the Phenicians, from whom the Carthaginians are descended. Arbutnot on Cais.
 2. Vessels of navigation.
 Tho' you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches, tho' the yesty waves
 Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakespeare's Mac.
NAVIGATOR. n. f. [navigateur, Fr. from navigare.] Sailor;
 seaman; traveller by water.
 By the founding of navigators, that sea is not three hundred and sixty foot deep. Brown's V. Err.
 The rules of navigators must often fail. Brown's V. Err.
 The contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds, tides, and the sight of the heavens. Watkin's Mach. Magie.
 This terrestrial globe, which before was only a globe in speculation, has since been surrounded by the boldness of many navigators. Temple.
NAVLAGE. n. f. [navium, Lat.] The freight of passengers in a ship.
NAUMACHY. n. f. [naumachie, Fr. naumachia, Latin.] A mock sea fight.
TO NAUSEATE. v. n. [from nausen, Latin.] To grow squeamish; to turn away with disgust.
 Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and nauseate, and grow tired of a particular subject before you have finished it. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.
TO NAUSEATE. v. a.
 1. To loath; to reject with disgust.
 While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems arbitrary; for many are cryed up in one age, which are decayed and nauseated in another. Brown's V. Err.
 Old age, with silent pace, comes creeping on,
Nauseates the praise, which in her youth she won,
 And hates the muse by which she was undone. Dryden.
 Those heads, as stomachs, are not free the best,
 Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest. Pope.
 2. To strike with disgust.
 He let go his hold and turned from her, as if he were nauseated, then gave her a lash with his tail. Swift.
NAUSEOUS. adj. [from nausea, Latin; nauseos, Fr.] Loath-some; disgusting; regarded with abhorrence.
 Those trifles wherein children take delight,
 Grow nauseous to the young man's appetite.
 And from those gaieties our youth requires
 To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.
 Food of a wholesome juice is pleasant to the taste and agreeable to the stomach, 'till hunger and thirst be well appeased, and then it begins to be less pleasant, and at last even nauseous and loathsome. Ray.
 Old thread-bare phrases will often make you go out of your way to find and apply them, and are nauseous to rational hearers. Swift.
NAUSEOUSLY. adv. [from nauseous.] Loathsome; disgustfully.
 This, though cunningly concealed, as well knowing how nau- seously that drug would go down in a lawful monarchy, which was prescribed for a rebellious commonwealth, yet they always kept in reserve. Dryden.
 Their satire's praise;
 So nauseously and so unlike they paint. Garth's Disp.
NAUSEOUSNESS. n. f. [from nauseous.] Loathfomeness; quesality of raising disgust.
 The nauseousness of such company disgusts a reasonable man, when he sees he can hardly approach greatness but as a moated castle; he must first pass through the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden's Aurengzeib.
NAUTICAL. adj. [nauticus, Latin.] Pertaining to sailors.
NAUTICK. adj. [nauticus, Latin.] Pertaining to sailors.
 He elegantly shewed by whom he was drawn, which de-painted the nautical compass with aut magnæ, aut magna. Can- NAUTILUS. n. f. [Latin; nautilus, Fr.] A shell fish furnished with something analogous to oars and a sail. Leau.

NEA

Learn of the little nautilus to sail,
 Spread the thin oar and catch the driving gale. Pope.
NAVY. n. f. [from navis, Lat.] An assembly of ships, commonly ships of war; a fleet.
 On the western coast rideth a puissant navy. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
 Levy money, and return the fame to the treasurer of the navy for his majesty's use. Clarendon.
 The narrow seas can scarce their navy bear;
 Or crowded vessels can their soldiers hold. Dryden.
NAV. adv. [na, Saxon, or ne eye.]
 1. No; an adverb of negation.
 Disputes in wrangling spend the day,
 Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nav. Denham.
 2. Not only so but more. A word of amplification.
 A good man always profits by his endeavour, yea, when he is absent; nav, when dead, by his example and memory;
 so good authors in their stile. Ben. Johnson's Discov.
 This is then the ally of Ovid's writings, which is sufficiently recompensed by his other excellencies; nav, this very fault is not without its beauties; for the most severe censor cannot but be pleased. Dryden.
 If a son should strike his father, not only the criminal but his whole family would be rooted out, nav, the inhabitants of the place where he lived, would be put to the sword, nav, the place itself would be razed. Addis. Spect. N<sup>o</sup>. 189.
 3. Word of refusal.
 They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out, privily? nav verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out. Acts xvi. 37.
 The fox made several excuses, but the flock would not be laid nav; so that at last he promised him to come. L'Estrange's Fable 31.
 He that will not when he may,
 When he would he shall have nav. Prov.
NAVWORD. n. f. [nav and word.]
 1. The side of denial; the saying nav.
 You would believe my saying,
 Howe'er you lean to th' navword. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
 2. A proverbial reproach; a bye word.
 If I do not gull him into a navword, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
 3. A watchword. Not in use.
 I have spoke with her; and we have a navword how to know one another. I come to her in white, and cry mum; and she cries budget; and by that we know one another. Shakespeare.
NE. adv. [Saxon.] This particle was formerly of very frequent use, both singly and by contraction in compound words; as, nav for ne will or will not; nav for ne has or has not; nav for ne is or is not. Neither; and not.
 His warlike shield all cover'd closely was,
 Ne might of mortal eye be ever seen,
 Not made of steel, nor of enduring brass. Fairy Qu.
NEAP. n. f. [neap, Islandick.] A fift. It is retained in Scotland; and in the plural neaves.
 Give me thy neap, Monsieur Mustardseed. Shakespeare.
TO NEAL. v. a. [neal, Saxon; neal, to kindle.] To temper by a gradual and regulated heat.
 The workmen let it cool by degrees in such relents of fire, as they call their nealing heats; lest it should shiver in pieces by a violent succeeding of air in the room of fire.
 This did happen for want of the glasses being gradually cooled or nealed. Digby on Bodies.
 If you file, engrave, or punch upon your steel, neal it first, because it will make it softer, and consequently work easier. The common way is to give it a blood-red heat in the fire, then let it cool of itself. Maxon's Mech. Exer.
TO NEAL. v. n. To be tempered in fire.
 Reduction is chiefly effected by fire, wherein if they stand and neal, the imperfect metals vapour away. Bacon.
NEAP. adj. [neep, Saxon; neap, poor.] Low; decre-scent. Used only of the tide, and therefore sometimes used substantively.
 The mother of waters, the great deep, hath lost nothing of her ancient bounds. Her motion of ebbing and flowing, of high springs and dead neaps, are as constant as the changes of the moon. Hakewill on Providence.
 How doth the sea constantly observe its ebbs and flows, its springs and neap-tides, and still retain its saltness, so convenient for the maintenance of its inhabitants. Ray.
NEAR. prep. [nep, Saxon; naer, Dutch and Scottish.] At no great distance from; close to; nigh.
 I have heard thee say,
 No grief did ever come so near thy heart,
 As when thy lady and thy true love died. Shakespeare.
 Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give,
 As one near death to those that with him live. Shakespeare.
 With blood the dear alliance shall be bought,
 And both the people near destruction brought. Dryden.

 of man, barely by his shape. Locke.
NEAR. adv.
 1. Almost.
 2. At hand; not far off. Unless it be rather in this sense an adjective.
 Thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins. Jer. xii. 2.
 He serv'd great Hector, and was ever near. Dryden's Æn.
 Not with his trumpet only, but his spear.
 3. Within a little.
 Self-pleasing and humourous minds are so sensible of every restraint, as they will go near to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Bacon's Essays, N<sup>o</sup>. 8.
 This eagle shall go near, one time or other, to take you for a hare. L'Estrange's Fable 107.
 He that paid a bushel of wheat per acre, would pay now about twenty-five pounds per annum; which would be near about the yearly value of the land. Locke.
 The Castilian would rather have died in slavery himself, than paid such a sum as he found would go near to ruin him.
Addison's Spectator.
NEAR. adj.
 1. Not distant. [Sometimes it is doubtful whether near be an adjective or adverb.]
 This city is near to flee unto. Gen. xix. 20.
 The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.
 After he has continued his doubling in his thoughts, and enlarged his idea as much as he pleases, he is not one jot nearer the end of such addition than at first setting out. Locke.
 2. Advanced towards the end of an enterprise or disquisition.
 Unless they add somewhat else to define more certainly what ceremonies shall stand for best, in such sort that all churches in the world shall know them to be the best, and so know them that there may not remain any question about this point; we are not a whit the nearer for that they have hitherto said. Hooker, b. iv. f. 13.
 3. Close; not rambling; observant of stile or manner of the thing copied.
 Hannibal Caro's, in the Italian, is the nearest, the most poetical, and the most sonorous of any translation of the Æneid. Yet though he takes the advantage of blank verse, he commonly allows two lines for one in Virgil, and does not always hit his sense. Dryden.
 4. Closely related.
 If one shall approach to any that is near of kin to him. Lev. xviii. 6.
 5. Intimate; familiar; admitted to confidence.
 If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakespeare.

 of that which is under deliberation, hath overturned the opinion of the possibility or impossibility. Bacon's Holy War.
NEARLY. adv. [from near.]
 1. At no great distance; not remotely.
 Many are the enemies of the priesthood: they are diligent to observe whatever may *near*ly or remotely blemish it. Atterbury.
 2. Closely; pressing.
Nearly it now concerns us, to be sure
 Of our omnipotence. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
 It concerneth them *near*ly, to preserve that government which they had trusted with their money. Swift's Miscel.
 3. In a niggardly manner.
NEARNESS. n. f. [from near.]
 1. Closeness; not remoteness; approach.
 God, by reason of nearness, forbade them to be like the Canaanites or Egyptians. Hooker, b. iv. f. 6.
 Fine and delicate sculptures be helped with nearness, and grots with distance; which was well seen in the controversy between Phidias and Alemeas about the statue of Venus.
Watson's Architecture.
 Those blessed spirits that are in such a nearness to God, may well be all fire and love, but you at such a distance cannot find the effects of it. Dryden.
 The best rule is to be guided by the nearness, or distance at which the repetitions are placed in the original. Pope.
 2. Alliance of blood or affection.
 Whether there be any secret passages of sympathy between persons of near blood; as, parents, children, brothers and sisters. There be many reports in history, that upon the

2. [In Scotland.] The bill of a bird. See NIB.

NEBULA. n. f. [Lat.] It is applied to appearances, like a cloud in the human body; as also to films upon the eyes.

NEBULOUS. adj. [nebulosus, Latin.] Misty; cloudy.

NECESSARIES. n. f. [from necessity.] Things not only convenient but needful; things not to be left out of daily use.

Quibus delectat natura negatis.

The supernatural necessities are, the preventing, assisting, and renewing grace of God, which we suppose God ready to annex to the revelation of his will, in the hearts of all that with obedient humble spirits receive and sincerely embrace it. Hannond's Fundamentals.

The right a son has, to be maintained and provided with the necessities and conveniences of life, out of his father's stock, gives him a right to succeed to his father's property for his own good. Locke.

NECESSARILY. adv. [from necessity.]

1. Indispensably.

I would know by some special instance, what one article of Christian faith, or what duty required necessarily unto all mens salvation there is, which the very reading of the word of God is not apt to notify. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

2. By inevitable consequence.

They who recall the church unto that which was at the first, must necessarily set bounds and limits unto their speeches.

NEC

They subjected God to the fatal chain of causes, whereas they should have resolved the necessity of all inferior events into the free determination of God himself; who executes necessarily, that which he first proposed freely. South's Sermon.

NECESSARINESS. n. f. [from necessity.] The state of being necessary.

NECESSARY. adj. [necessarius, Latin.]

1. Needful; indispensably requisite.

All greatness is in virtue underflood;
'Tis only necessary to be good. Dryden's Aureng.

A certain kind of temper is necessary to the pleasure and quiet of our minds, consequently to our happiness; and that is holiness and goodness. Tilston.

No man can shew by any necessary argument, that it is naturally impossible that all the relations concerning America should be false. Tilston's Progress.

TO NECESSITATE. v. a. [from necessitas, Latin.] To make necessary; not to leave free; to exempt from choice.

Hast thou proudly ascribed the good thou hast done to thy own strength, or imputed thy fins and follies to the necessitating and inevitable decrees of God. Duppa's Rules for Dea.

The marquis of Newcastle being pressed on both sides, was necessitated to draw all his army into York. Clarend.

Man seduced,
And flatter'd out of all, believing lies Against his maker: no decree of mine Concurring to necessitate his fall. Milton's Par. Lost.

Our voluntary service he requires,
Not our necessitated. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Neither the Divine Providence, or his determinations, persuasions, or inflexions of the understanding, or will of rational creatures doth deceive the understanding, or pervert the will, or necessitate or incline either to any moral evil. Hale's Origin of Morals.

The politician never thought that he might fall dangerously sick, and that sickness necessitate his removal from the court. South's Sermon.

Th' eternal, when he did the world create
And other agents did necessitate;
So what he order'd they by nature do;
Thus light things mount, and heavy downward go,
Man only boasts an arbitrary state. Dryden.

The perfections of any person may create our veneration; his power, our fear; and his authority arising thence, a servile and necessitated obedience; but love can be produced only by kindness. Rogers.

NECESSITATION. n. f. [from necessitate.] The act of making necessary; fatal compulsion.

This necessity, grounded upon the necessitation of a man's will without his will, is so far from lessening those difficulties which flow from the fatal destiny of the Stoicks, that it increaseth them. Bramhall against Hobbs.

Where the law makes a certain heir, there is a necessitation to one; where the law doth not name a certain heir, there is no necessitation to one, and there they have power or liberty to choose. Bramhall against Hobbs.

NECESSITATED. adj. [from necessity.] In a state of want. Not used.

This ring was mine, and when I gave it Helen,
I bad her, if her fortunes ever stood Necessitated to help, that by this token
I would relieve her. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

NECESSITOUS. adj. [from necessity.] Pressed with poverty.

They who were envied, found no satisfaction in what they were envied for, being poor and necessitous. Clarend.

There are multitudes of necessitous heirs and penurious parents, parsons in pinching circumstances, with numerous families of children. Arbutnot.

Racine used the chorus in his Esther, but not that he found any necessity of it: it was only to give the ladies an occasion of entertaining the king with vocal musick. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

We see the necessity of an augmentation, to bring the enemy to reason. Addison.

3. Want; need; poverty.

The art of our necessities is strange,
That can make vile things precious. Shakef. K. Lear.

The cause of all the distractions in his court or army, proceeded from the extreme poverty, and necessity his majesty was in. Clarendon, b. viii.

We are first to consult our own necessities, but then the necessities of our neighbours have a christian right to a part of what we have to spare. L'Estrange, Fable 217.

4. Things necessary for human life.

These should be hours for necessities,
Not for delights; times to repair our nature
With comforting repose, and not for us To waste these times. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

5. Cogency of argument; inevitable consequence.

There never was a man of solid understanding, whose apprehensions are lober, and by a penive inspection advised, but that he hath found by an irresistible necessity, one true God and everlasting being. Raleigh's History.

Good nature or beneficence and candour, is the product of right reason, which of necessity will give allowance to the failings of others. Dryden.

NECK. n. f. [pneca, Saxon; neck, Dutch.]

Are in the poorest thing superfluous;
Allow not nature more than nature needs.
Man's life is cheap as beasts. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

The whole need not a physician, but the sick. Matt ix. 12.

Thou thy regal sceptre shalt lay by,
For regal sceptre then no more shall need. Milt. P. Lost.

To ask whether the will has freedom? is to ask, whether one power has another? A question too absurd to need an answer. Locke.

TO NEED. v. n.

1. To be wanted; to be necessary.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me me whiles the famous ancestors
Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount. Spenser.

When we have done it, we have done all that is in our power, and all that needs. Locke.

2. To have necessity of any thing; to be in want of any thing.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep: but how incoherent and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being, those who are acquainted with dreams need not be told. Locke.

He that would discourse of things, as they agreed in the complex idea of extension and solidity, needed but use the word body. Locke.

NEEDER. n. f. [from need.] One that wants any thing.

If the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world, to seek a single man;
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
In th' absence of the needer. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

NEEDFUL. adj. [need and full.] Necessary; indispensably requisite.

Give us all things that be needful, both for our souls and bodies. Common Prayer.

Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
As needful in our loves, fitting our duty? Sha. Ham.

1. The business of a sempstress.

2. Embroidery by the needle.

In needlework and embroideries, it is more pleasing to have a lively work upon a lightsome ground, than a dark and melancholy work upon a lightsome ground. Bacon.

In a curious brede of needlework, one colour falls away by such just degrees, and another rises so insensibly, that we see the variety without being able to distinguish the total vanishing of the one from the first appearance of the other.

Addison's Ess. on the Georgicks.

NEEDLESLY. adv. [from needle.] Unnecessarily; without need.

We render languages more difficult to be learnt, and need- lessly advance orthography into a troublesome art. Holder.

NEEDLESSNESS. n. f. [from needless.] Unnecessariness.

To explain any of St. Paul's Epistles, after to great a train of expositors, might seem censurable for its needlessness, did not the daily examples of pious and learned men justify
it. Locke's Ess. on St. Paul's Epistles.

NEEDLESS. adj. [from need.]

1. Unnecessary; not requisite.

Their exception against calumny, as if that did nourish ignorance, proceedeth altogether of a needless jealousy. Hook.

I have affairs below,

Which I must needs dispatch before I go. Dryden.

NEEDY. adj. [from need.] Poor; necessitous; distressed by poverty.

Their gates to all were open evermore,

And one fat waiting ever them before,

To call in comers by, that needy were and poor. Fa. 2.

— In his needy shop a tortoise hung,

NEG

An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

The poor and needy praise thy name. Pf. lxxiv. 21.

We bring into the world a poor needy uncertain life, short at the longest, and unquiet at the best. Temple.

Nuptials of form, of int'rest, or of state,

Those seeds of pride are fruitful in debate:

Let happy men for gen'rous love declare,

And chafe the needy virgin, chafe and fair. Grav.

To relieve the needy, and comfort the afflicted, are duties that fall in our way every day. Addison's Spect. No. 93.

NE'ER. [for never.]

It appears I am no horse,

That I can argue and discourse;

Have but two legs, and ne'er a tail. Hudibras.

To NE'ESS. v. n. [nefs, Danish; nisen, Dutch.] To neglect;

to discharge functionalities by the nose. Retained in Scotland.

He went up and stretched himself upon him; and the child nefs seven times, and opened his eyes. 2 Kings iv. 35.

By his nefs a light doth shine, and his eyes are like the eye-lids of the morning. Job xli. 18.

NEF. n. f. [old French, from nave.] The body of a church.

The church of St. Justina, designed by Palladio, is the most handsome, luminous, disencumbered building in Italy.

The long nef consists of a row of five cupola's, the cross one has on each side a single cupola deeper than the others.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.

NEFARIOUS. adj. [nefarius, Latin.] Wicked; abominable.

The most nefarius bastards, are they whom the law styles

incestuous bastards, which are begotten between ascendans and descendans, and between collateral, as far as the divine prohibition extends. Ayliffe's Parergon.

NEGATION. n. f. [negatio, Lat. negation, Fr.]

1. Denial; the contrary to affirmation.

Chance properly signifies, that all events called casual,

among inanimate bodies, are mechanically and naturally produced according to the determinate figures, textures, and motions of those bodies, with this only negation, that those inanimate bodies are not conscious of their own operations.

Bentley.

Our assertions and negations should be yes and no, for whatsoever is more than these is fin. Rogers, Ser. 9.

2. Description by negative.

Negation is the absence of that which does not naturally belong to the thing we are speaking of, or which has no right, obligation, or necessity to be present with it; as when we say a stone is inanimate, or blind, or deaf. Watt's Logic.

NE'GATIVE. adj. [negativus, Fr. negativus, Latin.]

1. Denying; contrary to affirmative.

2. Implying only the absence of something.

There is another way of denying Christ with our mouths, which is negative, when we do not acknowledge and confess him. South's Sermon.

Consider the necessary connection that is between the ne- gative and positive part of our duty. Tillotson, Ser. 1.

3. Having the power to withhold, though not to compel.

Denying me any power of a negative voice as king, they are not ashamed to seek to deprive me of the liberty of using my reason with a good conscience. King Charles.

NE'GATIVE. n. f.

1. A proposition by which something is denied.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty; and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved.

Tillotson, Ser. 1.

2. A particle of denial; as, not.

A purer substance is defin'd,

But by an heap of negatives combin'd;

Ask what a spirit is, you'll hear them cry,

It hath no matter, no mortality. Cleaveland's Poem.

NE'GATIVELY. adv. [from negative.]

1. With denial; in the form of denial; not affirmatively.

When I asked him whether he had not drunk at all? he answered negatively. Boyle.

2. In form of speech implying the absence of something.

The fathers draw arguments from the Scripture negatively in reproof of that which is evil; Scriptures teach it not, avoid it therefore. Hooker, b. ii.

I shall shew what this image of God in man is, negatively, by shewing wherein it does not consist; and positively, by shewing wherein it does. South's Ser.

To NE'GLECT. v. a. [neglectus, Latin.]

1. To omit by carelessness.

If he neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church.

Mat. xviii. 17.

2. To treat with scornful heedlessness.

3. To postpone.

I have been long a sleeper; but I trust

My absence doth neglect no great design,

Which by my presence might have been concluded. Sha.

NE'GLECT. n. f. [neglectus, Latin.]

1. Instance of inattention.

2. Careless treatment; scornful inattention.

I have

NEG

I have perceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence or purpose of unkindness. Shakesf. King Lear.

3. Negligence; frequency of neglect.

Age breeds neglect in all, and actions

Remote in time, like objects

Remote in place, are not beheld at half their greatness. Denham.

4. State of being unregarded.

Rescue my poor remains from vile neglect,

With virgin honours let my herse be deck'd,

And decent emblem. Prior.

NEGLECTER. n. f. [from neglect.] One who neglects.

NEGLECTFUL. adj. [neglect and full.]

NE'GLECTS. careless; inattentive.

Moral ideas not offering themselves to the senses, but being to be framed to the understandings, people are neglectful of a faculty they are apt to think wants nothing. Locke.

Though the Romans had no great genius for trade, yet they were not entirely neglectful of it. Arbut. on Cairns.

2. Treating with indifference.

If the father cares them when they do well, shew a cold and neglectful countenance to them upon doing ill, it will make them sensible of the difference. Locke on Education.

NEGLECTION. n. f. [from neglect.] The state of being negligent.

NEGLECTFULLY. adv. [from neglectful.] With heedless in-attention; careless indifference.

Sleeping neglection doth betray to loss

The conquests of our scarce cold conqueror. Shakesf.

NEGLECTIVE. adj. [from neglect.] Inattentive, or regardless of.

I wanted not probabilities sufficient to raise jealousies in any king's heart, not wholly stupid, and neglective of the publick peace. King Charles.

NE'GLIGENCE. n. f. [negligence, Fr. negligentia, Latin.]

1. Habit of omitting by heedlessness, or of acting carelessly.

2. Instance of neglect.

She let it drop by negligence,

And, to th'advantage, I being here, took't up. Shakesf.

NE'GLIGENT. adj. [negligent, Fr. negligent, Latin.]

1. Careless; heedless; habitually inattentive.

My sons, be not now negligent; for the Lord hath chosen you to stand before him. 2 Chron. xxix. 11.

2. Careless of any particular.

We have been negligent in not hearing his voice. Bar. i. 19.

3. Scornfully regardless.

Let stubborn pride possess thee long,

And be thou negligent of fame;

With every muse to grace thy song,

May'st thou despise a poet's name. Swift's Miscel.

NE'GLIGENTLY. adv. [from negligent.]

1. Carelessly; heedlessly; without exactness.

Insects have voluntary motion, and therefore imagination; and whereas some of the ancients have said that their motion is indeterminate, and their imagination indefinite, it is negligently observed; for ants go right forwards to their hills, and bees know the way to their hives. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Of all our elder plays,

This and Philaster have the loudest fame;

Great are their faults, and glorious is their fame.

In both our English genius is express'd,

Lofty and bold, but negligently dress'd. Waller.

In comely figure rang'd my jewels shone,

Or negligently plac'd for thee alone. Prior.

2. With scornful inattention.

To NEGO'TIATE. v. n. [negotior, French; from negotium, Latin.] To have intercourse of business; to traffick; to treat.

Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

She was a busy negotiating woman, and in her withdrawing chamber had the fortunate conspiracy for the king against king Richard been hatched. Bacon

NER

NEITHER. pronoun. Not either; nor one nor other.

He neither loves,
Nor either cares for him. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleo.
Which of them shall I take?
Both, one, or neither? neither can be enjoy'd
If both remain alive. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
Suffice it that he's dead; all wrongs die with him:
Thus I absolve myself, and excuse him,
Who sav'd my life and honour, but praise neither. Dryd.
Experience makes us sensible of both, though our narrow understandings can comprehend neither. Locke.
They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren, neither lord, neither slave to his brother; but independent of each other. Locke.

NEOPHYTE. n. f. [neophyte, Fr. neû; and φύω.] One regenerated; a convert.

NEOTERIC. adj. [neotericus, Latin.] Modern; novel; late.

NEP. n. f. [nepeta, Lat.] An herb.

NEPENTHE. n. f. [νεπέθη and πενή.] A drug that drives away all pains.

There where no passion, pride, or shame transport,
Lull'd with the sweet neptis of a court;
There where no fathers, brothers, friends disgrace,
Once break their rest nor stir them from their place. Pope.

NEPHEW. n. f. [nepos, Latin; neveu, French.]

1. The son of a brother or sister.
Immortal offspring of my brother Jove;
My brightest nephew and whom best I love. Dryden.
I ask, whether in the inheriting of this paternal power, the grandson by a daughter, hath a right before a nephew by a brother? Locke.

2. The grandson. Out of use.
With what intent they were first published, those words of the nephew of Jesus do plainly enough signify, after that my grand-father Jesus had given himself to the reading of the law and the prophets, and other books of our fathers, and had gotten therein sufficient judgment, he propos'd also to write something pertaining to learning and wisdom.

Hooker, b. v. f. 21.

Her fire at length is kind,
Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas. Dryden.

3. Descendant, however distant. Out of use.

All the sons of these five brethren reign'd
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents the crown retain'd. Fairy Q.

NEPHRETIC. adj. [νεφρετικός; nephretique, Fr.]

1. Belonging to the organs of urine.

2. Troubled with the stone.

The diet of nephritic persons ought to be such as is opposite to the alkaliescent nature of the salts in their blood.

Arbutinet on Aliments.

3. Good against the stone.

The nephritic stone is commonly of an uniform dusky green;
but some samples I have seen of it that are variegated with white, black, and sometimes yellow. Woodw. Mett. Foss.

NEPOTISM. n. f. [nepotisme, French; nepos, Latin.] Fondness for nephews.

To this humour of nepotism Rome owes its present splendor; for it would have been impossible to have furnished out so many glorious palaces with such a profusion of pictures and statues, had not the riches of the people fallen into different families. Addison on Italy.

NERVE. n. f. [nervus, Latin; nerf, Fr.] The organs of sensation passing from the brain to all parts of the body.

The nerves do ordinarily accompany the arteries through all the body; they have also blood-vessels, as the other parts of the body. Wherever any nerve sends out a branch, or receives one from another, or where two nerves join together, there is generally a ganglion or plexus. Quincy.

What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nervus Shall never tremble. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. It is used by the poets for finew or tendon.

Strong Tharymed discharged a speeding blow
Full on his neck, and cut the nervus in two. Pope's Odyss.

NEVELESS. adj. [from nerve.] Without strength.

There sunk Thalia, nerveless, faint and dead,
Had not her sister Satire held her head. Dunciad, b. iv.

NEV. adj. [nervosus, Latin.] Well strung; strong; vigorous.

What nervous arms he boasts, how firm his tread,
His limbs how turn'd. Pope's Odyss., b. viii.

2. Relating to the nerves; having the seat in the nerves.

3. [In medical cant.] Having weak or diseased nerves.

Poor, weak, nervous creatures. Cheney.

NEVY. adj. [from nerve.] Strong; vigorous. Not in use.

Death, that dark spirit, in his nerve arm doth lie,
Which being advanc'd, declines, and then men die. Sta.

NESCIENCE. n. f. [from nescio, Latin.] Ignorance; the state of not knowing.

Many of the most accomplished wits of all ages, have resolved their knowledge into Socrates his sum total, and after all their pains in quest of science, have sat down in a professed nescience. Clav. Sect. c. ii.

NESH. adj. [neyc, Saxon.] Soft; tender; easily hurt. Stin.

NESS.

1. A termination added to an adjective to change it into a substantive, denoting state or quality; as, poisonous, poisonousness;
turbid, turbidness; lovely, loveliness; from neyc, Saxon.

2. The termination of many names of places where there is a headland or promontory; from neyc, Saxon; a neyc of land, or headland; as INVERNESS.

NEST. n. f. [neyc, Saxon.]

1. The bed formed by the bird for incubation and feeding her young.

If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way, thou shalt not take the dam with the young. Dent. xxii. 6.

2. Any place where animals are produced.

Redi found that all kinds of putrefaction did only afford a nest and aliment for the eggs and young of those insects he admitted. Bentley.

3. An abode; place of residence; a receptacle. Generally in a bad sense: as, a nest of rogues and thieves.

Come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep. Shakspeare.

4. A warm close habitation, generally in contempt.

Some of our ministers having livings offered unto them, will neither, for zeal of religion, nor winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests. Spenser.

5. Boxes or drawers; little pockets or conveniences.

To NEST. v. n. [from the noun.] To build nests.

The cedar stretched his branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and the king of birds nest within his leaves. Howel's Vocal Fowl.

NESTEGG. n. f. [neyc and egg.] An egg left in the nest to keep the hen from forsaking it.

Books and money laid for them;
Like nesteggs, to make clients lay. Hudibras.

To NESTLE. v. n. [from nest.] To settle; to harbour; to lie close and snug, as a bird in her nest.

Their purpose was, to fortify in some strong place of the wild country, and there nestle till greater fucours came.

A cock got into a stable was nestling in the straw among the horfes. L'Estrange.

The king's fisher wons commonly by the water-side, and nestles in hollow banks. L'Estrange.

Flurting there they nestle near the throne,
And lodge in habitations not their own. Dryden.

The floor is strowed with several plants, amongst which the finials nestle all the winter. Addison on Italy.

Mark where the fly directors creep,
Nor to the shore approach too nigh;
The monsters nestle in the deep,
To seize you in your passing by. Swift's Miscel.

To NESTLE. v. a.

1. To house, as in a nest.

Poor heart!
That labour't yet to nestle thee,
Thou think'st by hov'ring here to get a part,
In a forbidden or forbidding tree. Donne.

Cupid found a downy bed,
And nestl'd in his little head. Prior.

2. To cherish, as a bird her young.

This Ithacus, so highly is endear'd
To this Minerva, that her hand is ever in his deeds:
She, like his mother, nestles him. Chapman's Iliad.

NESTLING. n. f. [from nestle.] A bird just taken out of the nest.

NET. n. f. [nati, Gothick; net, Saxon.] A texture woven with large interstices or meshes, used commonly as a snare for animals.

Poor bird! should'st never fear the net, nor lime,
The pitfall nor the gin. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He made nets of chequer-work for the chapters, upon the top of the pillars. 1 Kings vii. 17.

Impatience intangles us like the fluttering of a bird in a net, but cannot at all ease our trouble. Taylor's Holy Living.

The vegetative tribes,
Wrapt in a filmy net, and clad with leaves. Thomson.

NETHER. adj. [neocer, Saxon; neder, Dutch.] It has the form of a comparative, but is never used in expressed, but only in implied comparison; for we see the nether part, but never say this part is nether than that, nor is any positive in use, though it seems comprised in the word beneath. Nether is not now much in use. No

1. Lower; not upper.

NET

NEV

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge; for he taketh a man's life to pledge. Dent. xxiv. 6.
In his picture are two principal errors, the one in the complexion and hair, the other in the mouth, which commonly they draw with a full and nether great lip. Peacham.

This odious offspring,
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
Tore through my entrails; that with fear and pain
Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew Transform'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

The upper part thereof was whey, Hudibras, p. i.

The nether, orange mix'd with grey.

A beauteous maid above, but magic arts,
With barking dogs deform'd her nether parts. Reformam.

As if great Atlas from his height
Should sink beneath his heav'nly weight,
And with a mighty flaw, the flaming wall Should gape immense, and ruining down o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Two poles turn round the globe;
The first sublime in heaven, the last is whirl'd
Below the regions of the nether world. Dryden.

2. Being in a lower place.

This shews you are above,
You justices, that these our nether crimes,
So speedily can venge. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Numbetlets were those bad angels, teen
How ring on wing under the cope of hell,
Twixt upper, nethers, and surrounding fires. Milton.

3. Infernal; belonging to the regions below.

No less desire
To found this nether empire, which might rise,
In emulation, opposite to heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.

The gods with hate beheld the nether sky, Dryden's Æn.

The ghoul's repine.

NE'ITHERMOST. n. f. [super, of nether.] Lowest.

Great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the nethermost hell. Psalms lxxviii. 13.

Undaunted to meet there whatever pow'r,
Or spirit, of the nethermost abyss
Might in that noise reside. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

All that can be said of a liar lodged in the very nethermost hell, is this, that if the vengeance of God could prepare any place worse than hell for sinners, hell itself would be too good for him. South's Sermons.

Heracles tells us, that the eclipse of the sun was after the manner of a boat, when the concave, as to our sight, appears uppermost, and the convex nethermost. Kailaga, Bur.

NE'TTING. n. f. A reticulated piece of work.

NE'TTLE. n. f. [netel, Saxon.] A stinging herb well known.

It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many stamina included in an envelopment; but these are barren; for the embryos are produced either on different plants, or on different parts of the same plant, without any visible flower, which becomes a bivalve seed-vessel, sometimes gathered into round heads, and at other times small and hairy, inclosing several seeds. Miller.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholsem berries thrive and ripen best, Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Some so like to thorns and nettles live,
That none for them can, when they perish, grieve. Waller.

To NE'TTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To sting; to irritate;
to provoke.

The princes were so nettled at the scandal of this affront, that every man took it to himself. L'Estrange.

Although at every part of the Apostles discourse some of them might be uneasily nettled, yet a moderate silence and attention was still observed. Bentley.

NE'TWORK. n. f. [net and work.] Any thing reticulated or decussated, at equal distances, with interstices between the intersections.

Nor any skill'd in workmanship emboss'd;
Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring fine;
Might in their dexter cunning ever dare,
With this so curious network to compare. Spenser.

A large cavity in the fuciput was filled with ribbons, lace, and embroidery, wrought together in a curious piece of network. Addison's Spectator.

NE'VER. adv. [ne ever, ne ever, Saxon; ne æper, not ever.]

1. At no time.

2. It is used in a form of speech handed down by the best writers, but lately accused, I think, with justice, of solec-ism; as, he is mistaken though never so wise. It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expressed thus, he is mistaken though ever so wise; that is, he is mistaken how wise soever he be. The common mode can only be defended by supplying a very harsh and unprecedented ellipsis; *he is mis-

By its own force destroy'd, fruition ceas'd,
And always weary'd, I was never pleas'd. Prior.

NE'VER. adv. [ne ever, ne ever, Saxon; ne æper, not ever.]

1. At no time.

2. It is used in a form of speech handed down by the best writers, but lately accused, I think, with justice, of solec-ism; as, he is mistaken though never so wise. It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expressed thus, he is mistaken though ever so wise; that is, he is mistaken how wise soever he be. The common mode can only be defended by supplying a very harsh and unprecedented ellipsis; he is mistaken though so wise, as never was any: such however is the common use of the word among the best authors.

By its own force destroy'd, fruition ceas'd,
And always weary'd, I was never pleas'd. Prior.

NEU

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man.

Congrave's Way of the World.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say. Gen. xxxiv. 12.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body, instantly make a transfusion throughout the whole body. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

They destroyed all, were it never so pleasant, within a mile of the town. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, would not be brought to see that which he had no mind to see, let it be placed in never so clear a light, and never so near him.

That prince whom you espouse, although never so vigorously, is the principal in war, you but a second. Swift.

3. In no degree.

Whoever has a faithful friend to guide him, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.

NEU'TRAL. adj. [neutral, French.]

- Indifferent; not acting; not engaged on either side.
Who can be wife, amaz'd, temperate and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man. Shakespeare.
He no sooner heard that king Henry was settled by his victory, but forthwith he sent ambassadors unto him, to pray that he would stand neutral. Bacon's Hen. VII.
The allies may be supplied for money, from Denmark and other neutral states. Addison on the War.

- Indifferent; neither good nor bad.
Some things good, and some things ill do seem,
And neutral some, in her fantastic eye. Davies.

- Neither acid nor alkaline.
Salts which are neither acid nor alkaline, are called neutral. Arbutnot.

NEU'TRAL. n. f. One who does not act nor engage on either side.The treacherous who have misled others, and the neutrals and the false-hearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, are to be noted. *Bacon.*NEUTRALITY. n. f. [neutralité, French.]

- A state of indifference; of neither friendship nor hostility.
Men who possess a state of neutrality in times of public danger, desert the common interest of their fellow-subjects. Addison.

The king, late griefs revolving in his mind,
These reasons for neutrality assign'd. Garth's Ovid.
All pretences to neutrality are justly exploded, only intending the safety and ease of a few individuals, while the public is embroiled. This was the opinion and practice of the latter Cato. Swift.

- A state between good and evil.
There is no health: physicians say, that we
At best enjoy but a neutrality. Denne.

NEUTRALLY. adv. [from neutral.] Indifferently; on neither part.NEW. adj. [newyd, Welsh; neop, Saxon; neuf, Fr.]

- Not old; fresh; lately produced, made or had; novel. It is used of things: as, young of persons.
What's the newest grief?
—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
Each minute teems a new one. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Do not all men complain how little we know, and how much is still unknown? And can we ever know more, unless something new be discovered? Burnet.

- Modern; of the present time.
Whoever converses much among old books, will be something hard to please among new. Temple's Miscellanies.

- Not antiquated; having the effect of novelty.
There names inscrib'd unnumber'd ages past,
From time's first birth, with time itself shall last;
These ever new, nor subject to decays,
Spread and grow brighter with the length of days. Pope.

- Not habituated; not familiar.
Such assemblies, though had for religion's sake, may serve the turn of heretics, and such as privily will infiltr their poison into new minds. Hooker, b. v.

- Renovated; repaired, so as to recover the first state.
Men after long emaciating diets, wax plump, fat, and almost
new. Bacon's Natural History.

- Fresh after any thing.
Nor dare we trust to soft a messenger,
New from her sickness to that northern air. Dryden.

- Not of ancient extraction.
A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive knowledge, are steps by which a new man often mounts to favour, and outlines the rest of his contemporaries. Addison.

- New. adv. This is, I think, only used in composition for newly, which the following examples may explain.
As soon as she had written them, a new swarm of thoughts finging her mind, she was ready with her foot to give the new-born letters both to death and burial. Sidney, b. ii.
God hath not then left this to chafe that, neither would reject that to chafe this, were it not for some new-grown occasion, making that which hath been better worse. Hooker.
So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grafs,
As for great joyance of his new-come guest. Fairy 2.
Who are the violets now
That strow the green lap of the new-come spring. Shakef.
Your master's lines
Are full of new-found oaths; which he will break
As easily as I do tear this paper. Shakespeare.
Will you with those infirmities the owes,
Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,

- Not of ancient extraction.
A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive

As soon as she had written them, a new swarm of thoughts
finging her mind, she was ready with her foot to give the new-born letters both to death and burial. Sidney, b. ii.
God hath not then left this to chafe that, neither would reject that to chafe this, were it not for some new-grown occasion, making that which hath been better worse. Hooker.
So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grafs,
As for great joyance of his new-come guest. Fairy 2.
Who are the violets now
That strow the green lap of the new-come spring. Shakef.
Your master's lines
Are full of new-found oaths; which he will break
As easily as I do tear this paper. Shakespeare.
Will you with those infirmities the owes,
Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,

- Not of ancient extraction.

Take her or leave her?

Left by a multitude *Shakespeare's King Lear.*The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out. *Shak.*Bow, stubborn knees; and heart with strings of steel *Shak.*Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe. *Shakel. Ham.*Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
And I a gasping, new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd. *Shak. R. II.*I am in parliament pledge for his truth,
And lasting fealty to the new-made king. *Shak. R. II.*He saw heav'n blossom with a new-born light,
On which, as on a glorious stranger gaz'd
The golden eyes of night; whose beams made bright
The way to Beth'lem, and as boldly blaz'd;
Nor ask'd leave of the sun, by day as night. *Crashaw.*I've seen the morning's lovely ray Hover o'er the new-born day;
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night,
When a ruddy storm, whose fcol
Made heaven's radiant face look foul, Call'd for an untimely night
To blot the newly blossom'd light. *Crashaw.*Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves together fow'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts; that this new-come flame,
There sit not, and reproach us as unclean. *Milt. P. Lof.*Their father's state,
And new-entrusted sceptre. *Milton's Poems.*The new-created world, which fame in heav'n Long had foretold. *Milton's Paradise Lof.*His evil

Winneft this new-made world, another heav'n. *Milton.*All clad in liveliest colours, fresh and fair
As the bright flowers that crown'd their brighter hair;
All in that new-blown age which does inspire Warmth in themselves, in their beholders fire. *Cowley.*While from above adorn'd with radiant light, A new-born fun surpris'd the dazzled fight. *Rofconmon.*If it could, yet that it should always run them into such a machine as is already extant, and not often into some new-fashioned one, such as was never before, no reason can be assigned or imagined. *Ray on the Creation.*This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a

They gaze at rich revenues which you hold,
And fain would nibble at your grandame gold.
But if you would be nibbling, here is a hand to stay your stomach. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Plunging himself in mud, and then lifting up his head a little, he casts out the said string; which the little fishes taking for a worm, and nibbling at it, he immediately plucks them both in together. Grew's Museum.
2. To carp at; to find fault with.
Instead of returning a full answer to my book, he manifestly falls a nibbling at one single passage in it. Tillot. Pref.
NIBBLER. n. f. [from nibble.] One that bites by little at a time.
NICE. adj. [nece, Saxon, soft.]
1. Accurate in judgment to minute exactness; superfluously exact. It is often used to express a culpable delicacy.
Such a man was Argalus, as hardly the nice eye can find a spot in. Sidney.
He that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up. Sh. K. John.
Nor be so nice in taste myself to know,
If what I swallow be a thrush or no. Dryd. Persus.
Thus critics, of less judgment than caprice,
Curious, not knowing, not exact, but nice,
Form short ideas, and offend in arts,
As most in manners, by a love to parts. Pope on Crit.
Our author, happy in a judge so nice,
Produc'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice. Pope.
2. Delicate; scrupulously and minutely cautious.
The letter was not nice, but full of charge
Of dear import. Shakes. Romeo and Juliet.
Dear love! continue nice and chaste;
For if you yield, you do me wrong;
Let duller wits to love's end haste,
I have enough to woo thee long. Donne.
Of honour men at first like women nice,
Raise maiden scruples at unpractis'd vice. E. Hallifax.
Having been compiled by Gratian, in an ignorant age, we ought not to be too nice in examining it. Baker
3. Fastidious; squeamish.
God hath here
Varied his bounty so with new delights,
As may compare with heaven; and to taste,
Think not I shall be nice. Milt. Par. Lost.
4. Easily injured; delicate.
With how much ease is a young muse betray'd?
How nice the reputation of the maid? Roscommon.
5. Formed with minute exactness.
Indulge me but in love, my other passions Shall rise and fall by virtue's nice rules. Addison's Cato.
6. Requiring scrupulous exactness.
Supposing an injury done, it is a nice point to proportion the reparation to the degree of the indignity. L'Estrange.
My progress in making this nice and troublesome experiment, I have set down more at large. Newton's Opt.
7. Refined.
A nice and subtle happiness I see Thou to thyself proposest, in the choice
Of thy associates, Adam; and wilt taste
No pleasure, tho' in pleasure solitary. Milt. P. Lost.
8. Having lucky hits. This signification is not in use.
When my hours
Were nice and lucky, men did ransom lives
Of me for jests. Shakes. Ant. and Cleopatra.
NICELY. adv. [from nice.]
1. Accurately; minutely; scrupulously.
These kind of knaves in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silky ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
What mean those ladies which, as tho'
They were to take a clock to pieces, go
So nicely about the bride? Donne.
He ought to study the grammar of his own tongue, that he may understand his own country-speech nicely, and speak it properly. Locke.
The next thing of which the doles ought to be nicely determined, are opiates. Arbutnot on Coins.
At nicely carving shew thy wit;
But ne'er presume to eat a bit. Swift's Miscell.
2. Delicately.
The inconveniences attending the best of governments, we quickly feel, and are nicely sensible of the share that we bear in them. Atterbury.
NICESS. n. f. [from nice.]
1. Accuracy; minute exactness.
Where's now that labour'd niceness in thy dress,
And all those arts that did the spark express. Dryden.
2. Superfluous delicacy or exactness.
A strange niceness were it in me to refrain that from the ears of a person representing so much worthiness, which I am glad even to rocks and woods to utter. Sidney.

NIC

Unlike the niceness of our modern dames,
Affected nymphs, with new affected names. Dryden.
Nor place them where Roast crabs offend the niceness of their nose. Dryden.
NICEITY. n. f. [from nice.]
1. Minute accuracy of thought.
Nor was this nicety of his judgment confined only to literature, but was the same in all other parts of art. Prior.
2. Accurate performance.
As for the workmanship of the old Roman pillars, the ancients have not kept to the nicety of proportion and the rules of art so much as the moderns. Addison on Italy.
3. Fastidious delicacy; squeamishness.
He them with speeches meet
Does fair intreat; no courting nicety,
But simple true, and eke unfeigned sweet. Fairy Q.
So love doth loath disdainful nicety. Shesj.
4. Minute observation; punctilious discrimination; subtlety.
If reputation attend these conquests, which depend on the fineness and niceties of words, it is no wonder if the wit of men so employed, should perplex and subtilize the signification of sounds. Locke.
His conclusions are not built upon any niceties, or solitary and uncommon appearances, but on the most simple and obvious circumstances of these terrestrial bodies. Woods.
5. Delicate management; cautious treatment.
Love such nicety requires,
One blast will put out all his fires. Swift's Poem.
6. Effeminate softness.
7. Niceties, in the plural, is generally applied to dainties or delicacies in eating.
NICHAR. n. f.
The characters are: it hath a polypetalous or a monopetalous flower, cut very deeply into several segments, but is almost of an anomalous figure; from whose calyx arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a pod, beset all over with prickles, in which are contained one or two round hard seeds.
NICH. n. f. [French.] A hollow in which a statue may be placed.
Niches, containing figures of white stone or marble, should not be coloured in their concavity too black. Wotton.
They not from temples, nor from gods refrain,
But the poor lares from the niches seize,
If they be little images that please. Dryden.
On the fourth a long majestic race
Of Egypt's priests, the gilded niches grace. Pope.
The heirs to titles and large estates are well enough qualified to read pamphlets against religion and high-living; whereby they fill their niches, and carry themselves through the world with that dignity which best becomes a senator and a squire. Swift's Miscellany.
NICK. n. f. [nick, Teutonic, the twinkling of an eye.]
1. Exact point of time at which there is necessity or convenience.
That great instrument of state had foreknowledge of it, but suffered the fatal thread to be spun out to that length for some political respects, and then to cut it off in the very nick. Howell's Vocal Parody.
What in our watches that in us is found,
So to the height and nick we up be wound,
No matter by what hand or trick. Suckling.
That trick,
Had it come in the nick,
Had touch'd us to the quick. Denham.
Though dame fortune seem to smile,
And leer upon him for a while;
She'll after shew him in the nick. Hudibras, p. i. cont. 3.
Of all his glories a dog trick.
And some with symbols, signs, and tricks,
Engraved in planetary nicks,
With their own influences will fetch them Down from their orbs, arrest and catch them. Hud.
This nick of time is the critical occasion for the gain of
of a point. L'Estrange.
2. A notch cut in any thing. [Corrupted from neck or notch.]
3. A score; a reckoning.
Launce his man told me, he lov'd her art of all nick. Shak.
4. A winning throw. [nick, Fr. a ludicrous trick.]
Come, seven's the main,
Cries Ganymede; the usual trick
Seven, slur a fix, eleven a nick. Prior.
To NICK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To hit; to touch luckily; to perform by some slight artifice used at the lucky moment.
Is not the winding up of witness
A nicking more than half the business? Hudibras, p. ii.
The just season of doing things must be nick'd, and all accidents improved. L'Estrange, Fable 38.
Take away passion while it is predominant and adroit, and just in the critical height of it, nick it with some lucky or unlucky word, and you may certainly over-rule it. South.
2. To cut in nicks or notches. HIS

NIG

His beard they have fing'd off with brands of fire;
And ever as it blaz'd they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair.
My master preaches patience, and the while His man with scallars nicks him like a fool. Shakespeare.
Breaks watchmen's heads, and chairmen's glances,
And thence proceeds to nicking fishes. Prior.
3. To suit, as tallies cut in nicks.
Words nicking and resembling one another, are applicable to different significations. Candem's Remains.
4. To defeat or cozen, as at dice; to disappoint by some trick or unexpected turn.
Why should he follow you?
The itch of his affection should not then Have nick'd his captainship, at such a point. Shakespeare.
NICKNAME. n. f. [nom de nique, French.] A name given in scorn or contempt; a term of derision; an opprobrious or contemptuous appellation.
The time was when men were had in price for learning;
now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname. Ben. Johnson.
My mortal enemy hath not only fallily furnished me to be a feigned person, giving me nicknames, but also hath offered large sums of money to corrupt the princes with whom I have been retained. Bacon's Hen. VII.
So long as her tongue was at liberty, there was not a word to be got from her, but the same nicknames in derision.
L'Estrange.
To NICKNAME. v. a. To call by an opprobrious appellation.
You nickname virtue vice;
For virtue's office never breaks men's troth. Shakes.
Let's seem these facts which treasons nickname force,
Than such a fear'd ability for more. Denham.
To NICKATE. v. a. [nick, Latin.] To wink.
There are several parts peculiar to brutes, which are wanting in man; as the seventh or suspensory muscle of the eye, the nictating membrane, and the strong aponeuroses on the sides of the neck. Roy.
NIDE. n. f. [nidus, Lat.] A brood; as, a nide of pheasants.
NIDGET. n. f. [corrupted from nibing or niding.] The opprobrious term with which the man was anciently branded who refused to come to the royal standard in times of exigency. A coward; a dastard.
There was one true English word of greater force than them all, now out of all use; it signified no more than abject, base-minded, false-hearted, coward, or nidget. Candem.
NIDIFICATION. n. f. [nidificatio, Latin.] The act of building nests.
That place, and that method of nidification, doth abundantly answer the creature's occasions. Derham.
NIDING. adj. [from nide, Saxon, vileness.]
Niding, an old English word signifying abject, base-minded, false-hearted, coward, or nidget. Carver.
NIDOROUS. adj. [nidoreus, from nidor.] Resembling the smell or taste of roasted fat.
Inense and nidorous smells, such as of sacrifices, were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion; which they may do by a kind of contritification of the spirits, and partly also by heating and exalting them. Bac.
The signs of the functions of the stomach being depraved, are cruciations either with the taste of the aliment, acid, nidoreus, or fætid, resembling the taste of rotten eggs.
NIDOROSITY. n. f. [from nidorous.] Eructation with the taste of undigested roast-meat.
The cure of this nidoreus is, by vomiting and purging.
NIDULATION. n. f. [nidulatio, Latin.] The time of remaining in the nest.
The ground of this popular practice might be the common opinion concerning the virtue prognostic of these birds, the natural regard they have unto the winds, and they unto them again, more especially remarkable in the time of their nidulation, and bringing forth their young. Brown's P. Err.
NIECE. n. f. [niece, French; neptis, Latin.] The daughter of a brother or sister.
My niece Plantagenet,
Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloster. Sh. R. III.
While he thus his niece bestows,
About our life he builds a wall.
NIGGARD. n. f. [nigger, Islandick.] A miser; a curmudgeon; a fard, avaricious, parsimonious fellow.
If thou do, then let thy bed be turned from fine gravel to weeds or mud. If thou do, let some unjust niggards make wrecks to spoil thy beauty. Sidney, b. ii.
Be not a niggard of your speech. Shakes. Macbeth.
Serve him as a grudging master,
As a penurious niggard of his wealth.
Be niggards of advice on no pretence;
For the worst avarice is that of sense. Milton's Poems.
NIGGARD. adj. Pope on Crit.
1. Sordid; avaricious; parsimonious.

NIG

One she found
With all the gifts of bounteous nature crown'd,
Of gentle blood; but one whose niggard fate
Had fet him far below her high estate. Dryden.
2. Sparing; wary.
Most free of question, but to our demands
Niggard in his reply. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
To NIGGARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To stint.
The deep of night is crept upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity;
Which we will niggard with a little rest. Shakespeare.
NIGGARDISH. adj. [from niggard.] Having some disposition to avarice.
NIGGARDLINESS. n. f. [from niggardly.] Avarice; sordid parsimony.
Niggardliness is not good husbandry, nor generosity, profusion. Addison's Spectator, N. 443.
NIGGARDLY. adj. [from niggard.]
1. Avaricious; sordidly parsimonious.
Where the owner of the house will be bountiful, it is not for the steward to be niggardly. Hall.
Love is like a penurious god, very niggardly of his opportunities: he must be watched like a hard-hearted treasurer.
Dryden's Spanish Prior.
Why are we to niggardly to stop at one fifth? Why do we not raise it one full moiety, and thereby double our money?
Locke.
Providence not niggardly but wise,
Here lavishly bestows, and there denies,
That by each other's virtues we may rise. Granvil.
Tiberius was noted for his niggardly temper; he used only to give to his attendants their diet. Arbutnot on Coins.
2. Sparing; wary.
I know your mind, and I will satisfy it; neither will I do it like a niggardly answerer, going no farther than the bounds of the question. Sidney.
NIGGARDLY. adv. Sparingly; parsimoniously.
I have long loved her, followed her, ingross'd opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion that could but niggardly give me sight of her. Shakes. M. W. of Windsor.
NIGGARDNESS. n. f. [from niggard.] Avarice; sordid parsimony.
All preparations, both for food and lodging, such as would make one detect niggardness, it is so flutish a vice. Sidney.
NIGH. prep. [nyp, Saxon.] At no great distance from.
They shone
Stars distant, but nigh hand seem'd other worlds. Milton.
Nigh this recess, with terror they survey,
Where death maintains his dread tyrannic sway. Garth.
NIGH. adv.
1. Not at a great distance.
The day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand. Jo. ii. 1.
He was sick nigh unto death. Phil. ii. 27.
2. To a place near.
He drew nigh, and to me held,
Ev'n to my mouth, of that same fruit held part
Which he had pluck'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
I will defer that anxious thought,
And death, by fear, shall not be nigher brought. Dryd.
NIGH. adj.
1. Near; not distant; not remote.
The loud tumult shews the battle nigh. Prior.
2. Allied closely by blood.
He committed the protection of his son Afanes to two of his nigh kinsmen and assured friends. Kestles.
His uncle or uncle's son, or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family, may redeem him. Lev. xxv. 49.
His sister a virgin, that is nigh unto him. Lev. xxi. 3.
To NIGH. v. n. [from the participle.] To approach; to advance; to draw near.
Now day is done, and night is nighing fast. Hubbard.
NIGHLY. adv. [from nigh the adjective.] Nearly; within a little.
A man born blind, now adult, was taught by his touch to distinguish between a cube and a sphere of the same metal, and nighly of the same bigness. Locke.
NIGHNESS. n. f. [from nigh.] Nearness; proximity.
NIGHT. n. f. [nauts, Gothick; nyxt, Saxon; nuit, Fr.]
1. The time of darkness; the time from sun-set to sun-rise.
The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here this night. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
In the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night divide the spoil. Gen. xix. 27.
Pharaoh rose up in the night. Exodus xii. 30.
They did eat and drink, and tarried all night. Gen. xxiv. 54.
Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn;
And they waken with that light,
Whose day shall never sleep in night. Cassano.

Dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryd.
2. It is much used in composition.
To-NIGHT. adverbially. In this night; at this night.
There came men in hither to-night of the children of Israel, to search out the country. Jos. ii. 2.
NIGHTERAWLER. n. f. [night and bravaler.] One who raises disturbances in the night.
You unlace your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a night-bravaler. Shaksp. Othello.
NIGHTCAP. n. f. [night and cap.] A cap worn in bed, or in undress.
The rabblement houted, and clapt their chopt hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps. Shaksp. Jul. Caesar.
Great mountains have a perception of the disposition of the air to tempests sooner than the vallies below; and therefore they say in Wales, when certain hills have their night-caps on, they mean mischief. Bacon's Nat. History.
How did the humbled swain detect
His prickly beard, and hairy breast!
His night-cap border'd round with lace,
Could give no softness to his face. Swift's Poems.
NIGHTCROW. n. f. [night and crow.] A bird that cries in the night.
The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;
The night-crow cry'd, a boding luckless time. Shaksp.
NIGHTDEW. n. f. [night and dew.] Dew that wets the ground in the night.
All things are hush'd, as nature's self lay dead,
The mountains seem to nod their drowsy head;
The little birds in dreams their songs repeat,
And sleeping flowers beneath the night-dew sweat;
E'en lust and envy sleep. Dryden's Ind. Emperor.
NIGHTDOG. n. f. [night and dog.] A dog that hunts in the night. Used by deer-stealers.
When night-dogs run, all sorts of deer are chased. Sha.
NIGHTDRESS. n. f. [night and dress.] The dress worn at night.
The fair ones feel such maladies as these,
When each new night-dress gives a new disease. Pope.
NIGHTED. adj. [from night.] Darkened; clouded; black.
It was great ignorance, Gloucester's eyes being out,
To let him live: Edmund, I think, is gone;
In pity of his misery to dispatch
His nighted life. Shaksp. King Lear.
Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off,
And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark. Sha.
NIGHTFARING. n. f. [night and fare.] Travelling in the night.
Will-a-Wisp misleads night-faring clowns,
O'er hills, and sinking bogs, and pathless downs. Gay.
NIGHTFIRE. n. f. [night and fire.] Ignis futuus; Will-a-Wisp.
Foolish night-fires, womens and childrens wishes,
Chafes in arras, gilded emptiness;
These are the pleasures here. Herbert.
NIGHTFLY. n. f. [night and fly.] Moth that flies in the night.
Why rather, sleep, lie thou in smoaky cribs,
And hush't with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfume'd chambers of the great,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shaksp. Lear.
NIGHTFOUNDERED. n. f. [from night and founder.] Loff or distressed in the night.
Either some one like us night-foundered here,
Or else some neighbour woodman, or at worst,
Some roving robber calling to his fellows. Milton.
NIGHTGOWN. n. f. [night and gown.] A loose gown used for an undress.
Since his majesty went into the field,
I have seen her rise from her bed, throw
Her night-gown upon her. Shaksp. Macbeth.
They have put me in a silk night-gown, and a gaudy fool's cap. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 113.
No meagre muse-rid mope, adult and thin,
In a dun night-gown of his own loose skin. Pope's Dunci.
NIGHTHAG. n. f. [night and bag.] Witch supposed to wander in the night.
Nor uglier follows the night-bag, when called In secret, riding through the air she comes Lur'd with the smell of infant blood, to dance
With Lapland witches. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
NIGHTINGALE. n. f. [from night and gale, Saxon, to sing; galm, Teutonic, is a found or echo.]
1. A small bird that sings in the night with remarkable melody; Philomel.
I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,

NIG

When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shaksp. As You Like It.
Although the wezon, throtle, and tongue, be the instruments of voice, and by their agitations concur in those delightful modulations, yet cannot we assign the cause unto any particular formation; and I perceive the nightingale hath some disadvantage in the tongue. Brown's V. Err.
Thus the wife nightingale that leaves her home,
Pursuing constantly the cheerful spring,
To foreign groves does her old musick bring. Walker.
2. A word of endearment.
My nightingale!
We'll beat them to their beds. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
NIGHTLY. adv. [from night.]
1. By night.
Thee, Sion! and the flow'ry brooks beneath,
That wash thy hallow'd feet, and warbling flow,
Nightly I visit. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
Soon as the evening shades prevail,
The moon takes up the wondrous tale,
And nightly to the listening earth
Repeats the story of her birth. Addison's Spectator.
2. Every night.
Let all things suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shaksp. Macbeth.
NIGHTLY. adj. [from night.] Done by night; acting by night; happening by night.
May the stars and shining moon attend
Your nightly sports, as you vouchsafe to tell What nymphs they were who mortal forms excel. Dryd.
Soon as the flocks shook off the nightly dew,
Two swains, whom love kept wakeful and the muse,
Pour'd o'er the whit'ning vale their fleecy care. Pope.
NIGHTMAN. n. f. [night and man.] One who carries away ordure in the night.
NIGHTMARE. n. f. [night, and according to Temple, mara, a spirit that, in the heathen mythlogy, was related to torment or suffocate sleepers.] A morbid oppression in the night, resembling the pressure of weight upon the breast.
Saint Withold fasted thrice the woud,
He met the nightmare, and her name he told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight. Shaksp. K. Lear.
The forerunners of an apoplexy are, dulness, drowsiness, vertiges, tremblings, oppressions in sleep, and night-mares. Arbutnot on Aliments.
NIGHTPIECE. n. f. [night and piece.] A picture coloured as to be supposed seen by candle light; not by the light of the day.
He hung a great part of the wall with night-pieces, that seemed to show themselves by the candles which were lighted up; and were so inflamed by the sun-shine which fell upon them, that I could scarce forbear crying out fire. Addison.
NIGHTRAIL. n. f. [night and reil, Saxon, a gown or robe.] A loose cover thrown over the dress at night.
An antiquary will scorn to mention a pinner or night-rail; but will talk as gravely as a father of the church on the vitta and peplus. Addison on ancient Medals.
NIGHTRAVEN. n. f. [night and raven.] A bird supposed of ill omen, that cries loud in the night.
The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger,
The hoarse night-raven, trump of doleful drear. Spenser.
I pray his bad voice bode no mischief;
I had as lief have heard the night-raven,
Come what plague would have come after it. Shaksp.
NIGHTROBBER. n. f. [night and robber.] One who steals in the dark.
Highways should be fenced on both sides, whereby thieves and night-robbers might be more easily pursued and encountered. Spenser's Ireland.
NIGHTRULE. n. f. [night and rule.] A tumult in the night.
How now, mad sprite,
What night-rule now about this haunted grove? Shaksp.
NIGHTSHADE. n. f. [night and shade, Saxon.]
1. A plant of two kinds, common and deadly night-shade.
The flower consists of one leaf, which is divided into five parts, and expands in form of a star: from the flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a round, oval, soft, succulent fruit, containing many flat seeds in each. The species are nine. This the physicians have directed to be used in medicine, under the title of solanum tortense. Miller.
2. Deadly.
Deadly night-shade (belladonna) a plant. The flower is bell-shaped, of one leaf, divided into five acute segments at the top, and succeeded by a globular soft fruit, divided into two cells which contain the seeds. It is a very strong poison.
NIGHTSHINING. n. f. [night and shine.] Shewing brightness in the night. None

NIM

None of these noctiluca, or night-shining bodies, have been observed in any of the ancient sepulchres. Wilkin's Dædalus.
NIGHTSHRIEK. n. f. [night and shriek.] A cry in the night.
I have almost forgot the taste of fears:
The time has been, my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir,
As life were in't. Shaksp. Macbeth.
NIGHTTRIPPING. n. f. [night and trip.] Going lightly in the night.
Could it be prov'd,
That some night-tripping fairy had exchanged
In cradle cloths, our children where they lay,
Then would I have his Harry, and he mine. Shaksp.
NIGHTWALK. n. f. [night and walk.] Walk in the night.
If in his night-walk he met with irregular scholars, he took their names, and a promise to appear, unfet for, next morning. Walton's Life of Sanderson.
NIGHTWALKER. n. f. [night and walk.] One who roves in the night upon ill designs.
Men that hunt so, be either privy stealers, or night-walkers. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
NIGHTWARBLING. [night and warble.] Singing in the night.
Now is the pleasant time,
The cool, the silent, fave where fields yield
To the night-warbling bird. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
NIGHTWARD. adj. [night and ward.] Approaching towards night.
Their night-ward studies, wherewith they close the day's work. Milton on Education.
NIGHTWATCH. n. f. [night and watch.] A period of the night as distinguished by change of the watch.
I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night-watches. Psalms lxxiii. 6.
NIGRESCENT. adj. [nigrescens, Latin.] Growing black; approaching to blackness.
NIGRIFICATION. n. f. [niger and facio.] The act of making black.
NIMBLITY. n. f. [nimblity, Fr. nibilis, Latin.] Nothingness; the state of being nothing.
Not being is considered as excluding all substance, and then all modes are also necessarily excluded; and this we call pure nihility, or mere nothing. Watts's Logic.
To NILL. v. a. [from ne will, nillan, Saxon.] Not to will; to refuse; to reject.
Certes, said he, I will thine offer'd grace,
Ne to be made so happy do intend,
Another bliss before mine eyes I place,
In all affections the concurrent still;
If now, with man and wife to will and nill
The self-same things, a note of concord be,
I know no couple better can agree. Ben. Johnson.
NILL. n. f. The shining sparks of brass in trying and melting the ore.
To NIM. v. a. [nimen, Dutch, to take.] To take. In cant, to steal.
They'll question Mars, and by his look Detect who 'twas that nimm'd a cloak. Hudibras, p. i.
They could not keep themselves honest of their fingers, but would be nimming something or other for the love of thieving. L'Estrange, Fable 241.
NIMBLE. adj. [from nim, or numan, Saxon, tractable.] Quick; active; ready; speedy; lively; expeditious.
They being nimble-jointed than the rest,
And more industrious, gathered more store. Spenser.
You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames Into her scornful eyes. Shaksp. King Lear.
You have dancing shoes
With nimble soles. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
His off'ring soon propitious fire from heaven,
Consum'd with nimble glance and grateful steam;
The others not, for his was not sincere. Mil. P. Lost.
Thro' the mid seas the nimble pinnace sails,
Aloof from Crete before the northern gales. Pope.
NIMBLENESS. n. f. [from nimble.] Quickness; activity; speed; agility; readiness; dexterity; celerity; expedition; swiftness.
The hounds were fraight uncoupled, and ere long the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.
Himself shewing at one instant both steadiness and nimbleness. Sidney, b. ii.
All things are therefore partakers of God; they are his offspring, his influence is in them, and the personal wisdom of God is for that very cause said to excel in nimbleness or agility, to pierce into all intellectual, pure and subtle spirits, to go through all, and to reach unto every thing which is. Hooker, b. v. f. 5.
We, lying still,
Are full of rest, defence and nimbleness. Shaksp.
Ovid ranged over all Parnassus with great nimbleness and agility; but as he did not much care for the toil requisite to climb the upper part of the hill, he was generally roving about the bottom. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 115.

NIP

NIMBLEWITTED. adj. [nimble and wit.] Quick; eager to speak.
Sir Nicholas Bacon, when a certain nimble-witted counsellor at the bar, who was forward to speak, did interrupt him often, said unto him, There is a great difference betwixt you and me; a pain to me to speak, and a pain to you to hold your peace. Bacon, Apophth. 124.
NIMBLY. adv. [from nimble.] Quickly; speedily; actively.
He capers nimble in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious playing of a lute. Sha. Rich. III.
The air
Nimble and sweetly recommends itself. Shaksp.
Most legs can nimble run, tho' some be lame. Davies.
The liquor we poured from the crystals, and set it in a digesting furnace to evaporate more nimble. Boyle.
NIMBLESS. n. f. Nimbleness. Spenser.
NIMIETY. n. f. [nimietas, school Latin.] The state of being too much.
NIMMER. n. f. [from nim.] A thief; a pilferer.
NINCOMPPOO. n. f. [A corruption of the Latin non compos.] A fool; a trifier.
An old ninnyhammer, a dotard, a nincompoo, is the best language she can afford me. Addison.
NINE. n. f. [ninus, Gothic; nigon, Saxon.] One more than eight; one less than ten.
The weyward fifters,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine and thrice to mine,
And thrice again, to make up nine. Shaksp. Macbeth.
A thousand scruples may startle at first, and yet in conclusion prove but a nine-days wonder. L'Estrange.
The faults are nine in ten owing to affectation, and not to the want of understanding. Swift's Miscell.
NINEFOLD. n. f. [nine and fold.] Nine times; any thing nine times repeated.
This huge convex of fire,
Outrageous to devour, immures us round ninefold. Mil.
NINEPENNY. n. f. [nine and pence.] A silver coin valued at nine-pence.
Three silver pennies, and a nine-pence bent. Gay's Past.
NINEPINS. n. f. [nine and pin.] A play where nine pieces of wood are set up on the ground to be thrown down by a bowl.
A painter made blossoms upon the trees in December, and school-boys playing at nine-pins upon the ice in July. Peacbam on Drawing.
For as when merchants break, o'erthrown
Like nine-pins, they strike others down. Hud. p. ii.
NINESCORE. adj. [nine and score.] Nine times twenty.
Eugenius has two hundred pounds a year; but never values himself above nine-score, as not thinking he has a right to the tenth part, which he always appropriates to charitable uses. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 177.
NINETEEN. adj. [nigontyne, Saxon.] Nine and ten; one less than twenty.
Nineteen in twenty of perplexing words might be changed into easy ones, such as occur to ordinary men. Swift.
NINETEENTH. adj. [nigontceoda, Saxon.] The ordinal of nineteen; the ninth after the tenth.
In the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzaradan. 2 Kings xxv. 8.
NINETY. adj. [nuntigonty, Saxon.] Nine times ten.
Enos lived ninety years and begat Cainan. Gen. v. 9.
NINTH. adj. [negoda, Saxon.] That which precedes the tenth; the first after the eighth; the ordinal of nine.
Upon a strict observation of many, I have not found any that see the ninth day. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
NINTIETH. adj. [puntigontceogoda, Saxon.] The ordinal of ninety; the tenth nine times told.
NINNY. n. f. [ninnus, a child, Spanish.] A fool; a simpleton.
What a pied ninny's this?
The dean was so shabby, and look'd like a ninny, That the captain suppos'd he was curate. Swift.
NINNYHAMMER. n. f. [from ninny.] A simpleton.
Another vents her passion in scurrilous terms; an old ninnyhammer, a dotard, a nincompoo, is the best language she can afford me. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 109.
Have you no more manners than to rail at Hocus, that has saved that clod-pated, numskull'd, ninnyhammer of yours from ruin, and all his family. Arbut. John Bull.
To NIP. v. a. [nippen, Dutch.]
1. To pinch off with the nails; to bite with the teeth.
In oranges and lemons, the nipping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 388.
2. To cut off by any slight means.
The small shoots that extract the sap of the most leading branches, must be nipped off. Mortimer's Husb.
3. To blast; to destroy before full growth.
This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth

NIT

The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root;
And then he falls as I do. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
A flower doth spread and dye,
Thou would'st extend me to some good,
Before I were by frost's extremity nipt in the bud. Herb.
His delivery now proves Abortive, as the first-born bloom of spring,
Nipt with the lagging rear of winter's frost. Milton.
Had he not been nipped in the bud, he might have made a formidable figure in his own works among posterity. Add.
From such encouragement it is easy to guess to what perfection I might have brought this great work, had it not been nipt in the bud. Arbutnot's John Bull.
4. To pinch as frost.
The air bites shrewdly, it is very cold. —
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail;
When blood is nipt, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl. Sba. Love's L. Left.
5. To vex; to bite.
And sharp remorse his heart did prick and nip,
That drops of blood thence like a well did play. Fairy Q.
6. To fatigue; to ridicule; to taunt sarcastically.
But the right gentle mind would bite his lip
To hear the javel so good men to nip. Habberd's Tale.
Quick wits commonly be in desire new-fangled; in purpose unconstant; bold with any person; busy in every matter; soothing such as be present, nipping any that is absent.
Afchant's Schoolmaster.
NIP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A pinch with the nails or teeth.
I am sharply taunted, yea, sometimes with pinches, nips, and bobs. Afchant's Schoolmaster.
2. A small cut.
What this a sleeve? 'tis like a demicannon;
What up and down car'd like an apple-tart?
Here's nip, and nip, and cut, and flish, and flash,
Like to a center in a barber's shop. Shakespeare.
3. A blast.
So hasty fruits and too ambitious flow'rs,
Scorning the midwifery of ripening show'rs,
In spite of frosts, spring from th' unwilling earth,
But find a nip untimely as their birth. Stepney.
4. A taunt; a sarcasm.
NIPPER. n. f. [from nip.] A satirist. Out of use.
Ready backbiters, fore nippers, and spiteful reporters privily of good men. Afchant.
NIPPER. n. f. [from nip.] Small pincers.
NIPPINGLY. adv. [from nip.] With bitter sarcasm.
NIPPLE. n. f. [nyppe, Saxon.]
1. The teat; the dug; that which the sucking young take into their mouths.
Thou' tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me. —
I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from his boneless gums. Shakespeare.
In creatures that nourish their young with milk, are adapted the nipples of the breast to the mouth and organs of suction. Roy on the Creation.
2. The orifice at which any animal liquor is separated.
In most other birds there is only one gland, in which are divers little cells ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the nipple of the oil bag. Derham's Physico Theol.
NIPPLEWORT. n. f. [Lampfana.] A very common weed.
NISI PRIUS. n. f.
[In law.] A judicial writ, which lieth in case where the inquest is pannelled, and returned before the justices of the bank; the one party or the other making petition to have this writ for the case of the country. It is directed to the sheriff, commanding that he cause the men impanelled to the sheriff, before the justices in the same county, for the determine before the cause there, except it be so difficult that it need great deliberation: in which case, it is sent again to the bank. It is so called from the first words of the writ nisi apud talem locum prius venerint; whereby it appeareth, that justices of assizes and justices of nisi prius, differ. So that justices of nisi prius, must be one of them before whom the cause is depending in the bench, with some other good men of the county associated to him. Cowd.
NIT. n. f. [nitru, Saxon.] The egg of a louse, or small animal.
The whame, or burrel-fly, is vexatious to horses in summer, not by stinging them, but only by their bombilious noise, or tickling them in sticking their nits, or eggs, on the hair. Derham's Physico Theol.
NITENCY. n. f. [nitentia, Latin.]
1. Lustre; clear brightnefs.

NIT

2. [From the Latin, nitro.] Endeavour; spring to expand itself.
The atoms of fire accelerate the motion of these particles;
from which acceleration their spring, or endeavour outward will be augmented; that is, those zones will have a strong nitency to fly wider open. Boyle.
NITING. n. f. A coward, dastard, poltroon.
NITID. adj. [nitidus, Latin.] Bright; shining; lustrous.
We restore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into fire and aqua fortis, which take off the adventitious filth. Boyle on Colours.
NITRE. n. f. [nitre, Fr. nitrum, Latin.]
The salt which we know at this time, under the name of nitre or salt-petre, is a crystalline pellucid, but somewhat whitish substance, of an acrid and bitterish taste, impressing a peculiar sense of coldness upon the tongue. This salt, though it affords, by means of fire, an acid spirit capable of dissolving almost every thing, yet manifests no sign of its containing any acid at all in its crude state. Nitre is of the number of those salts which are naturally blended in imperceptible particles in earths, stones, and other stolid substances, as the particles of metals are in their ores; it is sometimes however found pure, in form of an efflorescence, either on its ores or on the surface of old walls; these efflorences dissolved in proper water, shooting into regular and proper crystals of nitre. That this salt should be found on the surface of walls is not wonderful, since it is found only on or near the surface of the earth where it is produced.
The earth from which nitre is made, both in Persia and the East-Indies, is a kind of yellowish marl found in the bare cliffs of the sides of hills exposed to the northern and eastern winds, and never in any other situation. From this marl the salt is separated by water; but the crystals into which it shoots, as we receive them from the East-Indies, are small, imperfect, and impure. Earths of whatever kind, moistened by the dung and excrement of animals, frequently afford ni-tre in large quantities. The earths at the bottom of pigeon-houses, and those of stables and cow-houses, all afford ni-tre, on being thrown into water and boiled. In France, where very little nitre is imported, they make it from the rubbish of old mortar and plaster of buildings; and the mortar of old walls with us, if moistened with urine and exposed to the air in a proper situation that is open to the north east, and covered over to defend it from wet, never fails to afford nitre in a few weeks, and that in proportion of one tenth of the weight of the ingredients. There is no question but a manufactory of nitre might be established in England to as much advantage as that of France. The place where the materials are exposed, is to be carefully examined. It must be moderate as to the great points of moisture and dryness; if there be too much moisture the nitre which is already formed will be washed away, and without some moisture the salts will hardly be ever formed. Heat and coldness, unless excessive, can be of no consequence. It is on account of the requisiteness of so certain a degree of moisture to the materials from which nitre is obtained, that the north east winds are of so much use in the production of it. In spring and autumn, which are the seasons when this salt is principally made, these two winds are neither too moist nor too dry, especially in the night; the south and west winds are destructive, because they bring storms and showers. In medicine, nitre is cooling and diuretick, and good in burning fevers. The natrum or nitre of the ancients, is a genuine, native, and pure salt, extremely different from our nitre, and all other native salts; being a fixed alkali plainly of the nature of those made by fire from vegetables, yet being capable of a regular crystallization, which those salts are not.
It is found on or very near the surface of the earth, in thin flat cakes, spongy, light, and friable; and when pure, of a pale brownish white colour. It is of an acrid taste, like pot-ashes. About Smyrna and Ephesus, and through a great part of Asia Minor, this salt is extremely frequent on the surface of the earth, and also in Sindy, a province of the inner Asia, where they sweep it up and call it soap-earth, using a solution or lye of it in washing. The natrum or ni-tre of the ancients, has been by some supposed to be a salt of substance, and by others to be the same with our nitre or salt-petre; but both these opinions are erroneous, this salt being the true natrum of the ancients, answering perfectly to its description, and having all its uses and virtues. In scripture we find that the salt called nitre would ferment pervinegar, and had an absterfve quality, properties which scarcely agree with this salt but not with salt-petre, as do many different qualities ascribed to it by the ancients. Hill on Fossils.
Some tumultuous cloud,
Infus'd with fire and nitre, hurried him.
Some steep their seed, and some in cauldrons boil'd.
With vigorous nitre and with lees of oil.
NITROUS. adj. [nitreus, Fr. from nitre.] Impregnated with nitre; consisting of nitre.

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the sun, gather a nitrous fumes more than either of them have severally.
Bacon's Natural History.
The northern air being more fully charged with those particles supposed nitrous, which are the aliment of fire, is fittest to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is sufficient to move such an unweildy bulk with due celerity. Roy.
He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find,
Meet flocks of cold so greedily purfu'd,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food. Blackmore.
NITRY. adj. [from nitre.] Nitrous.
Winter my theme confines; whose nitry wind
Shall crust the slabby mire, and kennels bind. Gay.
NITTY. adv. [from nitry.] Lousily.
One Bell was put to death at Tyburn for moving a new rebellion; he was a man nitely needy, and therefore adventurous. Hayward.
NITTY. adj. [from nit.] Abounding with the eggs of lice.
NITVAL. adj. [nitidus, Latin.] Abounding with snow. Dist.
NITVENS. adj. [nitens, Latin.] Snowy; resembling snow.
Cinabar becomes red by the acid exhalation of sulphur, which otherwise presents a pure and nitens white. Brown.
NITZY. n. f. A dunce; a simpleton. A low word.
NO. adv. [na, Saxon.]
1. The word of refusal.
Our courteous Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of no, woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast.
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be exprest,
In rusted yeas and honest kerfy noes. Sha. L. Labours Lost.
If you will not consider these things now, the time will shortly come when you shall consider them whether you will or no. Calany's Sermon.
2. The word of denial opposite to concession or affirmation.
I think it would not fort amiss, to handle the question, whether a war for the propagation of the Christian faith, without another cause of hostility, be lawful or no, and in what cases? Bacon.
3. It sometimes confirms a foregoing negative.
My name's Macbeth: —
—The Devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. —
—No, nor more fearful. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Never more.
This hand shall combat on the crooked throne;
No; let the Grecian pow'rs oppress in fight, Unhappy'd perish in their tyrant's sight. Dryd. Homer.
4. It sometimes strengthens a following negative; no not, not even.
No not the bow which so adorns the skies,
So glorious is, or boasts so many dics. Waller.
NO. adj.
1. Not any; none.
Let their be no strife between me and thee. Gen. xlii. 8.
Woman and fool are two hard things to hit,
For true no meaning puzzles more than wit. Pope.
2. It seems an adjective in these phrases, no longer, no more, no where.
When we saw that they were no where, we came to Samuel. 1 Sam. x. 14.
In vain I reach my feeble hands to join
In sweet embraces; ah! no longer thine. Dryden.
3. No one; none; not any one.
No one who doeth good to those only from whom he expects to receive good, can ever be fully satisfied of his own sincerity. Snarbridge's Sermon.
TO NOBILITATE. v. a. [nobilis, Latin.] To ennoble; to make noble.
NOBILITY. n. f. [nobilitas, Latin.]
1. Antiquity of family joined with splendour.
When I took up Boccace unawares, I fell on the same argument of preferring virtue to nobility of blood, and titles, in the story of Sigismunda. Dryden, Fab. Pref.
Long galleries of ancestors,
Challenge, nor wonder, or esteem from me,
"Virtue alone is true nobility."
2. Rank or dignity of several degrees, conferred by sovereigns.
Nobility in England is extended to five ranks; duke, marquis, earl, viscount, baron.
3. The persons of high rank; the persons who are exalted above the commons.
It is a purpos'd thing,
To curb the will of the nobility. Shakes. Coriolanus.
Dignity; grandeur; greatness.
Though the hated Amphilus, yet the nobility of her courage prevailed over it; and she desired he might be pardoned that youthful error; considering the reputation he had to be the best knight in the world; so as hereafter he governed himself, as one remembering his fault. Sidney, b. ii.
But ah, my muse, I would thou hadst facility
To work my goddesses so by thy invention,
On me to cast those eyes where shine nobility. Sidney.

NOB

Base men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them. Shakespeare's Othello.
They thought it great their sovereign to controul,
And nam'd their pride, nobility of soul. Dryden.
NOBLE. adj. [noble, Fr. nobilis, Latin.]
1. Of an ancient and splendid family.
2. Exalted to a rank above commonalty.
From virtue first began,
The difference that distinguish'd man from man:
He claim'd no title from descent of blood,
But that which made him noble, made him good. Dryd.
3. Great; worthy; illustrious.
Thus this man died, leaving his death for an example of a noble courage, and a memorial of virtue. 2 Mac. vi. 31.
To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds Tim'rous. Milton.
A noble stroke he lifted high,
Which hung not, but with tempest fell. Milt.
Those two great things that engross the desires and desires of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.
4. Exalted; elevated; sublime.
My thare in pale Pyrene I resign,
And claim no part in all the mighty nine:
Statues, with winding ivy crown'd belong
To nobler poets, for a nobler song. Dryd.
5. Magnificent; stately: as, a noble parade.
6. Free; generous; liberal.
7. Principal; capital: as, the heart is one of the noble parts of the body.
NOBLE. n. f.
1. One of high rank.
Upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand. Ex. xxiv. 11.
How many nobles then should hold their places,
That must strike fail to spirits of vile sort! Shakesp.
What the nobles once said in parliament, Nolumus leges Angliae mutari, is imprinted in the hearts of all the people: Bacon.
The nobles amongst the Romans took special care in their last wills, that they might have a lamp in their monuments.
Wilkin's Math. Magic.
See all our nobles begging to be slaves,
See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope, Dial. i.
It may be the disposition of young nobles, that they expect the accomplishments of a good education without the least expence of time or study. Swift's Modern Education.
The second natural division of power, is of such men who have acquired large possessions, and consequently dependencies; or descend from ancestors who have left them great inheritances, together with an hereditary authority:
these easily unite in thoughts and opinions. Thus commences a great council or senate of nobles, for the weighty affairs of the nation. Swift.
2. A coin rated at six shillings and eight-pence; the sum of six and eight-pence.
Shortly after he coined nobles, of noble, fair, and fine gold.
Camden's Remains.
Many fair promotions
Are daily given, to enoble those
That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble. Sha.
Upon every writ procured for debt or damage, amounting to forty pounds or more, a noble, that is six shillings and eight-pence, is, and usually hath been paid to fine. Bacon.
NOBLE liverwort. [Hepatica.] A plant.
The characters are: the root is fibrose and perennial:
the leaf consists of three lobes on a pedicle, which arises from the root; as does the pedicle of the flower, which is naked and single: the cup of the flower is, for the most part, composed of one leaf sometimes cut into three or four deep divisions: the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruit is globular, consisting of one single cell curvated. Müller.
NOBLEMAN. n. f. [noble and man.] One who is ennobled.
If I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.
The nobleman is he, whose noble mind
Is fill'd with inborn worth. Dryden's Wife of Bath.
NOBLENESS. n. f. [from noble.]
1. Greatness; worth; dignity; magnanimity.
The nobleness of life
Is to do this; when such a mutual pair,
And such a twain can do't. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Any thing
That my ability may undergo,
And nobleness impose. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
True nobleness would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. Shakesp.
He that does as well in private between God and his own soul, as in public, hath given himself a good testimony that his purposes are full of honesty, nobleness, and integrity.
Taylor's Holy Living.

NOC

Greatness of mind, and nobleness, their feat Build in her loveliest. Milton's Par. Lost.
There is not only a congruity herein between the nobleness of the faculty and the object, but also the faculty is enriched and advanced by the worth of the object. Hale.
You have not only been careful of my fortune, which was the effect of your nobleness, but you have been solicitous of my reputation, which is that of your kindness. Dryden.
2. Splendour of descent; lustre of pedigree.
NOBLESS. n. f. [noblesse, French.]
1. Nobility. This word is not now used in any sense.
Fair branch of nobles, flower of chivalry,
That with your worth the world amazed make. Fairy Q.
2. Dignity; greatness.
Thou whole nobles keeps one stature still,
And one true posture, tho' belieg'd with ill. Ben. Johnson.
3. Noblemen collectively.
Let us hallo to hear it,
And call the nobles to the audience. Shakesp. Ham.
I know no reason we should give that advantage to the commonalty of England to be foremost in brave actions, which the nobles of France would never suffer in their peasants. Dryden's Pref. to Am. Mirab.
NOBLY. adv. [from noble.]
1. Of ancient and splendid extraction.
Only a second laurel did adorn
His Colleague Catulus, tho' nobly born;
He shar'd the pride of the triumphal bay,
But Marius won the glory of the day. Dryden.
2. Greatly; illustriously; magnanimously.
Did he not straight the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink and thralls of sleep?
Was not that nobly done? Shakesp. Macbeth.
This fate he could have 'scap'd, but would not lose Honour for life; but rather nobly chose Death from their fears, than safety from his own. Denham.
3. Grandly; splendidly.
There could not have been a more magnificent design than that of Trajan's pillar. Where could an emperor's ashes have been so nobly lodged, as in the midst of his metropolis, and on the top of so exalted a monument. Addison on Italy.
NOBODY. n. f. [no and body.] No one; not any one.
This is the tune of our catch plaid by the picture of nobody. Shakesp. Temp.
It fell to secretary Coke's turn, for whom nobody cared, to be made the sacrifice; and he was put out of his office. Clarendon, b. ii.
If in company you offer something for a jest, and nobody seconds you on your own laughter, you may condemn their taste, and appeal to better judgments; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift's Miscel.
NOCENT. adj. [nocens, Latin.]
1. Guilty; criminal.
The earl of Devonshire being interested in the blood of York, that was rather feared than nocent; yet as one, that might be the object of others plots, remained prisoner in the Tower during the king's life. Bacon's Henry VII.
2. Hurtful; mischievous.
His head, well-stor'd with subtle wiles:
Not yet in horrid shade, or dismal den,
Nor nocent yet; but on the grassy herb,
Fearless unfeared he slept. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
The warm limbeck draws
Salubrious waters from the nocent brood. Philips.
They meditate whether the virtues of the one will exalt or diminish the force of the other, or correct any of its noxious qualities. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
NOCK. n. f. [nocchia, Italian.]
1. A slit; a nick; a notch.
2. The fundament. Les Jesters.
When the date of nock was out,
Off dropt the sympathetick snout. Hudibras.
NOCTAMBULO. n. f. [nos and ambulo, Latin.] One who walks in his sleep.
Respiration being carried on in sleep, is no argument against its being voluntary. What shall we say of noctambulo's? There are voluntary motions carried on without thought, to avoid pain. Arbutnot on Air.
NOCTIDIAL. adj. [noctis and dies.] Comprising a night and a day.
The noctidial day, the lunar periodic month, and the solar year, are natural and universal; but incommensurate each to another, and difficult to be reconciled. Holder.
NOCTIFEROUS. adj. [nox and fero.] Bringing night.
NOCTIVAGANT. adj. [noctivagus, Latin.] Wandering in the night.
NOCTUARY. n. f. [from noctis, Latin.] An account of what passes by night.
I have got a parcel of visions and other miscellanies in my noctuary, which I shall send you to enrich your paper. Addison's Spectator, No. 586.

NOD

NOCTURN. n. f. [nocturne, Fr. nocturnus, Latin.] An office of devotion performed in the night.
The reliques being conveniently placed before the church-door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them, and the nocturn and the mattins for the honour of the saints whose the reliques are. Stillingfleet.
NOCTURNAL. adj. [nocturnus, Latin.] Nightly.
From gilded roofs depending lamps display
Nocturnal beams, that emulate the day. Dryden.
I beg leave to make you a present of a dream, which may serve to lull your readers 'till such time as you yourself shall gratify the public with any of your nocturnal discoveries. Add.
NOCTURNAL. n. f. An instrument by which observations are made in the night.
That projection of the stars which includes all the stars in our horizon, and therefore reaches to the thirty-eight degree and a half of southern latitude, though its centre is the north pole, gives us a better view of the heavenly bodies as they appear every night to us; and it may serve for a nocturnal, and shew the true hour of the night. Watts.
To NOD. v. n. [Of uncertain derivation: νύξ, Gr. muto, Lat. amneidia, Welsh.]
1. To decline the head with a quick motion.
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts;
Your enemies with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Cleopatra hath nodded him to her. Shakesp. A. and Clep.
On the faith of Jove rely,
When nodding to thy suit he bows the sky. Dryden.
2. To pay a slight bow.
Cassius must bend his body,
If Cæsar carelessly but nod on him. Shakesp. Jul. Cæsar.
3. To bend downwards with quick motion.
When a pine is hewn on the plains,
And the last mortal stroke alone remains,
Lab'ring in pangs of death, and threatening all,
This way and that she nods, considering where to fall. Dryden's Ovid, b. x.
He climbs the mountain rocks,
Fir'd by the nodding verdure of its brow. Thomf. Spring.
4. To be drowsy.
Your two predecessors were famous for their dreams and visions, and contrary to all other authors, never pleased their readers more than when they were nodding. Add. Guard.
NOD. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A quick declination of the head.
Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things; a look or nod only ought to correct them when they do amiss. Locke on Education.
A mighty king I am, an earthly God;
Nations obey my word, and wait my nod:
And life or death depend on my decree. Prior.
2. A quick declination.
Like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready with every nod to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep. Shakesp. R. III.
3. The motion of the head in drowsiness.
Every drowsy nod shakes their doctrine who teach, that the soul is always thinking. Locke.
4. A slight obeisance.
Will he give you the nod? Sha. Troil. and Cressida.
Since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my cap than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitedly. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
NODATION. n. f. [from nodo.] The state of being knotted, or act of making knots.
NODDER. n. f. [from nod.] One who makes nods.
A set of nodders, winkers, and whisperers, whose business is to strangle all other offspring of wit in their birth. Pope.
NODDLE. n. f. [pnol, Saxon.] A head; in contempt.
Her care shall be
To comb your noddle with a three-legg'd stool. Shakesp.
Let our wines without mixture, or stain, be all fine,
Or call up the master and break his dull noddle. B. John.
My head's not made of brags,
As friar Bacon's noddle was. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 1.
He would not have it said before the people, that images are to be worshipped with Latia, but rather the contrary, because the distinctions necessary to defend it are too subtle for their noddles.
Come, master, I have a project in my noddle, that shall bring my mistress to you back again, with as good will as ever she went from you.
Why shouldst thou try to hide thyself in youth?
Impartial Proserpine beholds the truth;
And laughing at so fond and vain a talk,
Will strip thy hoary noddle of its mask. Addison.
Thou that art ever half the city's grace,
And add'st to solemn noddles, solemn pace. Ponton.
NODDY. n. f. [from nadin, French.] A simpleton; an idiot.

NOE. n. f. [nodus, Latin.]
1. A knot; a knob.
2. A swelling on the bone.
If nodes be the cause of the pain, foment with spirit of wine wherein opium and saffron have been dissolved. Wise's Surgery.
3. Interfection.
All these variations are finished in nineteen years, nearly agreeing with the course of the nodes; i. e. the points in the ecliptic where the moon crosseth that circle as she passeth to her northern or southern latitude; which nodes are called the head and tail of the dragon.
NODOSITY. n. f. [from nodus, Latin.] Complication; knot.
These the midwife cutteth off, contriving them into a knot close unto the body of the infant; from whence encephalotomists, or complicated nodosity we call the navels that tortuosity, or complicated nodosity we call the navels. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. vel.
NODOUS. adj. [nodus, Latin.] Knotty; full of knots.
This is it I am affected with the gout, and when that becometh nodous, men continue not long after. Brown's V. Err.
NODULE. n. f. [nodulus, Latin.] A small lump.
Those minerals in the strata, are either found in grains, or else they are amassed into balls, lumps, or nodules: which nodules are either of an irregular figure, or of a figure somewhat more regular. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
NOGGIN. adj. Hard; rough; harsh.
He put on a hard, coarse, noggin shirt of pendrel. Escapes of King Charles.
NOGGIN. n. f. [neggel, German.] A small mug.

NOIANCE. n. f. [See ANNOIANCE.] Mischievous; inconvenience.
To borrow to-day, and to-morrow to mis, for lender and borrower noiance it is. Tuff. Husb.
The single and peculiar life is bound,
With all the strength and armour of the mind,
To keep itself from noiance. Shakesp. Hamlet.
To NOIE. v. a. To annoy. An old word disused.
Let servant be ready with mattock in hand,
To tub out the bushes that noie the land. Tuff. Husb.
NOIER. n. f. [from noie.] One who annoys. An old word in disuse.
The north is a noier to grass of all fruits,
The east a destroyer to herbs and all fruits. Tuff. Husb.
NOIS. adj. [noise, Italian.] Hurtful; mischievous; troublesome; inconvenient. Obsolete.
Being bred in a hot country, they found much hair on their faces to be noisus unto them. Stenfer.
The false Duessa leaving noisus night,
Return'd to stately palace of dame Pride. Fairy Q.
Nor noisus smell his purpose could withhold. Fairy Q.
NOISE. n. f. [noise, French.]
1. Any kind of sound.
Noises, as of waters falling down, founded about them, and sad visions appeared unto them. Wisd. xvii. 4.
Whether it were a whistling sound, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, these things made them swoon. Wisd. xvii. 18.
Great motions in nature pass without sound or noise. The heavens turn about in a most rapid motion, without noise to us perceived; though in some dreams they have been said to make an excellent music. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Fear
Shakes your hearts, while thro' the idle they hear
A lasting noise, as horrid and as loud
As thunder makes, before it breaks the cloud. Waller.
2. Outcry; clamour; boasting or importunate talk.
What noise have we had about transplantation of diseases, and transfusion of blood. Baker on Learning.
3. Occasion of talk.
Socrates lived in Athens during the great plague, which has made so much noise through all ages, and never caught the least infection. Addison's Spectator, No. 195.
To NOISE. v. n. [from noun.] To found loud.
Harm
Those terrors, which thou speak'st of, did me none;
Tho' noising loud and threatening nigh. Milt. P. Reg.
To NOISE. v. a. To spread by rumour, or report.
All these sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill country. Luke i. 65.
I shall not need to relate the affluence of young nobles from hence into Spain, after the voice of our prince's being there had been quickly noised. Wotton.
They might buzz and whisper it one to another; and tacitly withdrawing from the presence of the apostle, they then lift up their voices and noised it about the city. Bentley.

NOISEFUL. adj. [noise and full.] Loud; clamorous.
That eunuch, guardian of rich Holland's trade,
Whose noiseful valour does no foe invade, Dryden.
And weak assistance will his friends destroy.
NOISELESS. adj. [from noise.] Silent; without sound.
On our quick't decrees,
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time Shakespeare.
Steals, ere we can effect them.
So noiseless would I live, such death to find,
Like timely fruit, not shaken by the wind,
Like timely dropping from the sapless bough. Dryden.
But ripely dropping from the sapless bough.
NOISENESS. n. f. [from noise.] Loudness of sound; importunity of clamour.
NOISEMAKER. n. f. [noise and maker.] Clamourer.
The issue of all this noise is, the making of the noise-makers still more ridiculous. L'Estrange.
NOISOME. adj. [noise, Italian.]
1. Noxious; mischievous; unwholesome.
In case it may be proved, that among the number of rites and orders common unto both, there are particulars, the use whereof is utterly unlawful in regard of some special bad and noisome quality; there is no doubt but we ought to relinquish such rites and orders, what freedom soever we have to retain the other still. Hooker, b. iv.
All my plants I save from nightly ill
Of noisome winds, and blasting vapours chill. Milton.
Gravicea noisome from the neighbouring fen,
And his own Cære sent three hundred men. Dryden.
The noisome pestilence, that in open war Terrible, marches thro' the mid-day air, Prior.
And scatters death.
2. Offensive; disgusting.
The seeing these effects, will be Both noisome and infectious. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
The brake and the cockle are noisome too much. Tuff.

The filthiness of his smell was noisome to all his army. 2 Mac. ix. 9.
An error in the judgment, is like an imposthem in the head, which is always noisome, and frequently mortal. South.
NOISOMELY. adv. [from noisome.] With a foetid stench; with an infectious steam.
NOISOMENESS. n. f. [from noisome.] Aptness to disgust; offensiveness.
If he must needs be seen, with all his filth and noisomeness about him, he promises himself however, that it will be some allay to his reproach, to be but one of many to march in a troop. South's Serm.
NOISY. adj. [from noise.]
1. Sounding loud.
2. Clamorous; turbulent.
O leave the noisy town, O come and see
Our country cotts, and live content with me! Dryden.
To noisy fools a grave attention lend. Smith.
Although he employs his talents wholly in his closet, he is sure to raise the hatred of the noisy crowd. Swift.
NOLL. n. f. [pnol, Saxon.] A head; a noddle.
An ass's noll I fixed on his head. Shakespeare.
NOLI me tangere. [Latin.]
1. Kind of cancerous swelling, exasperated by applications.
2. A plant.
Noli me tangere may be planted among your flowers, for the rarity of it. Mortimer's Husb.
NOLITION. n. f. [nolitis, Latin.] Unwillingness; opposed to volition.
The proper acts of the will are, volition, nolition, choice, resolution, and command, in relation to subordinate faculties. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
NOMANCY. n. f. [nomance, nomancie, Fr. nomen, Latin; and μαντις, Greek.] The art of divining the fates of persons by the letters that form their names. Diæ.
NOMIBLES. n. f. The entrails of a deer.
NOMENCLATOR. n. f. [Lat. nomenclator; Fr.] One who calls things or persons by their proper names.
There were a set of men in old Rome called nomenclators; that is, men who could call every man by his name. Addison's Guardian, No. 107.
Are envy, pride, avarice, and ambition, such ill nomenclators that they cannot furnish appellations for their owners? Swift.
NOMENCLATURE. n. f. [nomenclature, Fr. nomenclatura, Lat.]
1. The act of naming.
To say where notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term or nomenclature for it, is but a shift of ignorance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. A vocabulary; a dictionary.
The watry plantations fall not under that nomenclature of Adam, which unto terrestrial animals assigned a name appropriate unto their natures. Brown's V. Err.
NOMINAL. adj. [nominalis, Latin.] Referring to names rather than to things; not real; titular.
Profound

NON

Profound in all the nominal,
And real ways beyond them all.
The nominal essence of gold is that complex idea the word gold stands for; as a body yellow, of a certain weight, malleable, fusible and fixed. But the real essence is the constitution of the insensible parts of that body on which those qualities depend. Locke.
Were these people as anxious for the doctrines essential to the church of England, as they are for the nominal distinction of adhering to its interests. Addison.
NOMINALLY, adv. [from nominal.] By name; with regard to a name; titularly.
To NOMINATE, v. a. [nomino, Latin.]
1. To name; to mention by name.
Suddenly to nominate them all,
It is impossible. Shakef. Henry VI. p. iii.
One lady, I may civilly spare to nominate, for her sex's fame, whom he termed the spider of the court. Wotton.
2. To entitle.
Aread, old father, why of late
Didst thou beight me born of English blood, Whom all a fairy's son doen nominate. Fairy Q.
3. To fet down; to appoint by name.
If you repay me not on such a day, let the forfeit
Be nominated for an equal pound
Of your fair flesh to be cut off. Shakef. Lear.
Never having intended, never designed any heir in that sense, we cannot expect he should nominate or appoint any person to it. Locke.
NOMINATION, n. f. [nominatio, Fr. from nominate.]
1. The act mentioning by name.
The forty-one immediate electors of the duke, must be all of several families, and of them twenty-five at least concur to this nomination. Wotton's D. of Venice.
2. The power of appointing.
The nomination of persons to places, being so principal and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon.
In England the king has the nomination of an archbishop; and after such nomination, he sends a congé d'elire to the dean and chapter, to elect the person thus elected by him.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
NOMINATIVE, [in grammar, nominatif, Fr.] The case that primarily designates the name of any thing, and is called right, in opposition to the other cases called oblique.
NON, v. a. [Latin.] Not. It is never used separately, but sometimes prefixed to words with a negative power.
Since you to non-regardance cast my faith,
And I partly know the instrument
That screws me from my true place in your favour;
Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still. Shakef.
A mere inclination to matters of duty, men reckon a willing of that thing; when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of what the law requires? South.
For an account at large of bishop Sanderfon's last judgment concerning God's concurrence, or non-concurrence with the actions of men, and the positive entity of sins of commission, I refer you to his letters. Pierce.
The third sort of agreement or disagreement in our ideas, which the perception of the mind is employed about, is coexistence, or non-existence in the same subject. Locke.
It is not a non-act, which introduces a custom, a custom being a common usage. Ayliffe's Parergon.
In the imperial chamber this answer is not admitted, viz.
I do not believe it as the matter is alledged. And the reason of this non-admission is, because of its great uncertainty.
Ayliffe's Parergon.
An apparitor came to the church, and informed the parson, that he must pay the tithes to such a man; and the bishop certified the ecclesiastical court under his seal on the non-payment of them, that he refused to pay them. Ayliffe.
The non-appearance of persons to support the united sense of both houses of parliament, can never be construed as a general diffidence of being able to support the charge against the patent and patentee. Swift.
This may be accounted for by the turbulence of passions upon the various and surprising turns of good and evil fortune, in a long evening at play; the mind being wholly taken up, and the consequence of non-attention so fatal. Swift.
NONAGE, n. f. [non and age.] Minority; time of life before legal maturity.
In him there is a hope of government;
Which in his nonage, counsel under him,
And in his full and ripen'd years, himself Shall govern well. Shakef. Henry VI. p. iii.
Be love but there, let poor six years
Be pos'd with the matur'd fears Man trembles at, we straight shall find Love knows no nonage nor the mind. Craheo.
We have a mistaken apprehension of antiquity, calling that so which in truth is the world's nonage. Glanville.

NON

Those charters were not avoidable for the king's nonage; and if there could have been any such pretence, that alone would not avoid them. Hale.
After Chaucer there was a Spenfer, a Harrington, a Fairfax, before Waller and Denham were in being; and our numbers were in their nonage till these last appeared. Dryd.
In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves, and lift their infant head, Indulge their childhood, and the nursing spare. Dryden.
NONCE, n. f. [The original of this word is uncertain; Skinner imagines it to come from own or once; or from nütz, German, need or use; Janius derives it less probably from noiance, to do for the nonce; being, according to him, to do it merely for mischief.] Purpose; intent; design. Not now in use.
I saw a wolf
Nursing two whelps; I saw her little ones
In wanton dalliance the teat to crave,
While the her neck wreath'd from them for the nonce. Spen.
They used at first to fume the fish in a house built for the nonce. Carver.
When in your motion you are hot,
And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd him
A chalice for the nonce.
Such a light and metall'd dance,
Saw you never?
And they lead men for the nonce,
That turn round like gristle-stones. Ben. Johnson.
A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones. Clarendon.
Coming ten times for the nonce,
I never yet could see it flow but once. Cotton.
NONCONFORMITY, n. f. [non and conformity.]
1. Refusal of compliance.
The will of our maker, whether discovered by reason or revelation, carries the highest authority with it; a conformity or nonconformity to it, determines their actions to be morally good or evil. Watts's Logic.
2. Refusal to join in the established religion.
Since the liturgy, rites, and ceremonies of our church, are so much struck at, and all upon a plea of conscience, it will concern us to examine the force of this plea, which our adversaries are still setting up as the grand pillar and buttress of nonconformity. South's Sermons.
The lady will plead the toleration which allows her non- conformity in this particular. Addison's Spectator.
NONCONFORMIST, n. f. [non and conformist.] One who refuses to join in the established worship.
On his death-bed he declared himself a non-conformist, and had a fanatic preacher to be his spiritual guide. Swift.
NONE, adj. [ne one, nan, ne one, Saxon.]
1. Not one.
Ye shall see when none pursueth you. Lev. xxvi. 17.
That fowl which is none of the lightest, can easily move itself up and down in the air without stirring its wings. Will.
Another, which is none of the least advantages of hope is, its great efficacy in preserving us from setting too high a value on present enjoyments. Addison's Spectator.
2. Not any.
Six days shall ye gather it, but on the sabbath there shall be none. Exodus xvi. 26.
Thy life shall hang in doubt, and shalt have none assurance of this life. Dante. xxii. 66.
Before the deluge, the air was calm; none of those tu-multuary notions of vapours, which the mountains and winds cause in ours. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
The most glaring and notorious passages, are none of the finest. Fenton on the Classics.
3. Not other.
This is none other but the house of God, and the gate of heaven. Gen. xxviii. 17.
4. None of sometimes signifies only emphatically not.
My people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would none of me. Pf. lxxxi. 11.
NONEXISTENCE, n. f. [non and entity.]
1. Nonexistence.
When they say nothing from nothing, they must understand it as excluding all causes. In which sense it is most evidently true; being equivalent to this proposition, that nothing can make itself, or, nothing cannot bring its no-self out of nonentity into something. Bentley's Sermon.
2. A thing not existing.
There was no such thing as rendering evil for evil, when evil was truly a nonentity, and no where to be found. South.
We have heard, and think it pity that your inquisitive genius should not be better employed, than in looking after that theological nonentity. Arbut. and Pope's Moral Scrib.
NONEXISTENCE, n. f. [non and existence.] Inexistence;
state of not existing.
A method of many writers, which depreciates the esteem of miracles is, to false not only real verities, but also non- existences. Brown's Vulgar Errors, &c.
NONJURING

NOO

NONJURING, adj. [non and juro, Latin.] Belonging to those who will not swear allegiance to the Hanoverian family.
This objection was offered me by a very pious, learned, and worthy gentleman of the nonjuring party. Swift.
NONJUROR, n. f. [from non and juro.] One who conceiving James II. unjustly deposed, refuses to swear allegiance to those who have succeeded him.
NONNATURAL, n. f. [non and naturalis.] Physicians reckon these to be fix, viz. air, meat and drink, sleep and watching, motion and rest, retention and excretion, and the passions of the mind.
The fix nonnatural are such as neither naturally constitutive, nor merely destructive, do preserve or destroy according unto circumstance. Brown's V. Err.
NONPAREIL, n. f. [non and pareil, French.]
1. Excellence unequalled.
My lord and master loves you: O such love
Could be but recompens'd tho' you were crown'd
The nonpareil of beauty. Shakef. Twelfth Night.
2. A kind of apple.
3. Printers letter of a small size, on which small Bibles and Common Prayers are printed.
NONPLUS, n. f. [non and plus, Latin.] Puzzle; inability to say or do more. A low word.
Let it seem never so strange and impossible, the nonplus of my reason will yield a fairer opportunity to my faith. South.
One or two rules, on which their conclusions depend, in most men have govern'd all their thoughts: take these from them and they are at a loss, and their understanding is perfectly at a nonplus. Locke.
Such an artful did not begin the matter at a venture, and when put to a nonplus, pause and hesitate which way he should proceed; but he had first in his comprehensive intellect a complete idea of the whole organical body. Bentley.
To NONPLUS, v. a. [from the noun.] To confound; to puzzle; to put to a stand; to stop.
Nor is the composition of our own bodies the only wonder; we are as much nonplus'd by the most contemptible worm and plant. Glanv. Sect. c. vii.
His parts were so accomplish'd,
That right or wrong he ne'er was nonplus'd. Hudibras.
That fin that is a pitch beyond all those, must needs be such an one as must nonplus the devil himself to proceed farther. South.
What, you are confounded, and stand mute?
Somewhat nonplus'd to hear you deny your name. Dryden.
Tom has been eloquent for half an hour together, when he has been nonplus'd by Mr. Dry's desiring him to tell what it was that he endeavoured to prove. Speck. 471.
NONRESISTENCE, n. f. [non and resistance.] Failure of resistance.
If the character of persons chosen into the church had been regarded, there would be fewer complaints of non- resistance. Swift.
NONRESIDENT, n. f. [non and resident.] One who neglects to live at the proper place.
As to nonresidence, there are not ten clergymen in the kingdom who can be termed nonresidents. Swift.
NONRESISTANCE, n. f. [non and resistance.] The principle of not opposing the king; ready obedience to a superior.
NONSENSE, n. f. [non and sense.]
1. Unmeaning or ungrammatical language.
Till understood, all tales,
Like nonfence, are not true nor false. Hud. p. iii.
Many copies dispersed gathering new faults, I saw more nonfence than I could have cramm'd into it. Dryden.
This nonfence got into all the following editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope's Notes on Shakesp.
2. Trifles; things of no importance.
What's the world to him,
'Tis nonfence all. Thomson.
NONSENSICAL, adj. [from nonfence.] Unmeaning; foolish.
They had produced many other inept combinations, or aggregate forms of particular things, and nonfence systems of the whole. Roy on the Creation.
NONSENSICALNESS, n. f. [from nonfence.] Ungrammatical jargon; foolish absurdity.
NONSOLENT, n. f. [non and solvent.] One who cannot pay his debts.
NONSOLUTION, n. f. [non and solution.] Failure of solution.
Athenus instances enigmatical propositions, and the fore-features and rewards upon their solution and nonfolution. Broome.
NONSPARING, adj. [non and sparing.] Merciless; all-destroying.
Is't I expose
Those tender limbs of thine to the event
Of the nonsparring war. Shakef. All's well that Ends well.
To NONSPARE, v. a. [non and spare.] To deprive of the benefit of a legal process for some failure in the management.
The addresses of both houses of parliament, the council, and the declarations of most counties and corporations, are laid aside as of no weight, and the whole kingdom of Ireland
nonspared, in default of appearance. Swift.
NOODLE, n. f. [from niddle or neddy.] A fool; a simpleton.
NOOK, n. f. [from een beek, German.] A corner; a covert made by an angle or intersection.

NOON, n. f. [non, Saxon; navum, Welsh; none, Erse; supposed to be derived from nona, Latin, the ninth hour, at which their campa or chief meal was eaten; whence the other nations called the time of their dinner or chief meal, though earlier in the day, by the same name.]
1. The middle hour of the day; twelve; the time when the sun is in the meridian.
Fetch forth the flocks; there shall he sit 'till noon.—
'Till noon! 'till night, my lord, Shakef. K. Lear.
The day already half his race had run,
And summon'd him to due repast at noon. Dryden.
If I turn my eyes at noon towards the sun, I cannot avoid the ideas which the light or sun produces in me. Locke.
2. It is taken for midnight.
Full before him at the noon of night,
He saw a quire of ladies. Dryden.
NOONDAY, n. f. [noon and day.] Midday.

In all its lustre to the noonday sky. Addison's Ovid.
NOONING, n. f. [from noon.] Repose at noon.
NOONTIDE, n. f. [noon and tide.] Midday; time of noon.
Sorrow breaks seasons and reposing hours,
Makes the night morning, and the noontide night. Shak.
NOONTIDE, adj. Meridional.
Phaeton hath tumbled from his car,
And made an evening at the noontide prick. Shakef. Lear.
All things in best order to invite Noontide repast, or afternoon's repose. Milt. Par. Lost.
We expect the morning red in vain;
'Tis hid in vapours, or obscur'd in rain.
'Tis the noontide yellow we in vain require;
'Tis black in storm, or red in light'ning fire. Prior.
NOOSE, n. f. [nosada, entangled; a word found in the glosses of Lipsum. Mr. Lye.] A running knot which the more it is drawn binds the cloier.
Can't thou with a weak angle strike the whale?

They run their necks into a noose,
They'd break 'em after, to break loose. Hud. p. iii.
Falsely he falls into some dangerous noose,
And then as meanly labours to get loose. Dryden.
A rope and a noose are no jesting matters. J. Bull.
To NOOSE, v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a noose; to catch; to entrap.
The fin is woven with threads of different sizes, the least of them strong enough to noose and entrap us. Gov. Tongue.
NOR, conjunct. [ne or.]
1. A particle marking the second or subsequent branch of a negative proposition; correlative to neither or not.
I neither love, nor fear thee. Shakef. Lear.
Neither love will twine, nor hay. Marvel.
2. Two negatives are sometimes joined, but ill.
Mine eyes,
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not;
Nor, I am sure there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt. Shakef. Henry VI. p. iii.
3. Neither is sometimes included in nor, but not elegantly.
Pow'r, disgrace, nor death could ought divert Thy glorious tongue thus to reveal thy heart. Daniel.
Simois nor Xanthus shall be wanting there;
A new Achilles shall in arms appear. Dryden.
4. Nor is sometimes used in the first branch for neither.
Idle nymph, I pray thee, be Modest, and not follow me,
I nor love myself, nor thee, Ben. Johnson.

Dead to infiction, to themselves are dead;
And liberty plucks justice by the nose.
Sha. M. of Ven.
There can be no reason given why a visage somewhat longer, or a nose flatter, could not have conspired with such a foul.
Locke.
Poetry takes me up so entirely, that I scarce see what passes under my nose.
Pope's Letters.
2. The end of any thing.
The lungs are as bellows, the aspera arteria is the nose of the bellows, or as a channel in the found board of an organ.
Holder's Elements of Speech.
3. Scent; fragrance.
We are not offended with a dog for a better nose than his master.
Collier on Envy.
4. To lead by the nose. To drag by force: as, a bear by his ring. To lead blindly.
Tho' authority be a stubborn bear,
Yet he is oft led by the nose with gold.
Sha. W. Tale.

NOT

In suits which a man doth not understand, it is good to refer them to some friend, but let him chuse well his referendaries, else he may be led by the nose.
Bacon.
That some occult design doth lie
In bloody cynarctomachy,
Is plain enough to him that knows,
How faints lead brothers by the nose.
Hamlet, p. i.
This is the method of all popular shams, when the multitude are to be led by the noses into a fool's paradise.
L. E. p.
5. To thrust one's nose into the affairs of others. To be meddling with other people's matters; to be a busy body.

To nose. v. n. To look big; to bluster.
Adult'rous Anthony
Gives his potent regiment to a trull
That noses it against us.
Shakef. Ant. and Cleopatra.
NOSEBLEED. n. f. [nose and bleed.] A kind of herb.
NOSEGAY. n. f. [nose and gay.] A posie; a bunch of flowers.
She hath made me four and twenty nosegays for the flowers.
Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Ariel sought
The close recesses of the virgin's thought;
As on the nosegay in her breast reclin'd,
He watch'd th' ideas rising in her mind.
Pope.
Get you gone in the country to dress up nosegays for a holy day.
Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
NOSELESS. adj. [from nose.] Wanting a nose; deprived of the nose.
Mangled Myrmidons,
Noseless, and handleless, hackt and chipt, come to him.
Sha.

NOSOPHETICK. adj. [nōs and phetick.] Producing diseases.
The qualities of the air are nosophetick; that is, have a power of producing diseases.
Arbutnot on Air.
NOSTRIL. n. f. [nose and sypl, a hole, Saxon.] The cavity in the nose.
Turn then my freshest reputation to A favour that may strike the dullest nostril.
Shakef.
Stinks which the nostrils straight abhor, are not the most pernicious.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.
He form'd thee, Adam, and in thy nostrils breath'd
The breath of life.
The secondary action subsisteth not alone, but in concomitancy with the other; so the nostrils are useful both for respiration and smelling, but the principal use is smelling.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
These ripe fruits recreate the nostrils with their aromatick scent.
More's Divine Dialogues.
NOSTRUM. n. f. [Latin.] A medicine not yet made publick, but remaining in some single hand.
Very extraordinary, and one of his nostrums, let it be writ upon his monument. Hic jacet auctor hujus argumenti; for no body ever used it before.
Stillingfleet.
What drop or nostrum can this plague remove?
Pope.
NOT. adv. [ne aufre, Saxon; niet, Dutch.]
1. The particle of negation, or refusal.
If thou be the world's great parent,
How falls it then that with thy furious fervour
Thou dost afflict as well the not deservers,
As him that doth thy lovely helts despise?
Spenser.
His countenance likes me not.
Shakef. K. Lear.
The man held his peace, to wit whether the Lord had made his journey prosperous or not.
Gen. xxiv. 21.
Let each man do as to his fancy seems;
I wait, not I, 'till you have better dreams.
Dryden.
This objection hinders not but that the heroic action enterprised for the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be as well executed now as it was of old.
Dryden.
Grammar being to teach men not to speak, but to speak correctly: where rhetoric is not necessary, grammar may be spared.
Locke on Education.
This day, be bread and peace my lot;
All else beneath the sun
Thou know'st if best bestow'd or not.
Pope's Universal Prayer.
2. It denotes cessation or extinction. No more.
Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not.
Jab. vii. 8.
NOTABLE. adj. [notable, Fr. notabilis, Latin.] Remarkable; memorable; observable.
The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears; which, it seems, all worthy fame hath glory to come unto.
Sidney, p. ii.

NOT

The same is notified in the notable places of the dioceses.
Whitgift.
In the parliament at Kilkenny, many notable laws were enacted, which shew, for the law doth best discover enormities, how much the English colonies were corrupted.
Davies on Ireland.
Two young men appeared notable in strength, excellent in beauty, and comely in apparel.
2 Mac. iii. 26.
They bore two or three charges from the horse with notable courage, and without being broken.
Clarendon.
Both armies lay still without any notable action, for the space of ten days.
Clarendon, b. viii.
Varro's aviary is still so famous, that it is reckoned for one of those notables which men of foreign nations record.
Addison.
Cæsar, whose great sagacity and conduct put his success as much out of the power of chance as human reason could well do, yet upon occasion of a notable experiment, that had like to have lost him his whole army at Dyrrachium, tells us the power of it in his commentaries.
South's Sermon.
It is impossible but a man must have first passed this notable stage, and got his confidence thoroughly debauched and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin.
South.
2. Careful; bustling, in contempt and irony.
This absolute monarch was as notable a guardian of the fortunes, as of the lives of his subjects. When any man grew rich, to keep him from being dangerous to the state, he sent for all his goods.
Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 10.
NOTABLENESS. n. f. [from notable.] Appearance of business; importance. In contempt.
NOTABLY. adv. [from notable.]
1. Memorably; remarkably.
This we see notably proved, in that the oft polling of hedges conduces much to their lasting.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. With consequence; with shew of importance; ironically.
Mention the king of Spain or Poland, and he talks very notably; but if you go out of the gazette, you drop him.
Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 105.
NOTARIAL. adj. [from notary.] Taken by a notary.
It may be called an authentick writing, though not a publick instrument, through want of a notarial evidence.
Ayliffe.
NOTARY. n. f. [notaire, Fr. from notarius, Latin.] An officer whose business it is to take notes of any thing which may concern the publick.
There is a declaration made to have that very book, and no other set abroad, wherein their present authorized notaries do write those things fully and only, which being written and there read, are by their own open testimony acknowledged to be their own.
Hooker.
Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your bond.
Shakef. M. of Venice.
One of those with him, being a notary, made an entry of this act.
Bacon's New Atlantis.
So I but your recorder am in this,
Or mouth and speaker of the universe,
A ministerial notary; for 'tis
Not I, but you and fate that make this verse.
Donne.
They have in each province, intendants and notaries. Temp.
NOTATION. n. f. [notatio, Latin.]
1. The act or practice of recording any thing by marks: as, by figures or letters.
Notation teaches how to describe any number by certain notes and characters, and to declare the value thereof being so described, and that is by degrees and periods.
Cocker.
2. Meaning; signification.
A foundation being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to a building.
Hammond.
Confidence, according to the very notation of the word, imports a double knowledge; one of a divine law, and the other of a man's own action; and so is properly the application of a general law, to a particular instance of practice.
Saunders's Sermons.
NOTCH. n. f. [nocchia, Italian.] A nick; a hollow cut in any thing.
The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces in the margin, of a pyramid figure apolitely set, and with transverse notches.
Grew's Museum.
From his rug the skew'r he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes:
There take my tally of ten thousand pound.
He shew'd a comma ne'er could claim
A place in any British name;
Yet making here a perfect botch,
Thrusts your poor vowel from his notch.
Swift.
To NOTCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in small hollows.
He was too hard for him directly: before Corioli, he scotched him and notch'd him like a carbonado.
Shakef.
The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces, cancellated and transversely notched.
Grew's Museum.

NOT

From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster.
Pope.
NOTCHWEE'D. n. f. [notch and weed.] An herb called orach.
NOTE. [for ne note.] May not.
Ne let him then admire,
But yield his sense to be too blunt and base,
That note without an hound fine footing trace.
Fairy Q.
NOTE. n. f. [nota, Lat. notte, Fr.]
1. Mark; token.
Whoever appertain to the visible body of the church, they have also the notes of external profession whereby the world knoweth what they are.
Hooker, b. iii.
2. Notice; heed.
Give order to my servants that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence.
Shakef.
I will bestow some precepts on this virgin,
Worthy the note.
Shakef. All's well that ends well.
3. Reputation; consequence.
Divers men of note have been brought over into England.
Abbot's Description of the World.
Andronicus and Junia are of note among the apostles.
Rom. xvi. 7.
As for metals, authors of good note assure us, that even they have been observed to grow.
Boyle.
4. Reproach; stigma.
The more to aggravate the note,
With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat.
Shakef.
5. Account; information; intelligence.
She that from Naples
Can have no note; unless the sun were post,
The man 'th' moon's too flow.
Shakef. Tempest.
In suits of favour, the first coming ought to take little place; so far forth consideration may be had of his trust, that if intelligence of the matter could not otherwise have been had but by him, advantage be not taken of the note, but the party left to his other means, and in some sort recompensed for his discovery.
Bacon, Essay 49.
6. Tune; voice.
These are the notes wherewith are drawn from the hearts of the multitude for many sighs; with these tunes their minds are exasperated against the lawful guides and governors of their souls.
Hooker, b. iv.
The wakeful bird tunes her nocturnal note.
Milton.
I now must change those notes to tragick.
You that can tune your sounding strings so well,
Of ladies beauties and of love to tell;
Once change your notes, and let your lute report
The justest grief that ever touch'd the court.
Waller.
One common note on either lyre did strike,
And knaves and fools we both abhor'd alike.
Dryden.
7. Single sound in music.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony!
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony;
Thro' all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man.
Dryden.
8. State of being observed.
Small matters come with great commendation, because they are continually in use and in note; whereas the occasion of any great virtue cometh but on festivals.
Bacon.
9. Short hint; small paper.
He will'd me
In heedfull'st reservation to bestow them,
As notes whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they were in note.
Shakespeare.
In the body's prison so she lies,
As through the body's windows she must look,
Her divers powers of sense to exercise,
By gathering notes out of the world's great book.
Davies.
10. Abbreviation; symbol.
Contract it into a narrow compass by short notes and abbreviations.
Baker on Learning.
11. A small letter.
A hollow cane within her hand she brought,
But in the concave had inclos'd a note.
Dryden.
12. Written paper.
I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy, for perpetually reading their sermons; perhaps my frequent hearing of foreigners, who never make use of notes, may have added to my disgust.
Swift.
13. A paper given in confession of a debt.
His note will go farther than my bond.
John Bull.
14. Explanatory annotation.
The best writers have been perplexed with notes, and obscured with illustrations.
Felton on the Classics.
NOTEBOOK. n. f. [note and book.] A book in which notes and memorandums are set down.
Cassius all his faults observ'd;
Set in a notebook, learn'd, and comm'd by rote,
To cast into my teeth.
Shakespeare. J. Cæsar.
To NOTE. v. a. [note, Latin; noter, French.]

NOT

- To observe; to remark; to heed; to attend; to take notice of.
The fool hath much pined away.
No more of that, I have noted it well. Shakef. K. Lear.
If much you note him,
You shall offend him. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I began to note
The stormy Hyades, the rainy goat.
Wandering from clime to clime, observant stray'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope.
- To deliver; to let down.
Saint Augustin speaking of devout men, noted how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they gave unto the fessons and chapters read. Hooker, b. v.
Note it in a book, that it may be for ever and ever. If. xxx. 8.
- To charge with a crime.
Sine veste Dianam, agrees better with Livia, who had the fame of chastity, than with either of the Julia's, who were both noted of incontinency. Dryden.
- [In music.] To let down the notes of a tune.
[In music.] To let down the notes of a tune. Remarkable; eminent; celebrated.
A noted chymist procured a privilege, that none but he should vend a spirit. Boyle.
Justinian's laws, if we may believe a noted author, have not the force of laws in France or Holland. Baker.
- NOTER. n. f. [from note.] He who takes notice.
NOTHING. n. f. [no and thing; nothing, Scottish.]
  - Negation of being; nonentity; universal negation; opposed to something.
It is most certain, that there never could be nothing. For, if there could have been an instant, wherein there was nothing, then either nothing made something, or something made itself; and so was, and acted, before it was. But if there never could be nothing; then there is, and was, a being of necessity, without any beginning. Grew's Cef.
We do not create the world from nothing and by nothing; we assert an eternal God to have been the efficient cause of it. Bentley's Sermon.
This nothing is taken either in a vulgar or philosophical sense; so we say there is nothing in the cup in a vulgar sense, when we mean there is no liquor in it; but we cannot say there is nothing in the cup, in a strict philosophical sense, while there is air in it. Watts's Logic.
  - Nonexistence.
Mighty states characterless are graced
To duty nothing. Shakef. Troilus and Cressida.
  - Not any thing; no particular thing.
There shall nothing die. Ex. ix. 4.
Yet had his aspect nothing of severe,
But such a face as promis'd him sincere. Dryden.
Philosophy wholly speculative, is barren and produces nothing but vain ideas. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Nothing at all was done, while any thing remained undone. Addison on the War.
  - No other thing.
Nothing but a steady resolution brought to practice; God's grace used, his commandments obeyed, and his pardon begged; nothing but this will intitle you to God's acceptance. Watts's Prep. for Death.
Words are made to declare something; where they are, by those who pretend to instruct, otherwise used, they conceal indeed something; but that which they conceal, is nothing but the ignorance, error, or sophistry of the talker, for there is, in truth, nothing else under them. Locke.
  - No quantity or degree.
The report which the troops of horse make, would add nothing of courage to their fellows. Clarendon.
  - No importance; no use; no value.
The outward shew of churches, draws the rude people to the reverencing and frequenting thereof, whatever some of our late too nice fools say, there is nothing in the seemly form of the church. Spenser's Ireland.
Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of naught. Isaiah xli. 24.
  - No possession or fortune.
A most homely shepherd; a man that from very nothing is grown into an unspeakable estate. Shak. W. Tale.
  - No difficulty; no trouble.
We are industrious to preserve our bodies from slavery, but we make nothing of suffering our souls to be slaves to our lusts. Ray on the Creation.
  - A thing of no proportion.
The charge of making the ground, and otherwife is great, but nothing to the profit. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
  - Trifle; something of no consideration or importance.
I had rather have one scratch my head it's fun,
When the alarm were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakespeare's Cor.
My dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive,

NOT

- 'Tis nothing, says the fool; but says the friend,
This nothing, Sir, will bring you to your end.
Do I not see your droop'd-belly swell?
That period includes more than a hundred sentences that might be writ to express multiplication of nothings, and all the fatiguing perpetual business of having no business to do. Pope's Letters.
- Nothing has a kind of adverbial signification. In no degree; not at all.
Who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth?
Auria nothing dismayed with the greatness of the Turks' fleet, still kept on his course. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
But Adam with such counsel nothing sway'd. Milton.
  - NOTHINGNESS. n. f. [from nothing.]
    - Nihility; nonexistence.
His art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness,
From dull privations, and lean emptiness. Dante.
    - Nothing; thing of no value.
I a nothingness in deed and name,
Did scorn to hurt his forfeit carcass. Hadibras, p. i.
  - NOTICE. n. f. [notice, French; notitia, Latin.]
    - Remark; heed; observation; regard.
The thing to be regarded in taking notice of a child's miscarriage is, what root it springs from. Locke.
This is done with little notice: very quick the actions of the mind are performed. Locke.
How ready is envy to mingle with the notices which we take of other persons! Watts.
    - Information; intelligence given or received.
I have given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall and his dutchess will be here. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
  - NOTIFICATIONS. n. f. [notification, F. from notifi.] Act of making known; representation by marks or symbols.
Four or five torches elevated or depressed out of their order, either in breadth or longways, may, by agreement, give great variety of notifications. Holder's Elements of Speech.
  - TO NOTIFY. v. a. [notify, Fr. notifico; Latin.] To declare; to make known; to publish.
There are other kind of laws, which notify the will of God. Hooker, b. ii. f. 2.
The same is notified in the notablest places of the whole diocess. Whitgift.
Good and evil operate upon the mind of man, by those respective appellations by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind. South's Sermon.
This solar month is by civil fiction notified in authentic calendars the chief measure of the year: a kind of standard by which we measure time. Holder.
  - NOTION. n. f. [notion, Fr. notio, Latin.]
    - Thought; representation of any thing formed by the mind; idea; image; conception.
Many actions are punished by law, that are acts of ingratitude; but this is merely accidental to them, as they are such acts; for if they were punished properly under that notion, and upon that account, the punishment would equally reach all actions of the same kind. South's Sermon.
The fiction of some beings which are not in nature; second notions, as the logicians call them, has been founded on the conjunction of two natures, which have a real separate being. Dryden's State of Innocence.
What hath been generally agreed on, I content myself to assume under the notion of principles, in order to what I have farther to write. Newt. Opt.
There is nothing made a more common subject of discourse than nature and it's laws; and yet few agree in their notions about these words. Cheyne's Phil. Prim.
That notion of hunger, cold, sound, colour, thought, with, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the idea of hunger, cold, sound, with, &c. Watts's Logic.
    - Sentiment; opinion.
God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts and notions vain. Milt.
It would be incredible to a man who has never been in France, should one relate the extravagant notions they entertain of themselves, and the mean opinion they have of their neighbours. Addison's Freeholder, No. 30.
Sensual wits they were, who, it is probable, took pleasure in ridiculing the notion of a life to come. Atterbury.
Sense; understanding; intellectual power. This sense is frequent in Shakespeare, but not in use.
His notion weakens, his discernings Are lethargy'd. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
So told, as earthly notion can receive. Milt. P. Lyst.
  - NOTIONAL. adj. [from notion.]
    - Imaginary; ideal; intellectual; subsisting only in idea; visionary; fantastical.
The general and indefinite contemplations and notions, of the elements and their conjugations, of the influences of heaven,

NOT

- heaven, are to be set aside, being but notional and ill-limited; and definite axioms are to be drawn out of measured instances. Bacon's Natural History, No. 835.
- Happiness, object of that waking dream
Which we call life, mistaking; fugitive theme
Of my pursuing fancy, ideal shade.
Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.
We must be wary, lest we ascribe any real subsistence or personality to this nature or chance; for it is merely a notional and imaginary thing; an abstract universal, which is properly nothing; a conception of our own making, occasioned by our reflecting upon the settled course of things; denoting only thus much, that all those bodies move and act according to their essential properties, without any consciousness or intention of so doing. Bentley's Sermon.
- Dealing in ideas, not realities.
The most forward notional dictators sit down in a contented ignorance. Glavin. Scpf. c. xx.
  - NOTIONALITY. n. f. [from notional.] Empty, ungrounded opinion. A word not in use.
I aimed at the advance of science, by discrediting empty and talkative notional. Glavin. to Albius.
  - NOTIONALLY. adv. [from notional.] In idea; mentally; in our conception, though not in reality.
The whole rational nature of man consists of two faculties, understanding and will, whether really or notionally distinct, I shall not dispute. Norris's Miscel.
  - NOTORIETY. n. f. [notoriété, Fr. from notorius.] Public knowledge; public exposure.
We see what a multitude of pagan testimonies may be produced for all those remarkable passages; and indeed of several, that more than answer your expectation, as they were not subjects in their own nature so exposed to public notoriety. Addison on Christ. Relig.
  - NOTORIOUS. adj. [notorius, Lat. notorius, Fr. from notorius.] Publicly known; evident to the world; apparent; not hidden. It is commonly used of things known to their disadvantage; whence by those who do not know the true signification of the word, an atrocious crime is called a notorious crime, whether public or secret.
What need you make such ado in cloaking a matter too notorious. Whitgift.
The goodness of your intercepted packets
You writ to the pope against the king; your goodness,
Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious. Shakef.
I shall have law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame. Shakef. Com. Err.
In the time of king Edward III. the impediments of the conquest of Ireland are notorious. Davies.
What notorious vice is there that doth not blemish a man's reputation? Tillotson.
The inhabitants of Naples have been always very notorious for leading a life of laziness and pleasure, which arises partly out of the plenty of their country, and partly out of the temper of their climate. Addison on Italy.
The bishops have procured some small advancement of rents; although it be notorious that they do not receive the third penny of the real value. Swift's Miscel.
  - NOTORIOUSLY. adv. [from notorious.] Publicly; evidently; openly.
The exposing himself notoriously, did sometimes change the fortune of the day. Clarendon, b. viii.
This is notoriously discoverable in some differences of brake or fern. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
Ovid tells us, that the cause was notoriously known at Rome, though it be left so obscure to after ages. Dryden.
Should the genius of a nation be more fixed in government, than in morals, learning, and complexion; which do all notoriously vary in every age. Swift.
  - NOTORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from notorious.] Public fame; notoriety.
  - TO NOTT. v. a. To hear. Ains.
  - NOTWHEAT. n. f. [not and wheat.]
Of wheat there are two sorts; French, which is bearded, and requirith the best soil, and notwheat, so termed because it is unbearded, being contented with a meaner earth. Carver.
  - NOTWITHSTANDING. conj. [This word, though in conformity to other writers called here a conjunction, is properly a participial adjective, as it is compounded of not and withstanding, and answers exactly to the Latin non obstante; it is most properly and analogically used in the ablative case absolute with a noun; as, he is rich notwithstanding his loss; it is not so proper to say, he is rich notwithstanding that he has lost much; yet this mode of writing is too frequent. Addison has used it; but when a sentence follows, it is more grammatical to insert that; as, he is rich notwithstanding that he has lost much. When notwithstanding is used absolutely, the expression is elliptical, this or that being understood, as in the following passages of Hooker.]
    - Without hindrance or obstruction from.
Those on whom Christ bestowed miraculous cures, were

NOU

- so transported that their gratitude made them, notwithstanding his prohibition, proclaim the wonders he had done for them. Decoy of Piety.
- Although. This use is not proper.
A person languishing under an ill habit of body, may lose several ounces of blood, notwithstanding it will weaken him for a time, in order to put a new ferment into the remaining mass, and draw into it fresh supplies. Addison.
  - Nevertheless; however.
They which honour the law as an image of the wisdom of God himself, are notwithstanding to know that the same had an end in Christ. Hooker, b. iv.
The knowledge is small, which we have on earth concerning things that are done in heaven: notwithstanding this much we know even of fairs in heaven, that they pray. Hooker, b. v. f. 23.
He hath a tear for pity, and a hand
Open as day, for melting charity:
Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint;
As humorous as winter. Shakef. Henry IV.
  - NOTUS. n. f. [Latin.] The southwind.
With adverse blast upturns them from the south,
Notus and Afer black, with thund'rous clouds
From Sierra Lione. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
  - NOVATION. n. f. [novatio, Latin.] The introduction of something new.
NOVATOR. n. f. [Latin.] The introducer of something new.
NOVEL. adj. [novellus, Latin; novelle, French.]
    - New; not ancient; not used of old; unusual.
The Presbyterians are exactors of submission to their novel injunctions, before they are stamped with the authority of laws. King Charles.
It is no novel usurpation, but though void of other title, has the prescription of many ages. Decoy of Piety.
    - [In the civil law.] Appendant to the code, and of later enactment.
By the novel constitutions, burial may not be denied to any one. Ayliffe's Parergon.
  - NOVEL. n. f. [novelle, French.]
    - A small tale, generally of love.
Nothing of a foreign nature; like the trifling novels which Ariosto inserted in his poems. Dryden.
Her mangl'd fame in barb'rous pasture lost,
The coxcomb's novel and the drunkard's toast. Prior.
    - A law annexed to the code.
By the civil law, no one was to be ordained a presbyter till he was thirty-five years of age: though by a later novel it was sufficient, if he was above thirty. Ayliffe's Par.
  - NOVELIST. n. f. [from novel.]
    - Innovator; assertor of novelty.
Tellesius, who hath renewed the philosophy of Parmenides, is the best of novelists. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 69.
Aristotle rose,
Who nature's secrets to the world did teach,
Yet that great soul our novelists impeach. Denham.
The fooleries of some affected novelists have discredited new discoveries. Glavin. Scpf.
    - A writer of novels.
NOVELTY. n. f. [nouveauté, French.] Newness; state of being unknown to former times.
They which do nothing but that which men of account did before them, are, although they do amiss, yet the less faulty, because they are not the authors of harm: and doing well, their actions are freed from prejudice or novelty. Hooker, b. v. f. 7.
Novelty is only in request; and it is dangerous to be aged in any kind of course. Shakef. Measure for Measure.
As religion entertains our speculations with great objects, so it entertains them with new; and novelty is the great parent of pleasure; upon which account it is that men are so much pleased with variety. South's Sermons.
  - NOVEMBER. n. f. [Latin.] The eleventh month of the year, or the ninth reckoned from March, which was, when the Romans named the months, accounted the first.
November is drawn in a garment of changeable green, and black upon his head. Peasam on Drawing.
  - NOVENARY. n. f. [novenarius, Latin.] Number of nine; nine collectively.
Ptolomy by parts and numbers implieth climacterical years; that is, septenaries and novenaries. Brown's V. Err.
Looking upon them as in their original differences and combinations, and as selected out of a natural stock of nine quaternions, or four novenaries, their nature and differences lie most obvious to be understood. Holder.
  - NOVERCAL. adj. [novercalis, from noverca, Latin.] Having the manner of a stepmother; becoming a stepmother.
When the whole tribe of birds by incubation, produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it in a more novercal way. Derham.
  - NOUGHT. n. f. [ne aught, not any thing, Saxon; as therefore we write aught not ought for any thing, we should, according to analogy, write naught not nought, for nothing; but a custom has irreversibly prevailed of using naught for bad, and naught for nothing.]

NOU

1. Not any thing; nothing.

In young Rinaldo fierce desires he spy'd,

And noble heart, of rest impatient,

To wealth or sovereign power he nought apply'd. Fairfax.

Who cannot see this palpable device?

Yet who so bold, but says he sees it not?

Bad is the world, and it will come to nought,

When such ill dealings must be seen in thought. Shakef.

Such smiling rogues as these foon ev'ry passion;

Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks

With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters,

As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shakef.

Ye are of nothing, and your work of nought. If. xli. 24.

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell,

And devilish machinations come to nought. Par. Reg.

2. To fet at nought; not to value; to slight; to scorn; to disregard.

Ye have fet at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof. Prov. i. 25.

NOVICE. n. f. [novice, French; novitius, Latin.]

1. One not acquainted with any thing; a fresh-man; one in the rudiments of any knowledge.

Triple-twin'd whore! 'tis thou

Hast fold me to this novice. Shakef. Ant. and Cleopat.

Brave plantagenet,

That princely novice was struck dead by thee. Shakef.

Bring me to the sight of Isabella,

A novice of this place. Shakef. Measure for Measure.

You are novices; 'tis a world to see

How tame, when men and women are alone,

A meacock wretch can make the curstest frow. Shakef.

We have novices and apprentices, that the succession of the former employed men do not fail. Bacon.

If any unexperienced young novice happens into the fatal neighbourhood of such pests, presently they are plying his full purse and his empty pate. South's Sermons.

I am young, a novice in the trade,

The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade;

And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,

But caught myself lie struggling in the snare.

And the I love, or laughs at all my pain,

Or knows her worth too well, and pays me with disdain. Dry.

In these experiments I have set down such circumstances by which either the phenomenon might be rendered more conspicuous, or a novice might more easily try them, or by which I did try them only. Newt. Opt.

2. One who has entered a religious house, but not yet taken the vow.

NOVITIATE. n. f. [noviciat, French.]

1. The state of a novice; the time in which the rudiments are learned.

This is so great a masterpiece in sin, that he must have passed his tyrocinium or novitiate in sinning, before he come to this, be he never so quick a proficient. South's Sermons.

2. The time spent in a religious house, by way of trial, before the vow is taken.

NOVITY. n. f. [novitas, Latin.] Newness; novelty.

Some conceive she might not yet be certain, that only man was privileged with speech, and being in the novity of the creation and unexperience of all things, might not be affrighted to hear a serpent speak. Bacon's V. Err.

NOUL. The crown of the head. See NOLL. Spenser.

NOULD. Ne would; would not. Spenser.

NOUN. n. f. [nomen, French; nomen, Latin.] The name of any thing in grammar.

A noun is the name of a thing, whether substance, mode or relation, which in speech is used to signify the same when there is occasion to affirm or deny any thing about it, or to express any relation it has in discourse to any other thing.

Thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun and a verb, and such abominable words as no christian ear can endure to hear. Shakef. Henry VI.

The boy, who scarce has paid his entrance down,

To his proud pedant, or declin'd a noun. Dryden.

1. To encrease or support by food, or aliment of any kind.

He planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it. If. xli. 14.

Thro' her nourish'd powers enlarg'd by thee,

She springs aloft. Thomson's Summer.

2. To support; to maintain.

Whilst I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,

I will stir up in England some black storm. Shakef.

Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourish'd him for her own son. Acts vii. 21.

3. To encourage; to foment.

What madness was it with such proofs to nourish their contentions, when there were such effectual means to end all controversy? Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

NOW

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate

The cockle of rebellion. Shakef.

Gorgias hired soldiers, and nourish'd war continually with the Jews. 2 Mac. x. 14.

4. To train, or educate.

Thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourish'd up in the words of faith. 1 Tim. iv. 6.

I travel not, neither do I nourish up young men, nor bring up virgins. If. xxiii. 4.

5. To promote growth or strength, as food.

In vegetables there is one part more nourishing than another; as grains and roots nourish more than their leaves.

Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 45.

To NOURISH. v. n. To gain nourishment. Unusual. '45.

Fruit trees grow full of mofs, which is caused partly by the coldness of the ground, whereby the parts nourish less.

Bacon's Natural History, No. 544.

NOURISHABLE. adj. [from nourish.] Susceptive of nourishment.

The chyle is mixed herewith, partly for its better conversion into blood, and partly for its more ready adhesion to all the nourishable parts. Crew's Cosmol. b. i. c. 5.

NOURISHER. n. f. [from nourish.] The person or thing that nourishes.

Sleep, chief nourisher in life's feast. Shakef.

A restorer of thy life, and a nourisher of thine old age.

Ruth iv. 15.

Milk warm from the cow is a great nourisher, and a good remedy in consumptions. Bacon's Nat. History.

Bran and swine's dung laid up together to rot, is a very great nourisher and comforter to a fruit tree. Bacon.

Please to taste

These bounties, which our nourisher hath caus'd

The earth to yield. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

NOURISHMENT. n. f. [nourishment, French.]

1. That which is given or received, in order to the support or encrease of growth or strength; food; sustenance; nutriment.

When the nourishment grows unfit to be assimilated, or the central heat grows too feeble to assimilate it, the motion ends in confusion, putrefaction, and death. Newt. Opt.

2. Nutrition; support of strength.

By temperance taught,

In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight. Milt. Par. Lost.

3. Sustainment; supply of things needful.

He instructeth them, that as in the one place they use to refresh their bodies, so they may in the other learn to seek the nourishment of their souls. Hooker, b. v.

NOURSLING. n. f. The nurse; the nursing. Spenser.

NOURITURE. n. f. [nouriture, French: this was afterwards contracted to nurture.] Education; institution.

Thither the great magician Merlin came,

As was his use, oftimes to visit me;

For he had charge my discipline to frame,

And tutors nurture to oversee. Fairy Queen, b. i.

To NOURSEL. v. a. [The same I believe with nuzzle, and both, in their original import, corrupted from nurse.] To nurse up.

Bald friars and knavish shavelings fought to nurse the common people in ignorance, left being once acquainted with the truth of things, they would in time smelt out the untruth of their packed pelf and malspenny religion. Spens.

To NOUSEL. v. a. [nuzzle, nuzzle, nouse.] To entrap; ensnare; as in a noose or trap. They nuzzle hogs to prevent their digging.

NOW. adv. [nun, Sax. nun, Germ.]

1. At this time; at the time present.

Thy servants trade hath been about cattle, from our youth even until now. Gen. xli. 34.

The Lord shall raise him up a king over Israel that day:

but what? even now. 1 Kings xiv. 14.

Refer all the actions of this short and dying life to that state which will shortly begin, but never have an end; and this will approve itself to be wisdom at last, whatever the world judge of it now. Tillotson.

Now that languages abound with words standing for such combinations, an usual way of getting these complex ideas, is by the explication of those terms that stand for them. Lact.

2. A little while ago.

Now the blood of twenty thousand men

Did triumph in my face, and they are fled. Shakef.

How frail our passions!

They that but now for honour and for plate,

Made the sea blub, with blood resign their hate. Wall.

3. At one time or respect; at another time.

Now high, now low, now matter up, now mifs. Pope.

4. It is sometimes a particle of connection, like the French et, and Latin autem; as, if this be true, he is guilty; now this is true, therefore he is guilty.

Now whatsoever he did or suffered, the end thereof was to open the doors of the kingdom of heaven, which our ini-quities had shut up. Hooker, b. v. f. 44.

NOW

He seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him. Now to affect the malice of the people, is render it that which he dislikes, to flatter them. Shakef.

as had as that again, saying, not this man but Ba-

Then cried they all again, saying, not this man but Barabbas; now Barabbas was a robber. St. John.

Now by these numbers he impleth climacterical years. Bro.

Pheasants which are granivorous birds, the young live

most upon ants eggs. Now birds, being of a hot nature, are very voracious, therefore there had need be an infinite number of insects produced for their sustenance. Roy.

The other great and undoing mischief which befalls men, is by their being misrepresented. Now by calling evil good, a man is misrepresented to others in the way of slander and detraction. South's Sermons.

Helim bethought himself, that the first day of the full moon of the month Tizpa, was near at hand. Now it is a received tradition among the Persians, that the souls of the royal family, who are in a state of bliss, do, on the first full moon after their decease, pass through the eastern gate of the black palace. Addison's Guardian.

The praise of doing well

Is to the ear, as ointment to the snell.

Now if some flies, perchance, however small

Into the alabaster urn should fall,

The odours die. Prior.

The only motives that can be imagined of obedience to laws, are either the value and certainty of rewards, or an apprehension of justice and severity. Now neither of these, exclusive of the other, is the true principle of our obedience to God. Rogers, Sermon. i.

A human body forming in such a fluid in any imaginable posture, will never be reconcilable to this hydrostatical law.

There will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above. Now what can make the heavier particles of bone ascend above the lighter ones of flesh, or depress these below those, against the tendency of their own nature.

Bentley's Sermons.

5. After this; since things are so, in familiar speech.

How shall any man distinguish now betwixt a parasite and a man of honour, where hypocrisy and interest look so like duty and affection? L'Estrange.

6. Now and then; at one time and another uncertainly. This word means, with regard to time, what is meant by here and there, with respect to place.

Now and then they ground themselves on human authority, even when they most pretend divine. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

Now and then something of extraordinary, that is any thing of your production, is requisite to refresh your character. Dryden.

A most effectual argument against spontaneous generation is, that there are no new species produced, which would now and then happen, were there any such thing. Roy.

He who resolves to walk by the gospel rule of forbearing all revenge, will have opportunities every now and then to exercise his forgiving temper. Atterbury.

NUM

NULL. n. f. Something of no power, or no meaning. Marks in ciphered writing which stand for nothing, and are inserted only to puzzle, are called nulls.

If part of the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bacon's War with Spain.

NULLITY. n. f. [from nullus, Latin.] The state of being nowhere.

TO NULLIFY. v. a. [from nullus, Latin.] To annul; to make void.

NULLITY. n. f. [nullité, French.]

1. Want of force or efficacy. It can be no part of my business to overthrow this distinction, and to shew the nullity of it; which has been solidly done by most of our polemic writers. South's Sermons.

The jurisdiction is opened by the party, in default of justice from the ordinary, as by appeals or nullities. Ayliffe.

2. Want of existence. A hard body struck against another hard body, will yield an exterior sound, in so much as if the percussion be over soft, it may induce a nullity of sound; but never an interior sound. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

NUMB. adj. [benumen, benumbed, Saxon.]

1. Torpid; deprived in a great measure of the power of motion and sensation; chill; motionless.

Like a stony statue, cold and numb. Shakespeare. Leaning long upon any part maketh it numb and asleep; for that the compression of the part suffereth not the spirits to have free access; and therefore when we come out of it, we feel a stinging or pricking, which is the re-entrance of the spirits. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Producing chillness; benumbing. When we both lay in the field, Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me Ev'n in his garments, and did give himself All thin and naked to the numb cold night. Shakespeare.

TO NUMB. v. a. To make torpid; to make dull of motion or sensation; to deaden; to stupefy.

Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices Strike in their numb'd and mortify'd bare arms, Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary; And with this horrible object, from low farms, Inforce their charity. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

She can unlock The clasping charm, and thaw the numbing spell. Milton. Plough naked, fawn, and naked sow the land, For lazy winter numbs the lab'ring hand. Dryden.

Nought shall avail The pleasing song, or well repeated tale, When the quick spirits their warm march forbear, And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior. The fool numbs me like the torpor. Bolingbroke to Swift.

NUMBEDNESS. n. f. [from numbed.] Torpor; interruption of sensation.

If the nerve be quite divided, the pain is little, only a kind of stupor or numbedness. Wise's Surgery.

TO NUMBER. v. a. [numbrer, French; numere, Latin.]

1. To count; to tell; to reckon how many. If a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Gen. xiii. 16.

Number them by their armies. Numbers i. 3. I will number you to the sword. Is. lxx. 12.

The gold, the vest, the tripods number'd o'er, All these he found. Pope's Odyssey, b. 13.

2. To reckon as one of the same kind. He was numbered with the transgressors, and bare the sin of many. Is. liii. 12.

NUMBER. n. f. [numbre, French; numerus, Latin.]

1. The species of quantity by which it is computed how many. Hye thee, from this slaughter-house, Left thou increase the number of the dead. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

The silver, the gold, and the vessels, were weighed by number and by weight. Ezra viii. 34. Thou shalt take a few in number, and bind them in thy skirts. Ezek. v. 3.

There is but one gate for strangers to enter at, that it may be known what numbers of them are in the town. Addison.

2. Any particular aggregate of units, as even or odd. This is the third time; I hope good luck lies in odd numbers: they say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Shakespeare. M. W. of Wind.

3. Many; more than one. Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hocher.

Water lily hath a root in the ground; and so have a number of other herbs that grow in ponds. Bacon.

Ladies are always of great use to the party they espouse, and never fail to win over numbers. Addison.

4. Multitude that may be counted. Of him came nations and tribes out of number. 2 Esd. iii. 7.

Loud as from numbers without number. Milton.

5. Comparative multitude. Nimble itself importeth not much in armies, where the people are of weak courage: for, as Virgil says, it never troubles a wolf how many the sheep be. Bacon.

6. Aggregated multitude. If you will, some few of you shall see the place; and then you may send for your sick, and the rest of your number, which ye will bring on land. Bacon's N. Atlantic.

7. Harmony; proportions calculated by number. They, as they move Their starry dance in numbers that compute Days, months, and years, towards his all-cheering lamp, Turn swift. Milton.

8. Verses; poetry. Should the muses bid my numbers roll Strong as their charms. Pope.

9. [In grammar.] In the noun is the variation or change of termination to signify a number more than one. When men first invented names, their application was to single things; but soon finding it necessary to speak of several things of the same kind together, they found it likewise necessary to vary or alter the noun. Clarke's Lat. Grammar.

How many numbers is in nouns? — Two. Shakespeare. Merry W. of Windsor.

NUMBERER. n. f. [from number.] He who numbers.

NUMBERLESS. adj. [from number.] Innumerable; more than can be reckoned.

I forgive all; There cannot be those numberless offences Gain'd me. Shakespeare.

About his chariot numberless were pour'd Cherub and seraph. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Defers to great, Though numberless, I never shall forget. Denham.

The soul conveys with numberless beings of her own creation. Addison's Spectator, No. 488.

NUMBLES. n. f. [from numble.] The entrails of a deer. Bulfinch.

NUMBNESS. n. f. [from numb.] Torpor; interruption of action or sensation; deadness; stupefaction.

Stir, nay, come away; Bequeath to death your numbness; for from him Dear life redeems you. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

'Till length of years And sedentary numbness craze my limbs To a contemptible old age obscure. Milton. Agon.

Cold numbness strait bereaves Her corps of sense, and th' air her soul receives. Denham.

Silence is worse than the fiercest and loudest accusations; since it may proceed from a kind of numbness or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain, or make a stir. South's Sermons.

NUMERABLE. adj. [numerabilis, Latin.] Capable to be numbered.

NUMERAL. adj. [numeral, Fr. from numerus, Latin.] Relating to number; consisting of number.

Some who cannot retain the several combinations of numbers in their distinct orders, and the dependence of so long a train of numeral progressions, are not able all their life time regularly to go over any moderate series of numbers. Lake.

NUMERALLY. adv. [from numeral.] According to number. The blasts and undulatory breaths thereof, maintain no certainty in their course; nor are they numerally fear'd by navigators. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.

NUMERARY. adj. [numerus, Lat.] Any thing belonging to a certain number.

A supernumerary canon, when he obtains a prebend, becomes a numery canon. Ayliffe's Paragon.

NUMERATION. n. f. [numeration, Fr. numeration, Latin.]

1. The art of numbering. Numeration is but still the adding of one unite more, and giving to the whole a new name or sign, whereby to know it from those before and after. Lake.

2. Number contained. In the legs or organs of progression in animals, we may observe an equality of length, and parity of numeration. Brown.

3. The rule of arithmetic which teaches the notation of numbers, and method of reading numbers regularly noted. NUMERATOR. n. f. [Latin.]

NUT. n. f. [hnut, Saxon; noot, Dutch; noix, Fr.]

1. The fruit of certain trees; it consists of a kernel covered by a hard shell. If the shell and kernel are in the center of a pulpy fruit, they then make not a nut but a stone.
One chanc'd to find a nut
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel-root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel;
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this Fay, dear queen be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,

NUTCRACKERS. n. f. [nut and crack.] An instrument used to enclose nuts and break them by pressure. He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a pair of nutcrackers. Addison's Spectator.

NUTGALL. n. f. [nut and gall.] Excrecence of an oak. In vegetable excretions, maggots terminate in flies of constant shapes, as in the nutgalls of the outlandish oak. Brown.

NUTHATCH. } n. f. A bird.
NUTJOBBER. } n. f. A bird.
NUTPECKER. } n. f. A bird.

NUTHOOK. n. f. [nut and hook.] A stick with a hook at the end to pull down boughs that the nuts may be gathered. Nutbok, Nutbok, you lie. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

NUTMEG. n. f. [nut and mugit, French.]
The nutmeg is a kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and separated from that and from its investient coat, the mace before it is sent over to us; except that the whole fruit is sometimes sent over in preserve, by way of sweet-meat or as a curiosity. The nutmeg is of a roundish or oval figure, of a compact or firm texture, and its surface furrowed: it is of an extremely agreeable smell and an aromatick taste. There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male which is long and cylindrical, but it has less of the fine aromatick flavour than the female, which is of the shape of an olive. The Dutch import the nutmegs and mace from the East-Indies, and supply all Europe with them. The tree which produces them is not unlike our pear-tree in its manner of growth: its leaves, whether green or dried, have, when bruised, a very fragrant smell; and the trunk or branches, cut or broken off, yield a red liquor like blood. This tree is carefully cultivated. But that which produces the male nutmeg grows wild in the mountainous parts of the Moluccas. Nutmeg is much used in our foods, and is of excellent virtues as a medicine. Hill.

The second a dry and flosculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth a kernel included in the shell, which lieth under the mace, is the same we call nutmeg. Brown's V. Ev.

I to my pleasant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant scent. Sandys.

NUTSHELL. n. f. [nut and shell.] The hard substance that incloses the kernel of the nut.
I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A fox had me by the back, and a thousand pound to a nutshell, I had never got off again. L'Estrange.

It seems as easy to me, to have the idea of space empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutshell without a kernel. Locke.

NUTTREE. n. f. [nut and tree.] A tree that bears nuts; hazle. Of trees you shall have the nuttree and the oak. Peascham.

Like beating nuttrees, makes a larger crop. Dryden.

NUTRICATION. n. f. [nutricatio, Lat.] Manner of feeding or being fed.
Besides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a second argument to overthrow this airy nutrication. Brown.

NUTRIMENT. n. f. [nutrimentum, Latin.] That which feeds or nourishes; food; aliment.
This slave
Has my lord's meat in him,
Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment? Shakespeare.

The stomach returns what it has received, in strength and nutriment, diffused into all the parts of the body. South.

Does not the body thrive and grow,
By food of twenty years ago?
And is not virtue in mankind,
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift's Miscell.

NUTRIMENTAL. adj. [from nutriment.] Having the qualities of food; alimental.
By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digestion as an emulsion. Arb.

NUTRITION. n. f. [from nutritio, nutria, Lat. nutrition, Fr.] The act or quality of nourishing, supporting strength, or encreasing growth.
New parts are added to our substance to supply our continual decayings; nor can we give a certain account how the aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is so regularly distributed. Glauc. Scip. c. iii.

The obstruction of the glands of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in those glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment before it mixeth with the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot. Pope.

NUTRITIOUS. adj. [from nutritio, Latin.] Having the quality of nourishing. O may'st thou often see Thy furrows whiten'd by the woolly rain. Philips.

Nutritious! secret nitre lurks within.
The heat equal to incubation is only nutritious; and the nutritious juice itself resembles the white of an egg in all its qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

NUTRITIVE. adj. [from nutritio, Latin.] Nourishing; nutritive; alimental.

NUTRITURE. n. f. [from nutritio, Latin.] The power of nourishing.
Never make a meal of flesh alone, have some other meat with it of less nutriture. Harvey on Consump.

TO NUTZLE. v. a. [This word, in its original signification, seems corrupted from nurse; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers supposed it to come from nozzle or nose, and in that sense used it.]

1. To nurse; to foster.
Old men long nuzzled in corruption, scorning them that would seek reformation. Sidney.
2. To go with the nose down like a hog.
He charged through an army of lawyers, sometimes with sword in hand, at other times nuzzling like an eel in the mud. Arbutnot's John Bull.

Sir Roger shook his ears, and nuzzled along, well satisfied that he was doing a charitable work. Arb. J. Bull.

OAK

O Has in English a long sound; as, drone, groan, stone, alone, cloak, broke, coal, droll; or short, got, knot, shot, prong, long. It is usually denoted long by a fervile a subjoined; as, mean, or by e at the end of the syllable; as, bone: when these vowels are not appended, it is generally short, except before ll; as, droll, scoll, and even then sometimes short; as, loll.

1. O is used as an interjection of wishing or exclamation. O that we, who have resisted all the designs of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger! Decay of Piety. O! were he present, that his eyes and hands might see, and urge, the death which he commands. Dryden.

2. O is used with no great elegance by Shakespeare for a circle or oval.

Can this cockpit hold
The vasty field of France? or may we cram Within this wooden O, the very casks
That did affright the air at Agincourt? Shakespeare.

OAF. n. f. [This word is variously written; auff, oft, and opb; it seems a corruption of ouph, a demon or fairy, in German als, from which elf; and means properly the flame with changeling; a foolish child left by malevolent ouphs or fairies, in the place of one more witty, which they steal away.]

1. A changeling; a foolish child left by the fairies. These, when a child happens to be got,
Which after proves an idiot,
When folk perceive it thrive not,
The fault therein to smother:
Some silly doating brainless calf,
That understands things by the half,
Says that the fairy left this oaf,
And took away the other. Drayt, Nymphid.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot.

OA'FISH. adj. [from oaf.] Stupid; dull; doltish.

OA'FISHNESS. n. f. [from oafish.] Stupidity; dullness.

OAK. n. f. [ac, æc, Saxon; which, says Skinner, to shew how easy it is to play the fool, under a shew of literature and deep researches, I will, for the diversion of my reader, derive from ōmos, a house; the oak being the best timber for building. Skinner seems to have had Junius in his thoughts, who on this very word has shewn his usual fondness for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. Ac or oak, says the grave critic, signified among the Saxons, like robur among the Latins, not only an oak but strength, and may be well enough derived, non incommode deduci potest, from ἄλξ, strength; by taking the three first letters and then sinking the λ, as is not uncommon.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which consist of a great number of small slender threads. The embryos, which produced at remote distances from these on the same tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard scaly cups: the leaves are sinuated. The species are five. Miller.

Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brows along this wood. Shakespeare.

No tree beareth so many bastard fruits as the oak: for besides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, sticking close to the body of the tree without stalk. Bacon's Nat. History.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up and spreads by flow degrees:
Three centuries he grows, and three he lays Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dryden.

An oak growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lopped, is still the same oak. Locke.

A light earthy, stony, and sparry matter, incruited and affixed to oak leaves. Woodward on Foss.

In the days of Homer every grove, river, fountain, and

OAR

oak tree, were thought to have their peculiar deities. Odys.

Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber and the balmy tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.

OAK. [Evergreen.] The leaves are, for the most part, indented, or sinuated, and in some the edges of the leaves are prickly, and are evergreen: it hath amentaceous flowers, which are produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree: the fruit is an acorn like the common oak. The wood of this tree is accounted very good for many sorts of tools and utensils; and affords the most durable charcoal in the world. Miller.

OAKAPPLE. n. f. [oak and apple.] A kind of spongy excrescence on the oak.

Another kind of excrescence is an exudation of plants joined with putrefaction, as in sapapples, which are found chiefly upon the leaves of oaks. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

OAKEN. adj. [from oak.] Made of oak; gathered from oak. No nation doth equal England for oaken timber wherewith to build ships. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

By lot from Jove I am the pow'r
Of this fair wood, and live in oaken bow'r. Milton.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

An oaken garland to be worn on festivals, was the recompense of one who had covered a citizen in battle. Adelphi.

He snatched a good tough oaken cudgel, and began to brandish it. Arbutnot's J. Bull.

OAKENPIN. n. f. An apple. Oakenpin, so called from its hardness, is a lasting fruit, yields excellent liquor, and is near the nature of the West-bury apple, though not in form. Mortimer.

OAKUM. n. f. [A word probably formed by some corruption.] Cords untwisted and reduced to hemp, with which, mingled with pitch, leaks are stopp'd.

They make their oakum, wherewith they chalk the seams of the ships, of old sear and weather beaten ropes, when they are over spent and grown to rotten as they serve for no other use but to make rotten oakum, which moulders and wastes away with every sea as the ships labour and are tossed. Ral.

Some drive old oakum thro' each seam and rift;
Their left hand does the calking-iron guide;
The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden.

OAR. n. f. [ape, Saxon; perhaps by allusion to the common expression of plowing the water, from the same root with oar, to plow, ara, Lat.] A long pole with a broad end, by which vessels are driven in the water, the resistance made by water to the oar pushing on the vessel.

The oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water which they beat, to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. Shakespeare, Jul. Cesar.

So tow'rd's a ship the oar-fin'd galleys ply,
Which wanting sea to ride, or wind to fly,
Stands but to fall reveng'd. Danham's Penn.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian, on the stream did glide,
E'er sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did lean,
Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryden.

Its progressive motion may be effected by the help of several oars, which in the outward ends of them shall be like the fins of a fish to contract and dilate. Willian.

To OAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To row. He more undaunted on the ruin rode,
And oar'd with labouring arms along the flood. Pope.

To OAR. v. a. To impel by rowing. His bold head

'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lusty strokes
To th' shore. Shakespeare's Tempest.

O'RY.

OBD

O'RY. adj. [from oer.] Having the form or use of oars. His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet,
In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.

The swan with arched neck,
Between her white wings mantling, proudly rows
Her state with oary feet. Milton.

OAST. n. f. A kiln. Not in use. Empty the binn into a hog-bag, and carry them immediately to the oast or kiln, to be dried. Mortimer.

OATCAKE. n. f. [oat and cake.] Cake made of the meal of oats.

Take a blue stone they make haver or oatcakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peacbam.

OATEN. adj. [from oat.] Made of oats; bearing oats. When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks. Shakespeare.

OATH. n. f. [aith, Gothick; as, Saxon. The distance between the noun oath, and the verb swear, is very observable, as it may shew that our oldest dialect is formed from different languages.] An affirmation, negation, or promise, corroborated by the attestation of the Divine Being. Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou then didst rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths Descended into perjury to love me. Shakespeare.

He that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilts as I am a soldier. —An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate. Shakespeare.

We have consultations, which inventions shall be published, which not: and take an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret. Bacon.

Those called to any office of trust, are bound by an oath to the faithful discharge of it: but an oath is an appeal to God, and therefore can have no influence, except upon those who believe that he is. Swift.

OATHABLE. adj. [from oath.] A word not used.] Capable of having an oath administered. You're not oathable, Altho' I know you'll swear
Into strong shudders th' immortal gods. Shakespeare.

OATHEREAKING. n. f. [oath and break.] Perjury; the violation of an oath. His oathbreaking he mended thus,
By now forswearing that he is forsworn. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

OATMALT. n. f. [oat and malt.] Malt made of oats. In Kent they brew with one half oatmalt, and the other half barley-malt. Mortimer's Husband.

OATMEAL. n. f. [oat and meal.] Flower made by grinding oats. Oatmeal and butter, outwardly applied, dry the scab on the head. Arbutnot on Allment.

Our neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
Of aches, leather, oatmeal, bran, and chalk. Gay.

OATMEAL. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

OATS. n. f. [acen, Saxon.] A grain, which in England is generally given to horses, but in Scotland supports the people. It is of the grass leaved tribe; the flowers have no petals, and are disposed in a loose panicle: the grain is eatable. The meal makes tolerable good bread. Miller.

The oats have eaten the horses. It is bare mechanism, no otherwise produced than the turning of a wild oatweard, by the insinuation of the particles of moisture. Locke.

For your lean cattle, fodder them with barley straw first, and the oat straw last. Mortimer's Husbandry.

His horse's allowance of oats and beans, was greater than the journey required. Swift.

OATTHISTLE. n. f. [oat and thistle.] An herb. Ainsworth.

OAMBULATION. n. f. [obambulation, from obambulo, Latin.] The act of walking about. Diér.

To OBDUCE. v. a. [obduco, Latin.] To draw over as a covering. No animal exhibits its face in the native colour of its skin but man; all others are covered with feathers, hair, or a cortex that is obduced over the cutis. Hale.

OBDUCTION. n. f. [from obductio, obduco, Latin.] The act of covering, or laying a cover. Swift.

OBDRUACY. n. f. [from obdrure.] Inflexible wickedness; impenitence; hardness of heart. Thou think'st me as far in the Devil's book, as thou and Fallstaff, for obdruracy and perfidy. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

God may, by a mighty grace, hinder the absolute completion of sin in final obdruracy. South's Sermon.

OBDRURATE. adj. [obdruratus, Latin.] 1. Hard of heart; inflexibly obstinate in ill; hardened; impenitent. Oh! let me teach thee for thy father's sake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee;
Be not obdrurate, open thy deaf ears. Shakespeare.

If when you make your prayers,
Oh! let me teach thee for thy father's sake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee;
Be not obdrurate, open thy deaf ears. Shakespeare.

Bartholomew my page,
See drest in all suits like a lady;
Then call him Madam, do him all obdrurace. Shakespeare.

Bathsheba bowed and did obdrurace unto the king. 1 K. i. 16.

God should be so obdrurate as yourselves, Shakespeare.
How would it fare with your departed souls?
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdrurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakespeare.
To convince the proud what signs avail,
Or wonders move th' obdrurate to relent;
They harden'd more, by what might more reclaim. Milton.
Obdrurate as you are, oh! hear at least
My dying prayers, and grant my last request. Dryden.

2. Hardened; firm; stubborn. Sometimes the very custom of evil makes the heart obdrurate against whatsoever instructions to the contrary. Hooker.

A pleasing forcery could charm
Pain for a while, or anguish, and excite Fallacious hope, or arm th' obdrurate braist
With stubborn patience, as with triple steel. Milton.

No such thought ever strikes his marble, obdrurate heart, but it presently flies off and rebounds from it. It is impossible for a man to be thorough-paced in ingratitude, till he has shook off all fetters of pity and compassion. South.

3. Harsh; rugged. They joined the most obdrurate consonants without one intervening vowel. Swift.

OBDRURATELY. adv. [from obdrurate.] Stubbornly; inflexibly; impenitently. Swift.

OBDRURATENESS. n. f. [from obdrurate.] Stubbornness; inflexibility; impenitence.

OBDRURATION. n. f. [from obdrurate.] Hardness of heart; stubbornness.

What occasion it had given them to think, to their greater obdruration in evil, that through a froward and wanton desire of innovation, we did constrainedly those things, for which conscience was pretended? Hooker, b. iv.

OBDRURED. adj. [obdruratus, Latin.] Hardened; inflexible; impenitent. This saw his hapless foes, but stood obdrur'd,
And to rebellious fight rallied their pow'rs Infensate. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

OBE'DIENCE. n. f. [obediencia, Fr. obedientia, Latin.] Obedience; submission to authority; compliance with command or prohibition. If you violently proceed against him, it would shake in pieces the heart of his obediencia. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Thy husband
Craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obediencia. Shakespeare.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obediencia unto righteousness. Rom. vi. 16.

It was both a strange commission, and a strange obediencia to a commission, for men so furiously assailed, to hold their hands. Bacon's War with Spain.

Nor can this be,
But by fulfilling that which thou didst want,
Obediencia to the law of God, impos'd
On penalty of death. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

OBE'DIENT. adj. [obediens, Latin.] Submissive to authority; compliant with command or prohibition; obsequious. To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obediens in all things. 2 Cor. ii. 9.

To this her mother's plot
She, seemingly obediens, likewise hath Made promise. Shakespeare, M. IV. of Wind.

He humbled himself, and became obediens unto death. Phil. ii. 8.

Religion hath a good influence upon the people, to make them obediens to government, and peaceable one towards another. Tillotson, Sermon. 3.

The chief his orders gives, th' obediens band,
With due observance, wait the chief's command. Pope.

OBE'DIENTIAL. adj. [obediens, Latin.] Accorded to the rule of obedience. Faith is such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediens submission to the command. Hammond.

Faith is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiducial submission to the gospel has revealed, and an obediens submission to the commands. Wake's Prep. for Death.

OBE'DIENTLY. adv. [from obediens.] With obedience. We should behave ourselves reverently and obediens towards the Divine Majesty, and justly and charitably towards men. Tillotson.

OBE'ISANCE. n. f. [obeisance, Fr. This word is formed by corruption from obaisance, an act of reverence.] A bow; a courtesy; an act of reverence made by inclination of the body or knee. Bartholomew my page,
See drest in all suits like a lady;
Then call him Madam, do him all obeisance. Shakespeare.

Bathsheba bowed and did obeisance unto the king. 1 K. i. 16.

OBJ

- The lords and ladies paid
Their homage, with a low obsequence made;
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.
- OBELISK. n. f. [obeliscus, Latin.]
1. A magnificent high piece of solid marble, or other fine stone, having usually four faces, and lessening upwards by degrees, till it ends in a point like a pyramid. Harris.
Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd. Pope.
2. A mark of censure in the margin of a book, in the form of a dagger [†].
He published the translation of the Septuagint, having compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what redundant. Grew.
OBEQUITATION. n. f. [from obsequio, Latin.] The act of riding about.
OBERRATION. n. f. [from oberrare, Latin.] The act of wandering about.
OBESE. adj. [obesus, Latin.] Fat; loaden with flesh.
OBESENES. n. f. [from obese.] Morbid fatness; incumbrance of flesh.
On these many diseases depend; as on the straitness of the chest, a phthisis; on the largeness of the veins, an atrophy; on their smallness, obesity. Grew's Colloq. b. ii.
TO OBEY. v. a. [obeyre, French; obedi, Latin.]
1. To pay submission to; to comply with, from reverence to authority.
The will of heav'n
Be done in this and all things! I obey. Shakef. Hen. VIII.
I am asham'd, that women are so simple
To seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shakef.
Let not sin reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof. Rom. vi. 12.
Was the thy God, that her thou didst obey,
Before his voice? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Africa and India shall his pow'r obey,
He shall extend his propagated sway
Beyond the solar year, without the starry way. Dryden.
2. It had formerly sometimes to before the person obeyed, which Addison has mentioned as one of Milton's latinisms; but it is frequent in old writers; when we borrowed the French word we borrowed the syntax, obey au roi.
He commanded the trumpets to found; to which the two brave knights obeying, they performed their courses, breaking their slaves. Sidney.
The fit bark, obeying to her mind,
Forth launched quickly, as the did desire. Fairy Q.
His servants ye are, to whom ye obey. Rom. vi. 16.
Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel,
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milton.
OBJECT. n. f. [object, Fr. objectum, Latin.]
1. That about which any power or faculty is employed.
Pardon
The flat unrais'd spirit, that hath dar'd,
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object. Shakespeare's Henry V.
They are her farthest reaching instrument,
Yet they no beams unto their objects send;
But all the rays are from their objects sent,
And in the eyes with pointed angles end. Davies.
The object of true faith is, either God himself, or the word of God: God who is believed in, and the word of God as the rule of faith, or matter to be believed. Hamm.
Those things in ourselves, are the only proper objects of our zeal, which, in others, are the unquestionable subjects of our praises. Sprat's Sermon.
Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of the will. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. Something presented to the senses to raise any affection or emotion in the mind.
Dis honour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object. Shakef.
Why else this double object in our fight,
Of sight pursu'd in the air, and o'er the ground. Milton.
Of sight pursu'd in the air, and o'er the ground, at the sight of so moving an object, and therefore withdrew. Atterbury.
3. [In grammar.] Any thing influenced by somewhat else.
The accusative after a verb transitive, or a sentence in room thereof, is called, by grammarians, the object of the verb. Clarke's Latin Grammar.
OBJECTGLASS. n. f. Glass remotest from the eye.
An objectglass of a telescope I once mended, by grinding it on pitch with putty, and leaning easily on it in the grinding, lest the putty should scratch it. Newt. Opt.
TO OBJECT. v. a. [objecter, Fr. objicere, Latin.]
1. To oppose; to present in opposition.
Flowers growing scattered in divers beds, will shew more so as that they be object to view at once. Bacon.

OBL

- Pallas to their eyes
The mist objected, and condens'd the skies. Pope.
2. To propose as a charge criminal; or a reason adverse: with to or against.
Were it not some kind of blemish to be like unto Infidels and Heathens, it would not so usually be objected; men would not think it any advantage in the cause of religion to be able therewith justly to charge their adversaries. Harris.
The book requireth due examination, and giveth liberty to object any crime against any such as are to be ordered. White.
Men in all deliberations find ease to be of the negative side, and affect a credit to object and foretell difficulties; for when propositions are denied, there is an end of them; but if they be allowed, it requireth a new work; which false point of wisdom is the bane of business. Bacon.
This the adversaries of faith have too much reason to object against too many of its professors; but against the faith itself nothing at all. Sprat's Sermon.
It was objected against a late painter, that he drew many graceful pictures, but few of them were like. Dryden.
Others object the poverty of the nation, and difficulties in furnishing greater supplies. Addison's State of the War.
There was but this single fault that Erasmus, though an enemy, could object to him. Atterbury.
OBJECTION. n. f. [objection, Fr. objection, Latin.]
1. The act of presenting any thing in opposition.
2. Criminal charge.
Speak on, Sir,
I dare your worst objections. Shakef. Henry VIII.
3. Adverse argument.
There is ever between all estates a secret war. I know well this speech is the objection and not the decision; and that it is after refused. Bacon's War with Spain.
Whoever makes such objections against an hypothesis, hath a right to be heard, let his temper and genius be what it will. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. Fault found.
I have shewn your verses to some, who have made that objection to them. Walpole's Letter.
OBJECTIVE. adj. [objectif, Fr. objectus, Latin.]
1. Belonging to the object; contained in the object.
Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, the other in our minds. Watson's Logic.
2. Made an object; proposed as an object.
If this one small piece of nature still affords new matter for our discovery, when should we be able to search out the vast treasures of objective knowledge that lies within the compass of the universe? Hale's Origin of Man.
OBJECTIVELY. adv. [from objective.]
1. In manner of an object.
This may fitly be called a determinate idea, when, such as it is at any time objectively in the mind, it is annexed, and without variation determined to an articulate sound, which is to be steadily the sign of that very same object of the mind. Locke's Epistle to the Reader.
2. In a state of opposition.
The basilisk should be destroyed, in regard he first receives the rays of his antipathy and venomous emission, which objectively move his sense. Brown's V. Err.
OBJECTIVENESS. n. f. [from objective.] The state of being an object.
Is there such a motion or objectiveness of external bodies, which produceth light? The faculty of light is fitted to receive that impression or objectiveness, and that objectively fitted to that faculty. Hale's Origin of Man.
OBJECTOR. n. f. [from object.] One who offers objections; one who raises difficulties.
But these objectors must the cause upbraid,
That has not mortal man, immortal made. Blount.
Let the objectors consider, that these irregularities must have come from the laws of mechanism. Bentley's Sermon.
OBJURGATE. v. a. [objurgare, Latin.] To chide; to reprove.
OBJURATION. n. f. [objurgatio, Lat.] Reproof; reprehension.
If there be no true liberty, but all things come to pass by inevitable necessity, then what are all interrogations and objurgations, and reprehensions and expostulations? Brown.
OBJURGATORY. adj. [objurgatorius, Latin.] Reprehensory; culpatory; chiding.
OBLATE. adj. [oblatus, Latin.] Flatted at the poles. Used of a spheroid.
By gravitation bodies on this globe will press towards its center, though not exactly thither, by reason of the oblate spheroid.

OBL

- spheroidal figure of the earth, arising from its diurnal rotation about its axis. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
OBLATION. n. f. [oblation, Fr. oblatus, Latin.] An offering; a sacrifice; any thing offered as an act of worship or reverence. With that the looked upon the picture before her, and with straight sighs, and straight tears followed, as if the idol of duty ought to be honoured with such oblations. Sidney.
Many conceive in this oblation, not a natural but a civil kind of death, and a separation from the world. Brown.
The will gives worth to the oblation, as to God's acceptance, sets the poorest giver upon the same level with the richest. South's Sermons.
I with
The kind oblation of a falling tear. Dryden.
Behold the coward, and the brave,
All make oblations at this shrine. Swift's Poems.
OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, Lat.] Delight; pleasure.
TO OBLIGATE. v. a. [obligare, Latin.] To bind by contract or duty.
OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, from oblige, Lat. obligation, Fr.]
1. The binding power of any oath, vow, duty, contract.
Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term,
To do obsequious sorrow. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
There was no means for him as a christian, to satisfy all obligations both to God and man, but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace. Bacon's Henry VII.
The better to satisfy this double obligation, you have early cultivated the genius you have to arms. Dryden.
No ties can bind, that from constraint arise,
Where either's forc'd, all obligation dies. Granville.
2. An act which binds any man to some performance.
The heir of an obliged person is not bound to make restitution, if the obligation passed only by a personal act; but if it passed from his person to his estate, then the estate passes with all its burthen. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
3. Favour by which one is bound to gratitude.
Where is the obligation of any man's making me a present of what he does not care for himself? L'Estrange.
So quick a sense did the Israelites entertain of the merits of Gideon, and the obligation he had laid upon them, that they tender him the regal and hereditary government of that people. South's Sermons.
OBLIGATORY. adj. [obligatio, Fr. from obligare.] Imposing an obligation; binding; coercive; with to or on.
And concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to Christian princes and states. Bac.
As long as the law is obligatory, so long our obedience is due. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
A people long used to hardships, look upon themselves as creatures at mercy, and that all impositions laid on them by a stronger hand, are legal and obligatory. Swift.
If this patent is obligatory on them, it is contrary to acts of parliament, and therefore void. Swift.
TO OBLIGE. v. a. [oblige, Fr. oblige, Latin.]
1. To bind; to impose obligation; to compel to something.
Religion oblige men to the practice of those virtues which conduce to the preservation of our health. Tillotson.
The law must oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed; if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law. Rogers, Sermon 15.
2. To induce; to lay obligations of gratitude.
He that depends upon another, must oblige his honour with a boundless trust. Waller.
Since love oblige not, I from this hour
Assume the right of man's despotic power.
Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But drop from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light.
Thus man by his own strength to heaven would soar,
And would not be oblig'd to God for more. Dryden.
When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits or to the scaffold or the cell.
To those hills we are oblig'd for all our metals, and with them for all the conveniences and comforts of life. Bentley.
3. To please; to gratify.
A great man gets more by obliging his inferiour, than by disdaining him; as a man has a greater advantage by sowing and dressing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it. South's Sermons.
Some natures are so sour and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Estrange.
Happy the people, who preserve their honour
By the same duties that oblige their prince! Add. Cato.
OBLIGED. n. f. [from oblige.] The person bound by a legal or written contract.
OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligement, French.] Obligation.

OBL

- I will not resist, whatever it is, either of divine or human obligation, that you lay upon me. Milton's Education.
Let this fair prince's but one minute stay,
A look from her will your obligements pay. Dryden.
OBLIGER. n. f. He who binds by contract.
OBLIGING. part. adj. [obligant, Fr. from oblige.] Civil; compliant; respectful; engaging.
Nothing could be more obliging and respectful than the lion's letter was; in appearance; but there was death in the true intent. L'Estrange, Fab. 54.
Monsieur Strozzi has many curiosities, and is very obliging to a stranger who desires the sight of them. Addison.
Obliging creatures! make me see
All that disgrac'd my betters, met in me. Pope.
So obliging that he ne'er oblig'd. Pope.
OBLIGINGLY. adv. [from obliging.] Civilly; complaisantly.
Eugenius informs me very obligingly, that he never thought he should have disliked any passage in my paper. Addison.
I see her taste each nauseous draught,
And so obligingly am caught;
I bless the hand from whence they came;
Nor dare distort my face for shame. Swift's Miscell.
OBLIGINGNESS. n. f. [from obliging.]
1. Obligation; force.
They look into them not to weigh the obligingness, but to quarrel the difficulty of the injunctions: not to direct practice, but excuse prevarications. Decay of Piety.
2. Civility; complaisance.
OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, from oblige, Latin.] Declination from perpendicularity; obliquity.
The change made by the obligation of the eyes, is least in colours of the densest than in thin substances. Newt. Opt.
OBLIQUE. adj. [oblique, Fr. obliquus, Latin.]
1. Not direct; not perpendicular; not parallel.
One by his view
Mought deem him born with ill-dispos'd skies,
When oblique Saturn sat in the house of th' agonies. Fairy Q.
If found be stopped and repercussed, it cometh about on the other side in an oblique line. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
May they not pity us, condemn'd to bear
The various heav'n of an oblique sphere;
While by fix'd laws, and with a just return,
They feel twelve hours that shade, for twelve that burn. Prior.
Bavaria's stars must be accus'd which shone
That fatal day the mighty work was done,
With rays oblique upon the gallic sun. Prior.
It has a direction oblique to that of the former motion. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
Criticks form a general character from the observation of particular errors, taken in their own oblique or imperfect views; which is as unjust, as to make a judgment of the beauty of a man's body, from the shade it casts in such and such a position. Notes on the Odyssey.
2. Not direct. Used of sense.
Has he given the lie
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel; you must challenge him. Shakef.
3. [In grammar.] Any case in nouns except the nominative.
OBLIQUELY. adv. [from oblique.]
1. Not directly; not perpendicularly.
Of meridian altitude, it hath but twenty-three degrees, so that it plays but obliquely upon us, and as the sun doth about the twenty-third of January. Brown's Vulgar Err.
Declining from the noon of day,
The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray. Po. Ra. Locke.
2. Not in the immediate or direct meaning.
His discourse tends obliquely to the detracting from others, or the extolling of himself. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 255.
OBLIQUENESS. n. f. [obliquitas, Fr. from oblique.]
OBLIQUITY. n. f. [obliquitas, Fr. from oblique.]
1. Deviation from physical rectitude; deviation from parallelism or perpendicularity.
Which else to several spheres thou must ascribe, Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities. Milt. P. L. 231.
2. Deviation from moral rectitude.
There is in rectitude, beauty; as contrariwise in obliquity, deformity. Hosker, b. i. f. 8.
Count Rhodophill cut out for government and high affairs, and balancing all matters in the scales of his high understanding, hath rectified all obliquities. Hosker's Local For.
For a rational creature to conform himself to the will of God in all things, carries in it a rational rectitude or goodness; and to disobey or oppose his will in any thing, imports a moral obliquity. South's Sermons.
TO OBLITERATE. v. a. [obliterare, ob and littera, Latin.]
1. To efface any thing written.
2. To wear out; to destroy; to efface.
Wars and desolations obliterate many ancient monuments. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
Let men consider themselves as enlivened in that unhappy contract, 4

OBN

contract, which has rendered them part of the Devil's possession, and contrive how they may obliterate that reproach, and disentangle their mortgaged souls. Decay of Piety.

These simple ideas, the understanding can no more refuse to have, or alter, or blot them out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate the images, which the objects set before it produce. Locke.

OBLITERATION. n. f. [obliteratio, Latin.] Effacement; extinction.

Considering the casualties of wars, transigrations, especially that of the general flood, there might probably be an obliteration of all those monuments of antiquity that ages precedent at some time have yielded. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

OBLIVION. n. f. [oblivio, Latin.]

1. Forgetfulness; cessation of remembrance.

Water-drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are graced
To dusty nothing. Shaksp. Troil. and Cressida.

Thou shouldst have heard many things of worthy memory,
Which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.

Knowledge is made by oblivion, and to purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown's Vulgar Err. Pref.

Can they imagine, that God has therefore forgot their sins, because they are not willing to remember them? Or will they measure his pardon by their own oblivion. South.

Among our crimes oblivion may be set;

But 'tis our king's perfection to forget. Dryden.

2. Amnesia; general pardon of crimes in a state.

By the act of oblivion, all offences against the crown, and all particular trespasses between subject and subject, were pardoned, remitted, and utterly extinguished. Davies.

OBLIVIOUS. adj. [obliviosus, Latin.] Causing forgetfulness.

Raze out the written troubles of the brain,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote Cleanse the stuff'd bosom. Shaksp. Macbeth.

The British souls
Exult to see the crouching ghosts descend Unnumber'd; well aveng'd, they quit the cares
Of mortal life, and drink th' oblivious lake. Philips.

Oh born to see what none can see awake!

Behold the wonders of th' oblivious lake. Pope's Dunci.

OBLONG. adj. [oblong, Fr. oblongus, Latin.] Longer than broad; the same with a rectangle parallelogram, whose sides are unequal. Harr.

The best figure of a garden I esteem an oblong upon a defect. Temple's Miscell.

Every particle, supposing them globular or not very oblong, would be above nine million times their own length from any other particle. Bentley's Sermons.

OBLONGLY. adv. [from oblong.] In an oblong direction.

The surface of the temperate climates is larger than it would have been, had the globe of our earth or of the planets, been either spherical, or oblongly spheroidal. Cheyne.

OBLONGNESS. n. f. [from oblong.] The state of being oblong.

OBLIQUE. n. f. [obliquus, Latin.]

1. Cenforious speech; blame; slander; reproach.

Reasonable moderation hath freed us from being deserv'dly subject unto that bitter kind of obloquy, whereby as the church of Rome doth, under the colour of love towards those things which be harmless, maintain extremely most hurtful corruptions; so we peradventure might be upbraided, that under colour of hatred towards those things that are corrupt, we are on the other side as extreme, even against most harmless ordinances. Hosker, b. iv. f. 14.

Here new aspersions, with new obloquies,

Are laid on old defects. Daniel's Civil War.

Canst thou with impious obloquy condemn

The just decree of God, pronounce'd and sworn? Milton.

Shall names that made your city the glory of the earth, be mentioned with obloquy and detraction? Addison.

Every age might perhaps produce one or two true genius, if they were not sunk under the censure and obloquy of plodding, servile, imitating pedants. Swift.

2. Cause of reproach; disgrace. Not proper.

My chastity's the jewel of our house,

Bequeathed down from many ancestors;

Which were the greatest obloquy i'th' world

In me to lose. Shaksp. As You Like It.

OBMUTESCENCE. n. f. [from obmutescere, Latin.] Loss of speech.

A vehement fear often produceth obmutescence. Brown.

OBNOXIOUS. n. f. [obnoxius, Latin.]

1. Subject.

I propound a character of justice in a middle form, between the speculative discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers, which are tied and obnoxious to their particular laws. Bacon's Holy War.

2. Liable to punishment.

OBS

All are obnoxious, and this faulty land,
Like fainting Hester, does before you stand,
Watching your sceptre.

We know ourselves obnoxious to God's severe justice, and that he is a God of mercy and hatred sin; and therefore that we might not have the least suspicion of his unwillingness to forgive, he hath sent his only begotten son into the world, by his dismal sufferings and cursed death, to expiate our offences.

Culamy's Sermons.

Thy name, O Varus, if the kinder pow'rs

Preserve our plains, and shield the Mantuan tow'rs,

Obnoxious by Cremona's neighb'ring crime,

The wings of swans, and stronger pinion'd rhyme

Shall raise aloft. Dryd.

3. Liable; exposed.

Long hostility had made their friendship weak in itself, and more obnoxious to jealousies and distrusts. Hayward.

But what will not ambition and revenge

Defend to? who aspires, must down as low

As high he soar'd; obnoxious first or last,

To basest things. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To dew's obnoxious on the grassy floor. Dryden.

OBNOXIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obnoxius.] Subjection; liable-ness to punishment.

OBNOXIOUSLY. adv. [from obnoxius.] In a state of subjection, in the state of one liable to punishment.

To OBNUBILATE. v. a. [obnubilare, Latin.] To cloud; to obscure.

O'BOLE. n. f. [obolus, Lat.] In pharmacy, twelve grains. Boyl.

OBREPTION. n. f. [obreptio, Latin.] The act of creeping on.

To OBRIGATE. v. a. [obligare, Lat.] To proclaim a contrary law for the dissolution of the former. Dia.

OBSCENE. adj. [obscene, Fr. obsceneus, Latin.]

1. Immodest; not agreeable to chastity of mind; causing low ideas.

Chemos th' obscene dread of Moab's sons. Milton.

Words that were once chaste, by frequent use grow obscene and uncleanly. Watts's Logic.

2. Offensive; disgusting.

A girdle foul with grease binds his obscene attire. Dryden.

Home as they went, the sad discourse renew'd,

Of the relentless dame to death pursu'd,

And of the fight obscene so lately view'd. Dryden.

3. Inauspicious; ill omen'd.

Care shuns thy walks, as at the cheerful light

The groaning ghosts, and birds obscene take flight. Dryd.

It is the sun's late like your's, to be displeasing to divin and obscene animals, who cannot bear his lustre. Pope's Lett.

OBSCENELX. adj. [from obscene.] In an impure and unchaste manner.

OBSCENENESS. n. f. [obscenitas, Fr. from obscene.] Impurity of

OBSCENITY. n. f. [obscenitas, Fr. from obscene.] Impurity of thought or language; unchastity; lewdness.

Mr. Cowley asserts plainly, that obscenity has no place in

wit. Dryden.

Those fables were temper'd with the Italian severity, and free from any note of infamy or obscenity. Dryden.

Thou art wickedly devout,

In Tiber ducking thrice by break of day,

To wash th' obscenities of night away. Dryden.

No pardon vile obscenity should find,

Tho' wit and art conspire to move your mind. Pope.

OBSCURATION. n. f. [obscuration, Lat.]

1. The act of darkening.

As to the sun and moon, their obscuration or change of colour happens commonly before the eruption of a fiery mountain. Barnet.

2. A state of being darkened.

OBSCURE. adj. [obscurus, Fr. obscurus, Latin.]

1. Dark; unlightened; gloomy; hindring light.

Who's curst his father or mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness. Prov. xx. 20.

Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet

The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,

And thro' the palpable obscure find out

His uncouth way? Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Living in the dark.

The obscure bird clamour'd the live-long night. Shaksp.

3. Not easily intelligible; abstruse; difficult.

I explain some of the most obscure passages, and those which are most necessary to be understood, and this according to the manner wherein he used to express himself. Dryd.

4. Not noted; not observable.

He says, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

To OBSCURE. v. a. [obscurare, Latin.]

1. To darken; to make dark.

Sudden the thunder blackens all the skies,

And the winds whistle, and the furies roll

Mountains on mountains, and obscure the pole. Pope.

2. To

OBS

2. To make less visible.

They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights; which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shaksp.

What must I hold a candle to my flames?

They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.

Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,

And I should be obscur'd. Shaksp. M. of Venice.

Thinking by this retirement to obscure himself from God, he infringed the omniscience and essential ubiquity of his maker. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. To make less intelligible.

By private consent it hath been used in dangerous times to obscure writing, and make it hard to be read by others not acquainted with the intrigue. Holder.

There is scarce any duty which has been so obscured by the writings of learned men, as this. Wake.

4. To make less glorious, beautiful, or illustrious.

Think'st thou, vain spirit, thy glories are the same,

And seest not how by thy ungrateful pride,

That shows me what thy faded looks did hide. Dryden.

OBSCURELY. adv. [from obscurus.]

1. Not brightly; not luminously.

2. Out of light; privately; without notice; not conspicuously.

Such was the rise of this prodigious fire,

Which in mean buildings first obscurely bred,

From thence did soon to open streets aspire. Dryden.

There live retir'd,

Content thyself to be obscurely good. Addison's Cato.

Let him go, pursued by silent wrath,

Meet unexpected daggers in his way,

And in some distant land obscurely die. Irene.

3. Not clearly; not plainly.

OBSCURENESS. n. f. [obscuritas, Lat. obscuritas, Fr.]

OBSCURITY. n. f. [obscuritas, Lat. obscuritas, Fr.]

1. Darkness; want of light.

Lo! a day of darkness and obscurity, tribulation and anguish, upon the earth. Esther xi. 8.

Should Cynthia quit thee, Venus, and each star,

It would not form one thought dark as mine are:

I could lend them obscurer now, and say,

Out of myself there should be no more day. Dennis.

2. Unnoticed state; privacy.

You are not for obscurity design'd,

But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind. Dryd.

3. Darkness of meaning.

Not to mention that obscurer that attends prophetic raptures, there are divers things knowable by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure. Boyle on Colours.

That this part of sacred scripture had difficulties in it:

many causes of obscurity did readily occur to me. Lacke.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the indeterminate confusion of a negative idea, wherein I know I do not comprehend all I would,

it being too large for a finite capacity. Lacke.

OBSCURATION. n. f. [obscuratio, from obscurus, Lat.] Intreaty; supplication.

That these were comprehended under the sacra, is manifest from the old form of obscuration. Stillingfleet.

OBSCURER. n. f. [obscurer, French.] I know not whether this word be not anciently mistaken for exequies, exequies,

Latin: this word, however, is apparently derived from ob-

sequium.]

1. Funeral rites; funeral solemnities.

There was Dorilus valiantly requiring his friends help, in a great battle deprived of life, his obsequies being not more solemnized by the tears of his partakers, than the blood of his enemies. Sidney, b. ii.

OBS

- Love rigid honesty
And strict observance of impartial laws. Recommen.
OBSERVANT. adj. [observans, Latin.]
1. Attentive; diligent; watchful.
These writers, which gave themselves to follow and imitate others, were observant sectators of those masters they admired. Raleigh's History of the World.
Wandering from clime to clime observant stray'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope.
2. Obedient; respectful.
We are told how observant Alexander was of his master Aristotle. Digby on the Soul, Dedicat.
3. Respectfully attentive.
She now observant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sun-set of thy various day. Pope.
4. Meanly dutiful; submissive.
How could the most base men attain to honour but by such an observant slavish course. Raleigh.
OBSERVANT. n. f. [This word has the accent on the first syllable in Shakespeare.] A slavish attendant. Not in use.
These kind of knaves in this plainness,
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty filky ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
OBSERVATION. n. f. [observatio, from observe, Lat. observatio, Fr.]
1. The act of observing, noting, or remarking.
These cannot be infused by observation, because they are the rules by which men take their first apprehensions and observations of things; as the being of the rule must be before its application to the thing directed by it. South's Sermon.
The rules of our practice are taken from the conduct of such persons as fall within our observation. Rogers.
2. Notion gained by observing; note; remark; animadversion.
In matters of human prudence, we shall find the greatest advantage by making wise observations on our conduct, and of the events attending it. Watts's Logick.
OBSERVATOR. n. f. [observator, Fr. from observe, Lat.] One that observes; a remarker.
The observer of the bills of mortality, hath given us the best account of the number that late plagues have swept away. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
She may be handsome, yet be chaste, you say,— Good observer, not to fast away. Dryden.
OBSERVATORY. n. f. [observatoire, French.] A place built for astronomical observations.
Another was found near the observatory in Greenwich Park. Woodward on Fossils.
TO OBSERVE. v. a. [observare, Fr. observe, Latin.]
1. To watch; to regard attentively.
Remember, that as thine eye observes others, so art thou observed by angels and by men. Taylor.
2. To find by attention; to note.
If our idea of infinity be got from the power we observe in ourselves, of repeating without end our own ideas, it may be demanded why we do not attribute infinity to other ideas, as well as these of space and duration. Locke.
One may observe them discourse and reason pretty well, of several other things, before they can tell twenty. Locke.
3. To regard or keep religiously.
A night to be much observed unto the Lord, for bringing them out of Egypt. Ex. xii. 42.
4. To obey; to follow.
TO OBSERVE. v. n.
1. To be attentive.
Observing men may form many judgments by the rules of similitude and proportion, where causes and effects are not entirely the same. Watts's Logick.
2. To make a remark.
Wherever I have found her notes to be wholly another's, which is the case in some hundreds, I have barely quoted the true proprietor, without observing upon it. Pope's Lett.
OBSERVER. n. f. [from observe.]
1. One who looks vigilantly on persons and things; close remaker.
He reads much;
He is a great observer; and he looks Quite thro' the deeds of men. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.
Angelo,
There is a kind of character in thy life,
That to th' observer doth thy history
Fully unfold. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
Careful observers may foretell the hour,
By sure prognostics when to dread a show'r. Swift.
2. One who looks on; the beholder.
If a flow pac'd star had stol'n away,
From the observer's markings, he might stay
Three hundred years to see't again. Dante.
Company, he thinks, lessens the shame of vice, by sharing it; and therefore, if he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it at least by a multiplicity of objects. South's Sermons.

OBS

3. One who keeps any law or custom of practice.
Many nations are superstitious, and diligent observers of old customs, which they receive by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles. Spenser on Ireland.
The king after the victory, as one that had been bred under a devout mother, and was in his nature a great observer of religious forms, caused Te Deum to be solemnly sung in the presence of the whole army upon the place. Bacon.
He was so strict an observer of his word, that no contradiction whatever could make him break it. Prior.
Himself often read useful discourses to his servants on the Lord's day, of which he was always a very strict and solemn observer. Atterbury's Sermon.
OBSERVINGLY. adv. [from observing.] Attentively; carefully.
There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out. Shakespeare, Henry V.
OBSERVATION. n. f. [observatio, Latin.]
1. The act of observing.
2. The first attack of Satan, antecedent to possession.
OBSIDIONAL. adj. [obsidionalis, Lat.] Belonging to a siege. Dial.
OBSOLETE. adj. [obsoletus, Lat.] Worn out of use; disused; unfashionable.
Obsolete words may be laudably revived, when either they are more sounding, or more significant than those in practice. Dryden's Juvenal Ded.
What if there be an old dormant statute or two against him, are they not now obsolete? Swift.
OBSOLETENESS. n. f. [from obsolete.] State of being worn out of use; unfashionableness.
OBSTACLE. n. f. [obstacle, Fr. obstacle, Lat.] Something opposed; hindrance; obstruction.
Conscience is a blushing shame-fac'd spirit,
That mutinies in a man's bosom: it fills
One full of obstacles. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
If all obstacles were cut away,
And that my path were even to the crown,
As the ripe reverence and due of birth, Disparity in age seems a greater obstacle to an intimate friendship than inequality of fortune. For the humorous, business, and diversions, of young and old, are generally very different. Collier on Friendship.
Some conjectures about the formation of land, the origin of mountains and islands, I am obliged to look into that they may not remain as obstacles to the less skillful. Woodward, Nat. Hist.
What more natural and usual obstacles to those who take voyages, than winds and storms. Pope.
OBSTETRICIAN. n. f. [from obstetricor, Lat.] The office of a midwife.
OBSTETRICK. adj. [from obstetric, Lat.] Midwifish; besetting a midwife; doing the midwife's office.
There all the learn'd shall at the labour stand,
And Douglas lend his soft obstetric hand. Dunciad, b. iv.
OBTINACY. n. f. [obstinatio, Fr. obstinatio, Lat. from obstinare.] Stubbornness; contumacy; pertinacity; perversity.
Choosing rather to use all extremities, which might drive men to desperate obstinacy, than to apply moderate remedies. King Charles.
Most writers use their words loosely and uncertainly, and do not make plain and clear deductions of words one from another, which were not difficult to do, did they not find it convenient to shelter their ignorance, or obstinacy, under the obscurity of their terms. Locke.
What crops of wit and honesty appear,
From spleen, from obstinacy, hate or fear. Pope's Ep.
OBTINATE. adj. [obstinatus, Lat.] Stubborn; contumacious; fixed in resolution. Absolutely used, it has an ill sense; but relatively, it is neutral.
The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt t' accuse it, and Disdainful to be try'd by't. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
Yield,
Except you mean with obstinate repulse,
To slay your sov'reign. Shakespeare.
I have known great cures done by obstinate resolutions of drinking no wine. Temple.
Her father did not fail to find
In all she spoke, the greatness of her mind;
Yet thought she was not obstinate to die,
Nor deem'd the death she promis'd was so nigh. Dryden.
Look on Simo's mate;
No as to meek, no as to obstinate. Pope's Ep. ii.
OBTINATELY. adv. [from obstinatus.] Stubbornly; inflexibly; with unshaken determination.
Pembroke abhorred the war as obstinately, as he loved hunting and hawking. Clarendon, b. ii.
A Greek made himself their prey,
T' impose on their belief, and Troy betray;
Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent
To die undaunted, or to circumvent, Dryden.
Inflexible

OBT

- Inflexible to ill, and obstinately just. Addison.
My spouse maintains her royal trust,
Tho' tempted chafe, and obstinately just. Pope.
OBTINATENESS. n. f. [from obstinatus.] Stubbornness.
OBTINATION. n. f. [from obstinatio, Lat.] The act of stopping up any passage.
OBTREPEROUS. adj. [obstreperus, Lat.] Loud; clamorous; noisy; turbulent; vociferous.
These obstreperous scepticks are the bane of divinity, who are so full of the spirit of contradiction, that they raise daily new disputes. Erasm's Vocal Forest.
These obstreperous villains shout, and know not for what they make a noise. Dryden.
The players do not only connive at his obstreperous approbation, but repair at their own cost whatever damages he makes. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 235.
OBTREPEROUSLY. adv. [from obstreperus.] Loudly; clamorously; noisily.
OBTREPEROUSNESS. n. f. [from obstreperus.] Loudness; clamour; noise; turbulence.
OBTRECTION. n. f. [from obstrictus, Latin.] Obligation; bond.
He hath full right t' exempt
Whom so it pleases him by choice,
From national obstriction. Milton's Agonistes.
TO OBSTRUCT. v. a. [obstruo, Lat.]
1. To hinder; to be in the way of; to block up; to bar.
He them beholding, soon
Comes down to fee their city, ere the tow'r Obstructs Heav'n-tow'rs. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Fat people are most subject to weakness in fevers, because the fat, melted by the feverish heat, obstructs the small canals. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. To oppose; to retard.
OBSTRUCTION. n. f. [from obstruo.] One that hinders or opposes.
OBSTRUCTION. n. f. [obstruction, Lat. obstruction, Fr. from obstruo.]
1. Hindrance; difficulty.
Sure God by these discoveries did design,
That his clear light thro' all the world should shine;
But the obstruction from that discord springs,
The prince of darkness makes 'twixt Christian kings. Denb.
2. Obstacle; impediment; that which hinders.
All obstructions in parliament, that is, all freedom in differing in votes, and debating matters with reason and candour, must be taken away. King Charles.
In his winter quarters the king expected to meet with all the obstructions and difficulties his enraged enemies could lay in his way. Clarendon, b. viii.
Whenever a popular assembly free from obstructions, and already possessed of more power than an equal balance will allow, shall continue to think that they have not enough, I cannot see how the same causes can produce different effects among us, from what they did in Greece and Rome. Swift.
3. [In physics.]
The blocking up of any canal in the human body, so as to prevent the flowing of any fluid through it, on account of the increased bulk of that fluid, in proportion to the diameter of the vessel. Quincy.
4. In Shakespeare it once signifies something heaped together.
Aye but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
This fenible warm motion to become A kneaded clod. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
OBSTRUCTIVE. adj. [obstructif, Fr. from obstruo.] Hindering; causing impediment.
Having thus separated this doctrine of God's predetermining all events from three other things confounded with it, it will now be discernible how noxious and obstructive this doctrine is to the superstrutting all good life. Hammond.
OBSTRUCTIVE. n. f. Impediment; obstacle.
The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification, and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it. Hammond.
OBSTRUENT. adj. [obstruens, Lat.] Hindering; blocking up.
OBSTRUENT. n. f. [obstruent, Lat.] The act of inducing stupidity, or interruption of the mental powers.
OBSTRUENT. adj. [from obstruent, Lat.] Obstructing the mental powers; stupefying.
The force of it is obstruent, and no other. Abbot.
TO OBTAIN. v. a. [obtinere, Fr. obtinere, Latin.]
1. To gain; to acquire; to procure.
May be that I may obtain children by her. Gen. xvi. 2.
We have obtained an inheritance. Eph. i. 11.
Whatever once is denied them, they are certainly not to obtain by crying. Locke's Education.
The juices of the leaves are obtained by expression, which is the nutritious juice rendered somewhat more oleaginous. Arbutnot on Aliments.

OBT

2. To impetrate; to gain by the concession of excited kindness of another.
In such our prayers cannot serve us as means to obtain the thing we desire. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.
By his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. Heb. ix. 12.
If they could not be obtained of the proud and crafty tyrant, then to conclude peace with him upon any conditions. Knolles's History of the Turks.
Some pray for riches, riches they obtain;
But watch'd by robbers for their wealth are slain. Dryden.
The conclusion of the story I forbore, because I could not obtain from myself to shew Absalom unfortunate. Dryden.
TO OBTAIN. v. n.
1. To continue in use.
The Theodosian Code, several hundred years after Justinian's time, did obtain in the western parts of Europe. Bak.
2. To be established.
Our impious use no longer shall obtain,
Brothers no more, by brothers, shall be slain. Dryden.
The situation of the sun and earth, which the theorist supposes, is so far from being preferable to this which at present obtains, that this hath infinitely the advantage of it. Woodw.
The general laws of fluidity, elasticity, and gravity, obtain in animal and inanimate tubes. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
3. To prevail; to succeed.
There is due from the judge to the advocate, some commendation where causes are fair pleaded; especially towards the side which obtaineth not. Bacon.
OBTAINABLE. adj. [from obtain.] To be procured.
Spirits which come over in distillations, miscible with water, and wholly combustible, are obtainable from plants by previous fermentation. Arbutnot on Aliments.
OBTAINER. n. f. [from obtain.] He who obtains.
TO OBTEMPERATE. v. a. [obtemperare, Fr. obtemperare, Lat.] To obey. Diā.
TO OBTEMPERATE. v. a. [obtemperare, Lat.]
1. To oppose; to hold out in opposition.
2. To pretend; to offer as the reason of any thing.
Thou dost with lies the throne invade, Obtending Heav'n for what'er ills befall. Dryden.
OBTENEBRATION. n. f. [ob et tenebrae, Latin.] Darkness; the state of being darkened; the act of darkening; cloudiness.
In every megrim or vertigo, there is an obtenebation joined with a semblance of turning round. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
OBTENSION. n. f. [from obtend.] The act of obtaining.
TO OBTEST. v. a. [obtestor, Latin.] To beseech; to supplicate.
Suppliants demand
A truce, with olive branches in their hand;
Obtest his clemency, and from the plain Beg leave to draw the bodies of their slain. Dryden.
OBTESTATION. n. f. [obtestatio, Lat. from obtestor.] Supplication; entreaty.
OBTRACTATION. n. f. [obtractio, Lat.] Slander; detraction; calumny.
TO OBTRUDE. v. a. [obtrudo, Latin.] To thrust into any place or state by force or impolture; to offer with unreasonable importunity.
It is their torment, that the thing they shun doth follow them, truth, as it were, even obtruding itself into their knowledge, and not permitting them to be so ignorant as they would be. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.
There may be as great a vanity in retiring and withdrawing men's conceits from the world, as in obtruding them. Bac.
Some things are easily granted; the rest ought not to be obtruded upon me with the point of the sword. King Charles.
Who can abide, that against their own doctors fix whole books should, by their fatherhoods of Trent, be under pain of a curse, imperiously obtruded upon God and his church? Hall.
Why shouldst thou then obtrude this diligence
In vain, where no acceptance it can find? Milton.
Whatever was not by them thought necessary, must not by us be obtruded on, or forced into that catalogue. Hammond.
A cause of common error is the credulity of men; that is, an easy assent to what is obtruded, or believing at first ear what is delivered by others. Brown's V. Err.
The objects of our senses obtrude their particular ideas upon our minds, whether we will or no; and the operations of our minds will not let us be without some obscure notions of them. Locke.
Whether thy great forefathers came From realms that bear Vesputio's name;
For so conjectures would obtrude,
And from thy painted skin conclude. Swift.
OBTRUDER. n. f. [from obtrude.] One that obtrudes.
They will do justice to the inventors or publishers of the true experiments, as well as upon the obtruders of false ones. Boyle.

OBTRUSION.

OBU

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Latin.] The act of obtruding.
No man can think it other than the badge and method of slavery, by savage rudeness and importunate obtrusions of violence, to have the mist of his error and passion dispelled. King Charles.

OBTRUSIVE. adj. [from obtrude, Latin.] Inclined to force one's self or any thing else, upon others.
Not obvious, not obtrusive, but retir'd
The more desirable. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

TO OBTRUND. v. a. [from obtrundo, Latin.] To blunt; to dull; to quell; to daunt.
Avicen countermands letting blood in cholerick bodies, because he esteems the blood a bridle of gall, obtrunding its acrimony and fierceness. Harvey on Con.ump.

OBTRURATION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Latin.] The act of obtruding up any thing with something smeared over it.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Latin.] Having angles larger than right angles.

OBTRUSE. adj. [from obtrusus, Latin.]
1. Not pointed; not acute.
2. Not quick; dull; stupid.
Thy senses then Obtruse, all taste of pleasures must forego. Milt. P. Lof.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Latin.]
3. Not shrill; obscure: as, an obtruse sound.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Latin.]
1. Without a point.
2. Dully; stupidly.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Latin.] Bluntness; dulness.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Latin.]
1. The act of dulling.
2. The state of being dulled.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Latin.]
Obtrusion of the senses, internal and external. Harvey.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Latin.] Something happening not constantly and regularly, but uncertainly; incidental advantage.
When the country grows more rich and better inhabited, the tythes and other obtrusions, will also be more augmented and better valued. Spenser on Ireland.

TO OBTRUDE. v. a. [from obtrudo, Latin.] To turn towards.
The laborant with an iron rod stirred the kindled part of the nitre, that the fire might be more diffused, and more parts might be obtruded to the air. Boyle.

A man can from no place behold, but there will be amongst innumerable superfluous, that look some one way, and some another, enough of them obtruded to his eye to afford a confused idea of light. Boyle on Colours.

An erect cone placed in an horizontal plane, at a great distance from the eye, we judge to be nothing but a flat circle, if its base be obtruded towards us. Watt's Logic.

TO OBVIATE. v. a. [from obviatus, Latin.] To meet in the way; to prevent.
To lay down every thing in its full light, so as to obviate all exceptions, and remove every difficulty, would carry me out too far. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

OBVIOUS. adj. [from obviatus, Latin.]
1. Meeting any thing; opposed in front to any thing.
To the evil turn
My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milton.

2. Open; exposed.
Whether such room in nature unpossess
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them, is obvious to dispute. Milton.

3. Easily discovered; plain; evident; easily found.
Why was the fight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd? Milton.

Entertain'd with solitude,
Where obvious duty ere while appear'd unfought. Milt.

They are such lights as are only obvious to every man of sense, who loves poetry and understands it. Dryden.

I am apt to think many words difficult or obscure, which are obvious to scholars. Swift.

These sentiments, whether they be impressed on the soul, or arise as obvious reflections of our reason, I call natural, because they have been found in all ages. Rogers.

All the great lines of our duty are clear and obvious; the extent of it understood, the obligation acknowledged, and the wisdom of complying with it freely confessed. Rogers.

OBVIOUSLY. adv. [from obviatus, Latin.] Evidently; apparently.

OBVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obviatus, Latin.] State of being evident or apparent.
Slight experiments are more easily and cheaply tried; I thought their easiness or obviousness fitter to recommend than depreciate them. Boyle.

TO OBUMBRATE. v. a. [from obumbrare, Latin.] To shade; to cloud.

OCC

The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villero, dispelled all those clouds which did hang over and obumbrate him. Howel's Vocal Eclog.

OBUMBRATION. n. f. [from obumbrare, Latin.] The act of darkening or clouding.

OCCASION. n. f. [from occasio, Fr. occasio, Lat.]
1. Occurrence; casualty; incident.
The laws of Christ we find rather mentioned by occasio in the writings of the Apostles, than any solemn thing directly written to comprehend them in legal sort. Howel.

2. Opportunity; convenience.
Unweeting, and unaware of such mishap,
She brought to mischief through occasio,
Where this same wicked villain did me light upon. Pa. 2.
That woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasio, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool. Shakef. As you like it.

Because of the money returned in our sacks are we brought in, that he may seek occasio, fall upon us, and take us for bondmen. Gen. xliii. 18.

Use not liberty for an occasio.
Let me not let pass
Occasio which now smiles. Milt. Par. Lof. b. ix.

I'll take th' occasio which he gives to bring Him to his death. Waller.

With a mind as great as theirs he came
To find at home occasio for his fame,
Where dark confusions did the nations hide.
From this admonition they took only occasio to redouble their fault, and to sleep again. Waller.

This one has occasio of observing more than once in several fragments of antiquity, that are still to be seen in Rome. Addison on Italy.

3. Accidental cause.
Have you ever heard what was the occasio and first beginning of this custom? Spenser on Ireland.

The fair for whom they strove,
Nor thought, when the beheld the fight from far,
Her beauty was th' occasio of the war. Dryden.

4. Reason not cogent, but opportune.
Your own business calls on you,
And you embrace th' occasio to depart. Shakef. R. II.

Concerning ideas lodged in the memory, and upon occasio revived by the mind, it takes notice of them as of a former impression. Locke.

5. Incidental need; casual exigence.
Never maffer had
A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,
So tender over his occasio. Shakef. R. II.

Antony will use his affection where it is:
He married but his occasio here. Shakef. Ant. and Cleop.

My occasions have found time to use them toward a supply of money. Shakef. Timon of Athens.

They who are desirous of a name in painting, should rest with diligence, and make their observations of such things as they find for their purpose, and of which they may have occasio. Dryden's Daphnia.

Syllogism is made use of on occasio to discover a fallacy hid in a rhetorical flourish. Locke.

The ancient canons were very well fitted for the occasio of the church in its purer ages. Baker on Learning.

God hath put us into an imperfect state, where we have perpetual occasio of each other's assistance. Swift.

A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array,
But with th' occasio and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay, seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

TO OCCASION. v. a. [from occasio, Fr. from the noun.]
1. To cause casually.
Who can find it reasonable that the soul should, in its retirement, during sleep, never light on any of those ideas it borrowed not from sensation, preserve the memory of no ideas but such, which being occasioned from the body, must needs be less natural to a spirit?
The good Platonist condemns the foolish thoughts, which a reflection on the prosperous state of his affairs had sometimes occasioned in him. Atterbury.

2. To cause; to produce.
I doubt not, whether the great encrease of that disease may not have been occasioned by the custom of much wine introduced into our common tables. Temple.

By its stypic quality it affects the nervous, very often occasioning tremors. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. To influence.
If we enquire what it is that occasions men to make several combinations of simple ideas into distinct modes, and neglect others which have as much an aptness to be combined, we shall find the reason to be the end of language. Locke.

OCCASIONAL. adj. [from occasionalis, Fr. from occasio.]
1. Incidental; casual.
Thus much is sufficient out of scripture, to verify our application

OCC

plication of the deluge, according to the Mosaic history of the flood, and according to many occasional reflections dispersed in other places of scripture concerning it. Burnet.

2. Producing by accident.
The ground or occasional original hereof, was the amazement and sudden silence the unexpected appearance of wolves does often put upon travellers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Produced by occasion or incidental exigence.
Those letters were not writ to all;
Nor first intended but occasional,
Their absent sermons. Dryd. Hind. and Panth.

OCCASIONALLY. adv. [from occasionalis.] According to incidental exigence; incidentally.
Authority and reason on her wait,
As one intended first, not after made
Occasionally. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

I have endeavoured to interweave with the assertions some of the proofs whereon they depend, and occasionally scatter several of the more important observations throughout the work. Woodv. Nat. Hist.

OCCASIONER. n. f. [from occasio.] One that causes, or promotes by design or accident.
She with true lamentations made known to the world, that her new greatness did no way comfort her in respect of her brother's loss, whom she studied all means possible to revenge upon every one of the occasioners. Sidney, b. ii.

Some men will load me as if I were a wilful and resolute occasioner of my own and my subjects miseries. K. Charles.

In case a man dig a pit and leave it open, whereby it happeneth his neighbour's beast to fall thereto and perish, the owner of the pit is to make it good, in as much as he was the occasioner of that loss to his neighbour. Sanderfon.

OCCECATION. n. f. [from occasio, Latin.] The act of blinding or making blind.
Those places speak of obduration and occagation, so as if the blindness that is in the minds, and hardness that is in the hearts of wicked men, were from God. Sanderfon.

OCCIDENT. n. f. [from occidentis, Latin.] The west.
The envious clouds are bent
To dim his glory, and to stain the tract
Of his bright passage to the occident. Shakef. R. II.

OCCIDENTAL. adj. [from occidentalis, Latin.] Western.
Ere twice in mure and occidental damp, Moist Hesperus hath quench'd his sleepy lamp. Shakef.

If he had not been drained, the might have tiled her palaces with occidental gold and silver. Howel.

East and west have been the obvious conceptions of philosophers, magnifying the condition of India above the setting and occidental climates. Brown's Vulgar Err.

OCCIDUOUS. adj. [from occidens, Latin.] Western.

OCCIPITAL. adj. [from occipitalis, Latin.] Placed in the hinder part of the head.
OCCIPUT. n. f. [Latin.] The hinder part of the head.
His broad-brim'd hat
Hangs o'er his occiput most quaintly,
To make the knave appear more faintly. Butler.

OCCISION. n. f. [from occiso, Latin.] The act of killing.

TO OCCUDE. v. a. [from occido, Latin.] To shut up.
They take it up, and roll it upon the earths, whereby occluding the pores they conserve the natural humidity, and so prevent corruption. Brown.

OCCLUSE. adj. [from occlusus, Latin.] Shut up; closed.
The appulse is either plenary and occlude, so as to preclude all passages of breath or voice through the mouth; or else partial and pervious, so as to give them some passages out of the mouth. Holder's Elements of Speech.

OCCLUSSION. n. f. [from occlusio, Latin.] The act of shutting up.

OCCULT. adj. [from occultus, Latin.] Secret; hidden; unknown; undiscoversible.
If his occult guilt
Do not itself unkennel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen. Shakef. Ham.

An artist will play a lesson on an instrument without minding a stroke; and our tongues will run divisions in a tune not missing a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere; which effects are to be attributed to some secret act of the soul, which to us is utterly occult, and without the ken of our intellects.

These instincts we call occult qualities; which is all one with saying that we do not understand how they work. L'Ecl.

These are manifest qualities, and their causes only are occult. And the Aristotelians gave the name of occult qualities not to manifest qualities, but to such qualities only as they supposed to lie hid in bodies, and to be the unknown causes of manifest effects. Newt. Opt.

OCCULTATION. n. f. [from occultatio, Latin.]
In astronomy, is the time that a star or planet is hid from our sight, when eclipsed by interposition of the body of the moon, or some other planet between it and us. Harris.

OCCULTNESS. n. f. [from occultus.] Secretness; state of being hid.

OCC

OCCUPANCY. n. f. [from occupans, Latin.] The act of taking possession.
Of moveables, some are things natural; others, things artificial. Property in the first is gained by occupancy, in the latter by improvement. Warburton on Literary Property.

OCCUPANT. n. f. [from occupans, Latin.] He that takes possession of any thing.
Of beasts and birds the property passeth with the possession, and goeth to the occupant; but of civil people not so. Bacon.

TO OCCUPATE. v. a. [from occupo, Latin.] To possess; to hold; to take up.
Drunken men are taken with a plain destitution in voluntary motion; for that the spirits of the wine oppress the spirits animal, and occupate part of the place where they are, and so make them weak to move. Bacon's Nat. History.

OCCUPATION. n. f. [from occupatio, Fr. occupatio, Lat.]
1. The act of taking possession.
Spain hath enlarged the bounds of its crown within this last sixscore years, much more than the Ottomans: I speak not of matches or unions, but of arms, occupations, invasions. Bacon.

2. Employment; business.
Such were the distresses of the then infant world; so incessant their occupations about provision for food, that there was little leisure to commit any thing to writing. Woodv.

In your most busy occupations, when you are never so much taken up with other affairs, yet now and then send up an ejaculation to the God of your salvation. Wake.

3. Trade; calling; vocation.
The red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,
And occupations perish. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He was of the same craft with them, and wrought, for by their occupation they were tent-makers. Acts xviii. 3.

OCCUPIER. n. f. [from occupans.]
1. A possessor; one who takes into his possession.
If the title of occupiers be good in a land unpeopled, why should it be bad accounted in a country peopled over thinly? Raleigh's Essays.

2. One who follows any employment.
Thy merchandize and the occupiers of thy merchandize, shall fall into the midst of the seas. Ezek. xxvii. 27.

TO OCCUPY. v. a. [from occupans, Fr. occupo, Latin.]
1. To possess; to keep; to take up.
How shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say amen at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest? 1 Cor. xiv. 16.

Powder being suddenly fired altogether, upon this high rarefaction, requieth a greater space than before its body occupied. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. ii.

He must assert, that there were infinite generations before that first deluge; and then the earth could not receive them, but the infinite bodies of men must occupy an infinite space. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To busy; to employ.
They occupied themselves about the sabbath, yielding exceeding praise to the Lord. 2 Mac. viii. 27.

How can he get wildom that driveth oxen and is occupied in their labours, and whose talk is of bullocks? Ecc. xxxviii. 25.

He that giveth his mind to the law of the most high, and is occupied in the meditation thereof, will seek out the wisdom of all the ancient, and be occupied in prophecies. Eccles. xxxix. 1.

3. To follow as business.
They occupy their business in deep waters. Comm. Prayer.

Mariners were in thee to occupy thy merchandize. Ez. xxvii. 9.

4. To use; to expend.
All the gold occupied for the work, was twenty and nine talents. Exodus xxxviii. 24.

TO OCCUPY. v. n. To follow business.
He called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, occupy till I come. Luke xix. 13.

TO OCCUR. v. n. [from occurro, Latin.]
1. To be presented to the memory or attention.
There doth not occur to me any use of this experiment for profit. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The mind should be always ready to turn itself to the variety of objects that occur, and allow them as much consideration as shall be thought fit. Locke.

The far greater part of the examples that occur to us, are so many encouragements to vice and disobedience. Rogers.

2. To appear here and there.
In scripture, though the word occur, yet there is no such thing as heir in our author's sense. Locke.

3. To clash; to strike against; to meet.
All bodies have a determinate motion according to the degrees of their external impulse, their inward principle of gravitation, and the resistance of the bodies they occur with. Bentley's Sermons.

4. To obviate; to make opposition to. A latinism.
Before I begin that I must occur to one specious objection against this proposition. Bentley's Sermon.

OCT

OCCURRENCE. n. f. [occurrence, Fr. from occur: this was perhaps originally occurrentus.]

1. Incident; accidental event.

In education most time is to be bestowed on that which is of the greatest consequence in the ordinary course and occurrence of that life the young man is designed for. Locke.

2. Occasional presentation.

Voyages detain the mind by the perpetual occurrence and expectation of something new. Watts.

OCCURRENT. n. f. [occurent, Fr. occurrens, Lat.] Incident; any thing that happens.

Contentions were as yet never able to prevent two evils, the one a mutual exchange of unbecomely and unjust disgraces, the other a common hazard of both, to be made a prey by such as study how to work upon all occurents, with most advantage in private. Hooker's Dedicat.

He did himself certify all the news and occurents in every particular, from Calice, to the mayor and aldermen of London. Bacon's Henry VII.

OCCURSION. n. f. [occursio, Latin.] Clash; mutual blow.

In the resolution of bodies by fire, some of the dissipated parts may, by their various occursion occasioned by the heat, stick closely. Boyle.

Now should those active particles, ever and anon jostled by the occursion of other bodies, so orderly keep their cells without alteration of site. Glauco. Sleep.

OCEAN. n. f. [ocean, Fr. oceanus, Latin.]

1. The main; the great sea.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams, Gallops the zodiack. Shakefp. Tit. And. Andronicus.

Will all great Neptune's ocean walk this blood

Clean from my hand? Shakefp. Macbeth.

2. Any immense expanse.

Time, in general, is to duration, as place to expansion. They are so much of those boundless oceans of eternity and immensity, as is set out and distinguished from the rest, to denote the position of finite real beings, in those uniform, infinite oceans of duration and space. Locke.

OCEAN. adj. [This is not usual, though conformable to the original import of the word.] Pertaining to the main or great sea.

In bulk as huge as that sea-beast
Leviathan, which God of all his works Created huge that swim th' ocean stream. Milt. P. Legt.

Bounds were set
To darkness, such as bound the ocean wave. Milton.

OCEANICK. n. f. [from ocean.] Pertaining to the ocean. Dict.

OCELLATED. adj. [ocellatus, Latin.] Resembling the eye.

The white butterfly lays its offspring on cabbage leaves; a very beautiful reddish ocellated one. Derham's Physico-Theol.

OCHRE. n. f. [ochre, ocre, Fr. ochre.]

The earths distinguished by the name of ochres are those which have rough or naturally dusty surfaces, are but slightly coherent in their texture, and are composed of fine and soft argillaceous particles, and are readily diffusible in water.

They are of various colours; such as red, yellow, blue, green, black. The yellow sort are called ochres of iron, and the blue ochres of copper. Hill's Mat. Med.

OCHREOUS. adj. [from ochre.] Consisting of ochre.

In the interstices of the flakes is a grey, chalky, or ochreous matter. Woodward on Fossils.

OCHREY. adj. [from ochre.] Partaking of ochre.

This is conveyed about by the water; as we find in earthy, ochrey, and other loose matter. Woodw. on Foss.

OCHIMY. n. f. [formed by corruption from alchimy.] A mixed base metal.

OCTAGON. n. f. [ὀκτώγωνος and γωνία.] In geometry, a figure consisting of eight sides and angles; and this, when all the sides and angles are equal, is called a regular octagon, which may be inscribed in a circle. Harris.

OCTAGONAL. adj. [from octagon.] Having eight angles and sides.

OCTANGULAR. adj. [ὀκτώ and ἄνγυλος, Lat.] Having eight angles.

OCTANGULARNESS. n. f. [from octangular.] The quality of having eight angles. Dict.

OCTANT. adj. In astrology, is, when a planet is in such position and so difficult to be explained by the vulgar hypothesis of philosophers, that I could not but think it deserved to be taken notice of. Newt. Opt.

When I broke loose from writers who have employed their wit and parts in propagating of vice, I did not question but I should be treated as an odd kind of a fellow. Spectator.

No fool Pythagoras was thought;
He made his list of scholars stand;
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand:
Else, may be, some odd thinking youth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the music of the spheres. Prior.

OCTAVE. n. f. [octave, Fr. octavus, Lat.]

1. The eighth day after some peculiar festival.

2. [In music.] An eighth or an interval of eight sounds.

O'CLAR. adj. [oculaire, Fr. from oculus, Lat.] Depending on the eye; known by the eye.

Prove my love a whore,
Be sure of it: give me the ocular proof,
Or thou hadst better have been born a dog. Shakefp. Othello.

He that would not believe the menace of God at first, it may be doubted whether before an ocular example he believed the curse at first. Brown's V. Err.

O'CLAR. adv. [from ocular.] To the observation of the eye.

The fame is ocularly confirmed by Vives upon Austin. Br.

O'CLAR. adj. [oculatus, Latin.] Having eyes; knowing by the eye.

O'CLAR. n. f. [from oculus, Latin.] One who professes to cure distempers of the eyes.

If there be a peck in the eye, we take them off; but he were a strange oculist who would pull out the eye. Bacon.

I am no oculist, and if I should go to help one eye and put out the other, we should have but an untoward business of it. LEstrange.

Oculus heli. [Latin.]

The oculus heli of the modern jewellers, and probably of Pliny, is only an accidental variety of the agat kind; having a grey horny ground, with circular delineations, and a spot in the middle of them something resembling the light of the eye; whence the stone had its name. Woodw.

ODD. adj. [odda, Swedsh.]

1. Not even; not divisible into equal numbers.

This is the third time; I hope
Good luck lies in odd numbers. Shakefp. Othello.

What verity there is in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man by even and odd; ascribing the odd unto the right side, and the even unto the left; and so by parity, or imparity of letters in mens names, to determine misfortunes. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

2. More than a round number; indefinitely exceeding any number specified.

The account of the profits of Ulster, from the fifth year of Edward III. until the eighth, do amount but to nine hundred and odd pounds. Davies on Ireland.

Sixteen hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was destroyed in a deluge of water. Burnet's Theory.

The year, without regard to days, ends with an odd day and odd hours, odd minutes and odd seconds of minutes; so that it cannot be measured by any even number of days, hours, or minutes. Holder on Time.

3. Particular; uncouth; extraordinary; not like others; not to be numbered among any class. In a sense of contempt or dislike.

Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As e'er I heard in madness. Shakefp. Measure for Measure.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white,
To make up my delight,
No odd becoming graces,
Black eyes, or little know not what's in faces. Sackling.

This blue colour being made by nothing else than by reflexion of a specular superficies, seems to add a phenomenon and so difficult to be explained by the vulgar hypothesis of philosophers, that I could not but think it deserved to be taken notice of. Newt. Opt.

When I broke loose from writers who have employed their wit and parts in propagating of vice, I did not question but I should be treated as an odd kind of a fellow. Spectator.

No fool Pythagoras was thought;
He made his list of scholars stand;
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand:
Else, may be, some odd thinking youth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the music of the spheres. Prior.

ODD. n. f. [from odd.]

1. Inequality; excess of either compared with the other.

Between these two cases there are great odds. Hooker.

The case is yet not like, but there appeareth great odds between them. Spenser on Ireland.

I will lay the odds that ere this year expire,
We bear our civil swords and native fire,
As far as France. Shakefp. Henry IV. p. ii.

Cromwel, with odds of number and of fate,
Remov'd this bulwark of the church and state. Waller.

I chiefly who enjoy
So far the happier lot, enjoying thee
Pre-eminently by much odds. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Shall I give him to partake
Full happiness with me? or rather not;
But keep the odds of knowledge in my power Without co-partner? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

All these, thus unequally furnished with truth, and ad-

So proud I am no slave,

So impudent I own myself no knave,
So odd, my country's ruin makes me grave. Pope.

4. Not noted; not taken into the common account; unheeded.

I left him cooling of the air with sighs,
In an odd angle of the idle. Shakefp. Tempest.

There are yet missing some few odd lads that you remember not. Shakefp. Tempest.

5. Strange; unaccountable; fantastical.

How strange or odd to'er I bear myself,
As I, perchance, hereafter shall think meet,
To put an antic disposition on. Shakefp. Hamlet.

It is an odd way of uniting parties to deprive a majority of part of their ancient right, by conferring it on a faction, who had never any right at all. Swift.

Patients have sometimes coveted odd things which have relieved them; as salt and vinegar. Arbutn. on Aliments.

6. Uncommon; particular.

The odd man to perform all three perfectly is, Joannes Sturmius. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

7. Unlucky.

The trust Othello puts him in,
On some odd time of his infirmity,
Will shake this island. Shakefp. Othello.

8. Unlikely; in appearance improper.

Mr. Locke's Essay would be a very odd book for a man to make himself master of, who would get a reputation by critical writings. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 291.

ODDLY. adv. [from odd.] This word and odds, should, I think, be written with one d; but the writers almost all combine against it.

1. Not evenly.

2. Strangely; particularly; unaccountably; uncouthly.

How oddly will it found, that I Must ask my child forgiveness. Shakefp. Tempest.

One man is preflled with poverty, and looks somewhat oddly upon it. Collier on the Spleen.

The dreams of sleeping men are made up of the waking man's ideas, though for the most part oddly put together. Locke.

This child was near being excluded out of the species of man barely by his shape. It is certain a figure a little more oddly turned had cast him, and he had been executed. Locke.

The real essence of substances we know not; and therefore are so undetermined in our nominal essences, which we make ourselves, that if several men were to be asked concerning some oddly-shaped fetus, whether it were a man or no? it is past doubt, one should meet with different answers. Locke.

Her awkward love indeed was oddly fated;
She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.

As masters in the clare obscure,
With various light your eyes allure:
A flaming yellow here they spread;
Draw off in blue, or charge in red;
Yet from these colours oddly mix'd,
Your light upon the whole is fix'd. Prior.

They had seen a great black substance lying on the ground very oddly-shaped. Gulliv. Trav.

Fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped, according to the modification of their constituent salts, or the cavities they are formed in. Bentley's Serm.

ODDNESS. n. f. [from odd.]

1. The state of being not even.

2. Strangeness; particularity; uncouthness.

Coveting to recommend himself to posterity, Cicero begged it as an alms of the historians, to remember his consulship: and observe the oddness of the event; all their histories are lost, and the vanity of his request stands recorded in his own writings. Dryden's Aurengzebe, Pref.

A knave is apprehensive of being discovered; and this habitual concern puts an oddness into his looks. Collier.

My wife fell into a violent disorder, and I was a little discomposed at the oddness of the accident. Swift.

ODDS. n. f. [from odd.]

1. Inequality; excess of either compared with the other.

Between these two cases there are great odds. Hooker.

vanced in knowledge, I suppose of equal natural parts; all the odds between them has been the different scope that has been given to their understandings to range in. Locke.

Judging is balancing an account, and determining on which side the odds lie. Locke.

2. More than an even wager.

Since every man by nature is very prone to think the best of himself, and of his own condition; it is odds but he will find a shrewd temptation. South's Serm.

The presbyterian party endeavoured one day to introduce a debate about repealing the test clause, when there appeared at least four to one odds against them. Swift.

Some bishop bestows upon them some inconsiderable benefice, when 'tis odds they are already encumbered with a numerous family. Swift's Miscell.

3. Advantage; superiority.

And tho' the sword, some understood,
In force had much the odds of wood,
'Twas nothing so; both sides were balanc'd
So equal, none knew which was valiant'st. Hudibras.

4. Quarrel; debate; dispute.

I can't speak
Any beginning to this peevish odds. Shakefp. Othello.

What is the night?
Almost at odds with the morning, which is which. Shak.

He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That lets us all at odds. Shakefp. King Lear.

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three;
Until the goose came out of door,
And staid the odds by adding four. Sha. L. Lab. Legt.

Gods of whatso'er degree,
Refuse not what themselves have given,
Or any brother God in heav'n;
Which keeps the peace among the Gods,
Or they must always be at odds. Swift's Miscell.

ODE. n. f. [ὕδν.] A poem written to be sung to music; a lyric poem; the ode is either of the greater or less kind. The less is characterized by sweetness and ease; the greater by sublimity, rapture, and quickness of transition.

A man haunts the forest that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakefp. As you like it.

O run, prevent them with thy humble ode,
And lay it lowly at his blessed feet.

What work among you scholar Gods!
Phœbus must write him am'rous odes;
And thou, poor cousin, must compose
His letters in submissive prose. Prior.

O'DIBLE. adj. [from odi.] Hateful.

O'DIOUS. adj. [odieux, Fr. odiosus, Latin.]

1. Hateful; detestable; abominable.

For ever all goodness will be most charming; for ever all wickedness will be most odious. Sprat's Serm.

Hatred is the passion of defence, and there is a kind of hostility included in its very essence. But then, if there could have been hatred in the world, when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the compass of its proper object. South's Sermons.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Lation prince:
Expel from Italy that odious name. Dryden.

She breathes the odious fume
Of nauseous steams, and poisons all the room. Granv.

2. Exposed to hate.

Another means for raising money, was, by inquiring after offences of officers in great place, who as by unjust dealing they became most odious, so by justice in their punishments the prince acquired both love and applause. Hayward.

He had rendered himself odious to the parliament. Clarend.

3. Causing hate; incidious.

The seventh from thee,
The only righteous in a world perverse,
And therefore hated, therefore so beset
With foes, for daring single to be just,
And utter odious truth, that God would come
To judge them with his saints. Milton's Par. Legt.

ODIOUSLY. adv. [from odious.]

1. Hateful; abominably.

Had thy love, still odiously pretended,
Been as it ought, sincere, it would have taught thee Far other reasonings. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Invidiously; so as to cause hate.

Arbitrary power no sober man can fear, either from the king's disposition or his practice; or even where you would odiously lay it, from his ministers. Dryden.

ODIOUSNESS. n. f. [from odious.]

1. Hatefulness.

Have a true sense of his sin, of its odiousness, and of its danger

2. The

2. The state of being hated.
There was left of the blood royal, an aged gentleman of approved goodness, who had gotten nothing by his cousin's power but danger from him, and odiousness for him. Sidney.
ODIUM. n. f. [Latin.] Invidiousness; quality of provoking hate.
The odium and offences which some men's rigour or remissness had contracted upon my government, I was resolved to have expiated. King Charles.
She threw the odium of the fact on me, And publicly avowed her love to you. Dryden.
ODONTALGICK. adj. [ὀδὸν and ἄλγος.] Pertaining to the tooth-ach.
ODORATE. adj. [odoratus, Latin.] Scented; having a strong scent, whether foetid or fragrant.
Smelling is with a communication of the breath, or vapour of the object odorate. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
ODORIFEROUS. adj. [odorifer, Lat.] Giving scent; usually, sweet of scent; fragrant; perfumed.
A bottle of vinegar so buried, came forth more lively and odoriferous, smelling almost like a violet. Bacon.
Gentle gales
Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole These balmy spoils. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.
Smelling bodies send forth effluvia of steams, without sensibly wafting. Thus a grain of musk will send forth odoriferous particles for scores of years, without its being spent. Locke.
ODORIFEROUSNESS. n. f. [from odoriferous.] Sweetness of scent; fragrance.
ODOROUS. adj. [odorus, Lat.] Fragrant; perfumed; sweet of scent.
Such fragrant flowers do give most odorous smell,
But her sweet odour did them all excel. Spenser.
Their private roofs on odorous timber borne,
Such as might palaces for kings adorn. Waller.
We smell, because parts of the odorous body touch the nerves of our nostrils. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
ODOUR. n. f. [odor, Lat. odeur, Fr.]
1. Scent, whether good or bad.
Democritus, when he lay a dying, sent for loaves of new bread, which having opened and poured a little wine into them, he kept himself alive with the odour till a certain feast was past. Bacon.
Infusions in air, for so we may call odours, have the same diversities with infusions in water; in that the several odours which are in one flower or other body, issue at several times, some earlier, some later. Bacon.
They refer sapor unto salt, and odour unto sulphur; they vary much concerning colour. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. Fragrance; perfume; sweet scent.
Me seem'd I smelt a garden of sweet flow'rs,
That dainty odours from them threw around,
For damiels fit to deck their lover's bow'rs. Spenser.
By her intercession with the king the would lay a most seasonable and popular obligation upon the whole nation, and leave a pleasant odour of her grace and favour to the people behind her.
The Levites burned the holy incense in such quantities as refreshed the whole multitude with its odours, and filled all the region about them with perfume. Addison's Freehold.
OE. This combination of vowels does not properly belong to our language, nor is ever found but in words derived from the Greek, and not yet wholly conformed to our manner of writing: oe has in such words the sound of E.
OECONOMICKS. n. f. [οἰκονομικός, oeconomique, Fr. from oecomeny. Both it and its derivatives are under economy.] Management of household affairs.
A prince's leaving his business wholly to his ministers, is as dangerous an error in politics, as a master's committing all to his servant, is in oeconomicks. L'Estrange.
OECUMENICAL. adj. [οἰκουμένης, from οἰκω.] General; respecting the whole habitable world.
This Nicene council was not received as an oecumenical council in any of the eastern patriarchates, excepting only that of Constantinople. Stillingfleet.
OEDEMA. n. f. [ἔδημα, from ὀίδω, to swell.] A tumour.
It is now and commonly by surgeons confined to a white, soft, insensible tumour, proceeding from cold and aqueous humours, such as happen to hydropick constitutions. Quincy.
OEDEMATICK. adj. [from oedema.] Pertaining to an oedema.
OEDEMATOUS. adj. [from oedema.] Pertaining to an oedema.
It is primarily generated out of the effusion of melancholick blood, or secondarily out of the dregs and remainder of a phlegmonous or oedematick tumour. Horrey on Consumption.
The great discharge of matter, and the extremity of pain wafted her, oedematous swellings arose in her legs, and she languished and died. Wifeman's Surgery.
OCELLIAD. n. f. [from ocel, French.] Glance; wink; token of the eye.

- She gave oildads and most speaking looks To noble Edmund. Shakespeare. King Lear.
OF. contracted from over. See OVER.
His tears defac'd the surface of the well,
With circle after circle as they fell,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'er run with wrinkles and defac'd with tears. Addison.
OF. n. f. [from of, wicker, from some similitude in the structure of this part to the contexture of that; and φάγω to eat.] The gullet; a long, large, and round canal, that descends from the mouth, lying all along between the windpipe and the joints of the neck and back, to the fifth joint of the back, where it turns a little to the right, and gives way to the descending artery; and both run by one another, till at the ninth the oesophagus turns again to the left, pierces the diaphragm, and is continued to the left orifice of the stomach. Quincy.
Wounds penetrating the oesophagus and aspera arteria, require to be stitched close, especially those of the oesophagus, where the sustenance and saliva so continually presseth into it. Wifeman's Surgery.
OF. prep. [of, Saxon.]
1. It is put before the substantive that follows another in construction; as, of these part were slain; that is, part of these.
I cannot instantly raise up the groins
Of full three thousand ducats. Shakespeare.
He to his natural endowments of a large invention, a ripe judgment, and a strong memory, has joined the knowledge of the liberal arts. Dryden.
All men naturally fly to God in extremity, and the most atheistical person in the world, when forsaken of all hopes of any other relief, is forced to acknowledge him. Tillotson.
They will receive it at last with an ample accumulation of interest. Smallbridge's Serm.
Since the roofing of the mind with some degrees of vigour, does set it free from those idle companions. Locke.
The value of land is raised only by a greater plenty of money.
2. It is put after comparative and superlative adjectives.
The most renowned of all are those to whom the name is given Philipinas. Abbot's Description of the World.

At midnight, the most dismal and unseasonable time of all other, then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps. Tillotson, Serm. 31.
We are not to describe our shepherds as shepherds at this day really are, but as they may be conceived then to have been, when the best of men followed the employment. Pope.
Peace, of all worldly blessings, is the most valuable. Small.
3. From.
The captain of the Helots, with a blow whose violence grew of fury, not of strength, or of strength proceeding of fury, struck Palladius upon the side of the head. Sidney.
One that I brought up of a puppy, one that I fav'd from drowning. Shakespeare. Two Gent. of Verona.
He borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay him again when he was able. Shakespeare.
It was called Corcyra of Corcyra, the daughter of Æolus. Sandy's Travels.
4. Concerning; relating to.
The quarrel is not now of fame and tribute,
Or of wrongs done unto confederates,
But for your own republick. Ben. Johnson's Cat.
This cannot be understood of the first disposition of the waters, as they were before the flood. Burnet.
All have this sense of war. Smallbridge's Serm.
5. Out of.
Yet of this little he had some to spare,
To feed the famish'd and to clothe the bare. Dryden.
Look once again, and for thy husband lost,
Lo all that's left of him, thy husband's ghost. Dryden.
6. Among.
He is the only person of all others for an epic poem. Dryden.
Of all our heroes thou canst boast alone.
That Jove, when'er he thunders, calls thee son. Dryden.
Neither can I call to mind any clergyman of my own acquaintance who is wholly exempt from this error. Swift.
7. By. This sense was once very frequent, but is not now in use.
She dying
Shall be lamented, pitied, and excus'd
Of every bearer. Shakespeare.
Like heav'n in all, like earth in this alone,
That tho' great states by her support do stand,
Yet she herself supported is of none,
But by the finger of the Almighty's hand. Dennis.
I was friendly entertained of the English consul. Sandys.
Left a more honourable man than those he bidden of him. N. Fyl.

8. According to.
The senate
And people of Rome, of their accustom'd greatness,
Will sharply and severely vindicate
Not only any fact, but any practice Gainst the state. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
They do of right belong to you, being most of them first preached amongst you. Tillotson's Ded.
Tancred, whose delight
Was plac'd in his fair daughter's daily sight,
Of custom, when his state affairs were done,
Would pass his pleasing hours with her alone. Dryden.
9. Noting power, ability, choice, or spontaneity. With the reciprocal pronoun.
Some soils put forth odorate herbs of themselves; as wild thyme. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Of himself man is confessedly unequal to his duty. Steph.
The Venice glasses would crack of themselves. Boyle.
Of himself is none,
But that eternal infinite and one,
Who never did begin, who ne'er can end;
On him all beings, as their source, depend. Dryden.
The thirsty cattel, of themselves obtain'd
From water, and their grassy fare disdain'd. Dryden.
To assert mankind to have been of himself, and without a cause, hath this invincible objection against it, that we plainly see every man to be from another. Tillotson.
No particle of matter, nor any combination of particles; that is, no bodies can either move of themselves, or of themselves alter the direction of their motion. Cheyne.
A free people met together, as soon as they fall into any acts of civil society, do of themselves divide into three powers. Swift.
It was civil in angel or elf,
For he ne'er could have filled it so well of himself. Swift.
10. Noting properties or qualities.
He was a man of a decayed fortune, and of no good education. Clarend.
The colour of a body may be changed by a liquor which of itself is of no colour, provided it be saline. Boyle.
The fresh eglantine exhal'd a breath, Whole odours were of pow'r to raise from death. Dryden.
A man may suspend the act of his choice from being determined for or against the thing proposed, till he has examined whether it be really of a nature, in itself and consequences, to make him happy or no. Locke.
The value of land is raised, when remaining of the same fertility it comes to yield more rent. Locke.
11. Noting extraction.
Lunford was a man of an ancient family in Sussex. Clar.
Mr. Rowe was born of an ancient family in Devonshire, that for many ages had made a handsome figure in their country. Rowe's Life.
12. Noting adherence, or belonging.
Tubal, a wealthy Hebrew of my tribe,
Will furnish me. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.
Pray that in towns and temples of our own,
The name of great Anchises may be known. Dryden.
13. Noting the matter of any thing.
The chariot was all of cedar, gilt and adorned with crystal, save that the fore end had panels of sapphires set in borders of gold, and the hinder end the like of emeralds of the Peru colour. Bacon's New Atlantis.
The common materials which the ancients made their ships of, were the wild ash, the evergreen oak, the beech, and the alder. Arbutnot on Coins.
14. Noting the motive.
It was not of my own choice that I undertook this work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Our sov'reign Lord has ponder'd in his mind
The means to spare the blood of gentle kind;
And of his grace and inborn clemency,
He modifies his severe decree. Dryden.
15. Noting form or manner of existence.
As if our Lord, even of purpose to prevent this fancy of extemporal and voluntary prayers, had not left of his own framing, one which might both remain as a part of the church liturgy, and serve as a pattern whereby to frame all other prayers with efficacy, yet without superfluity of words: Hooker, b. v. f. 2.
16. Noting something that has some particular quality.
Mother, says the thrush, never had any such a friend as I have of this swallow. No, says she, nor ever mother such a fool as I have of this same thrush. L'Estrange.
17. Noting faculties of power granted.
If any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth. 1 Peter iv. 11.
18. Noting preference, or postponement.
Your highness shall repose you at the Tower.
—I do not like the Tower of any place. Shakespeare.
19. Noting change of one state to another.
O miserable of happy! is this the end

- Of this new glorious world, and me so late
The glory of that glory, who now become Accurs'd, of blessed? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
20. Noting causality.
Good nature, by which I mean beneficence and candour; is the product of right reason; which of necessity will give allowance to the failures of others, by considering that there is nothing perfect in mankind. Dryden.
21. Noting proportion.
How many are there of an hundred, even amongst scholars themselves. Locke.
22. Noting kind or species.
To cultivate the advantages of success, is an affair of the cabinet; and the neglect of this success may be of the most fatal consequence to a nation. Swift.
23. It is put before an indefinite expression of time: as, of late; in late times.
Of late, divers learned men have adopted the three hypothetical principles. Boyle on Colours.
OFF. adv. [af, Dutch.]
1. Of this adverb the chief use is to conjoin it with verbs: as, to come off; to fly off; to take off; which are found under the verbs.
2. It is generally opposed to on: as, to lay on; to take off. In this case it signifies, disunion; separation; breach of continuity.
Since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my cap than my heart, I will practice the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitedly. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
Where are you, Sir John? come, off with your boots. Shakespeare.
See
The lurking gold upon the fatal tree;
Then rend it off. Dryden, Æn. vi.
A piece of silver coined for a shilling, that has half the silver clipped off, is no more a shilling than a piece of wood, which was once a sealed yard, is still a yard, when one half of it is broke off. Locke.
3. It signifies distance.
West of this forest, scarcely off a mile,
In goodly form comes on the enemy. Shakespeare.
About thirty paces off were placed harquebusiers. Kneller.
4. In painting or statuary it signifies projection or relief.
'Tis a good piece;
This comes off well and excellent. Shakespeare.
5. It signifies evanescence; absence or departure.
Competitions intermit, and go off and on as it happens, upon this or that occasion. L'Estrange.
6. It signifies any kind of disappointment; defeat; interruption; adverse division: as, the affair is off; the match is off.
7. In favour.
The questions no way touch upon puritanism, either off or on. Sanderfon.
8. From; not toward.
Philoclea, whose delight of hearing and seeing was before a stay from interrupting her, gave herself to be seen unto her with such a lightening of beauty upon Zelmane, that neither she could look on, nor would look off. Sidney, b. ii.
9. Off hand; not studied.
Several starts of fancy off hand look well enough. L'Estrange.
OFF. interj. An expression of abhorrence, or command to depart.
Off, or I fly for ever from thy sight. Smith's Phædr.
OFF. prep.
1. Not on.
I continued feeling again the same pain; and finding it grow violent I burnt it, and felt no more after the third time; was never off my legs, nor kept my chamber a day. Temple.
2. Distant from.
Cicero's Tusculum was at a place called Grotto Ferrate, about two miles off this town, though most of the modern writers have fixed it to Frefcati. Addison on Italy.
OFFAL. n. f. [off fall, says Skinner, that which falls from the table: perhaps from offa, Latin.]
1. Waste meat; that which is not eaten at the table.
He let out the offals of his meat to interest, and kept a register of such debtors in his pocket-book. Arbutnot.
2. Carrion; coarse flesh.
I should have fatted all the region kites
With this slave's offal. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
Cram'd, and gorg'd, nigh burst,
With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton's Par. Lost.
3. Refuse; that which is thrown away as of no value.
To have right to deal in things sacred, was accounted an argument of a noble and illustrious descent; God would not accept the offals of other professions. South.
If a man bemoan his lot,
That after death his mouldring limbs shall rot,
A secret sting remains within his mind;
The fool is to his own cast offals kind.
They commonly fat hogs with offal corns. Dryden.
4. Any thing of no esteem.
What trash is Rome? what rubbish and what offal? Shakespeare.
18. N

OFFENCE. n. f. [offense, Fr. offensa, from offendo, Lat.]

1. Crime; act of wickedness.
Thither with speed their hasty course they ply'd,
Where Christ the Lord for our offences dy'd. Fairfax.
Thou hast stol'n that, which after some few hours
Were thine without offence. Shaksp. Henry IV.
2. A transgression.

If, by the law of nature, every man hath not a power to punish offences against it, I see not how the magistrates of any community can punish an alien of another country. Locke.

3. Injury.
I have given my opinion against the authority of two great men, but I hope without offence to their memories; for I loved them living, and reverence them dead. Dryden.
4. Displeasure given; cause of disgust; scandal.
Giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed.

He remembered the injury of the children of Beaz, who had been a fiare and an offence unto the people. Mac. iv.
The pleasures of the touch are greater than those of the other senses; as in warming upon cold, or refrigeration upon heat: for as the pains of the touch are greater than the offences of other senses, so likewise are the pleasures. Bacon.

5. Anger; displeasure conceived.
Earnest in every present humour, and making himself brave in his liking, he was content to give them just cause of offence when they had power to make just revenge. Sidney.
6. Attack; act of the assailant.
Courteously that seemed incorporated in his heart, would not be persuaded to offer any offence, but only to stand upon the best defensive guard. Sidney.

OFFENSIVE. adj. [offense and full.] Injurious; giving displeasure.
It seems your most offensive act
Was mutually committed. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
You are but now cast in his mood, a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offence's dog to affront an imperious lion. Shaksp. Othello.

To OFFEND. v. a. [offendo, Latin.]
1. To make angry.
If much you note him
You shall offend him, and extend his passion, Feed and regard him not. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Three sorts of men my soul hateth, and I am greatly offended at their life.
The emperor himself came running to the place in his armour, severely reproving them of cowardice who had forsaken the place, and grievously offended with them who had kept such negligent watch. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

2. To fail; to attack.
He was slain to defend himself, and withal so to offend him, that by an unlucky blow the poor Philoxenus fell dead at his feet. Sidney.

3. To transgress; to violate.
4. To injure.
Cheaply you sin, and punish crimes with ease,
Not as th' offended, but th' offenders please. Dryden.

To OFFEND. v. n.
1. To be criminal; to transgress the law.
This man that of earthly matter maketh graven images, knoweth himself to offend above all others. Wisd. xiv. 13.
Whoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. James ii. 10.

2. To cause anger.
I shall offend, either to detain or give it. Shaksp. Lear.

3. To commit transgression.
Our language is extremely imperfect, and in many instances it offends against every part of grammar. Swift.

OFFENDER. n. f. [from offend.]
1. A criminal; one who has committed a crime; a transgressor; a guilty person.
All that watch for iniquity are cut off, that make a man an offender for a word. Is. xxix. 21.
So like a fly the poor offender dies;
But like the wasp, the rich escapes and flies. Denham.
How shall I lose the sin, yet keep the sense,
And love th' offender, yet detest th' offence?
The conscience of the offender shall be sharper than an avenger's sword. Clarissa.

2. One who has done an injury.
All vengeance comes too short,
Which can pursue th' offender. Shaksp. King Lear.

OFFENDRESS. n. f. [from offender.] A woman that offends.
Virginity murders itself, and should be buried in highways out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offendress against nature. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.

OFFENSIVE. adj. [offensus, Fr. from offensus, Lat.]
1. Causing anger; displeasing; disgusting.
Since no man can do ill with a good conscience, the consolation which we herein seem to find is but a meer deceitful pleasing of ourselves in error, which at the length must needs turn to our greater grief, if that which we do to please God most, be for the manifold defects thereof offensive unto him. Hooker, b. v. f. 4.

It shall suffice, to touch such customs of the Irish as seem offensive and repugnant to the good government of the realm. Spenser on Ireland.

2. Causing pain; injurious.
It is an excellent opener for the liver, but offensive to the stomach.
3. Assailant; not defensive.
He recounted the benefits and favours that he had done him, in provoking a mighty and opulent king by an offensive war in his quarrel.

We enquire concerning the advantages and disadvantages betwixt those military offensive engines used among the ancients, and those of these latter ages. Wilkins.

OFFENSIVELY. adv. [from offensive.]
1. Mischievously; injuriously.
In the least thing done offensively against the good of men, whose benefit we ought to seek for as our own, we plainly shew that we do not acknowledge God to be such as indeed he is. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.

2. So as to cause uneasiness or displeasure.
A lady had her sight disordered, so that the images in her hangings did appear to her, if the room were not extraordinarily darkened, embellished with several offensively vivid colours.

3. By way of attack; not defensively.
OFFENSIVENESS. n. f. [from offensive.]
1. Injuriousness; mischief.

2. Cause of disgust.
The muscles of the body, being preserved sound and limber upon the bones, all the motions of the parts might be explicated with the greatest ease and without any offensiveness. Grew's Medusm.

To OFFER. v. a. [offerre, Lat. offerre, Fr.]
1. To present to any one; to exhibit any thing so as that it may be taken or received.
The heathen women under the Mogul, offer themselves to the flames at the death of their husbands. Collin.

Some ideas forwardly offer themselves to all mens understandings; some sort of truths result from any idea, as from the mind puts them into propositions. Locke.

2. To sacrifice; to immolate; to present as an act of worship.
They offered unto the Lord of the spoil which they had brought, seven hundred oxen. 2 Chron. xv. 11.
He shall offer of it all the fat thereof. Lev. vii. 3.
An holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices. 1 Pet. ii. 5.
Whole herds of offer'd bulls about the fire,
And bristled boars and woolly sheep expire. Dryden.

When a man is called upon to offer up himself to his conscience, and to resign to justice and truth, he should be so far from avoiding the lists, that he should rather enter with inclination, and thank God for the honour. Collin.

3. To bid, as a price or reward.
Nor shouldst thou offer all thy little store,
Will rich Iolas yield, but offer more. Dryden.

4. To attempt; to commence.
Lyimachus armed about three thousand men, and began first to offer violence. 2 Mac. iv. 40.

5. To propose.
In all that great extent wherein the mind wanders in remote speculations, it stirs not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered for its contemplation. Locke.

Our author offers no reason.
To OFFER. v. n.
1. To be present; to be at hand; to present itself.
No thought can imagine a greater heart to see and condemn danger, where danger would offer to make any wrong-ful threatening upon him. Sidney, b. ii.
Th' occasion offers, and the youth complies. Dryden.

2. To make an attempt.
We came close to the shore, and offered to land. Bacon.
One offers, and in offering makes a stay;
Another forward sets, and doth no more. Dan. Civ. War.
I would treat the pope and his cardinals roughly, if they offered to see my wife without my leave. Dryden.

3. With at.
I will not offer at that I cannot master.
I hope they will take it well that I should offer at a new thing, and could forbear presuming to meddle where any of the learned pens have ever touched before. Gravatt.

Write down and make signs to him to pronounce them, and guide him by shewing him by the motion of your own lips lips to offer at one of those letters; which being the easiest, he will stumble upon one of them. Holder.

The masquerade succeeded so well with him, that he would be offering at the shepherd's voice and call too. L'Estrange.
It contains the grounds of his doctrine, and offers at somewhat towards the disproof of mine. Atterbury.

Without offering at any other remedy, we hastily engaged in a war, which hath cost us sixty millions. Swift.

OFFER. n. f. [offre, Fr. from the verb.]
1. Proposal of advantage to another.
Some nymphs there are, too conscious of their face;
These swell their prospects, and exalt their pride,
When offers are disdain'd, and love deny'd. Pope.

2. First advance.
Force compels this offer,
And it proceeds from policy, not love. —
— Mowbray, you overween to take it so:
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear. Shaksp.
What wouldst beg, Laertes,
That shall not be my offer, not thy asking? Shaksp.

3. Proposal made.
Th' offers he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take. Daniel.
I enjoined all the ladies to tell the company, in case they had been in the siege and had the same offer made them as the good women of that place, what every one of them would have brought off with her, and have thought most worth the saving.

It carries too great an imputation of ignorance, or folly, to quit and renounce former tenets upon the offer of an argument which cannot immediately be answered. Locke.

4. Price bid; act of bidding a price.
When stock is high, they come between,
Making by second hand their offers;
Then cunningly retire unseen,
With each a million in his coffers. Swift.

5. Attempt; endeavour.
Many motions, though they be unprofitable to expel that which hurteth, yet they are offers of nature, and cause motions by content; as in groaning, or crying upon pain. Bacon.
It is in the power of every one to make some clay, some offer and attempt, so as to shew that the heart is not idle or insensible, but that it is full and big, and knows itself to be so, though it wants strength to bring forth. South's Sermon.

One sees in it a kind of offer at modern architecture, but at the same time that the architect has shown his dislike of the gothic manner, one may see that they were not arrived at the knowledge of the true way. Addison on Italy.

6. Something given by way of acknowledgment.
Fair streams that do vouchsafe in your clearness to represent unto me my blubbered face, let the tribute offer of my tears procure you stay a while with me, that I may begin yet at last to find something that pities me. Sidney, b. ii.

OFFERER. n. f. [from offer.]
1. One who makes an offer.
2. One who sacrifices, or dedicates in worship.
If the mind of the offerer be good, this is the only thing God respecteth. Hooker, b. v. f. 34.
When he commanded Abraham to sacrifice Isaac, the place of the offering was not left undetermined, and to the offerer's discretion. South's Sermons.

OFFERING. n. f. [from offer.] A sacrifice; any thing immolated, or offered in worship.
Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast. Shaksp.
They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd
Than spotted lives in the sacrifice. Shaksp.
When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his feed. Is. liiii. 10.

The gloomy god
Stood mute with awe, to see the golden rod;
Admir'd the destin'd offering to his queen,
A venerable gift so rarely seen. Dryden.

What nations now to Juno's pow'r will pray,
Or offerings on my slighted altars lay?
I'll favour her,
That my awaken'd soul may take her flight,
Renew'd in all her strength, and fresh with life,
An offering fit for heaven. Addison's Cato.

OFFERTORY. n. f. [offertoire, Fr.] The thing offered; the act of offering.
He went into St. Paul's church, where he made offertory of his standards, and had orisons and Te Deum sung. Bacon.

OFFERTURE. n. f. [from offer.] Offer; proposal of kindness.
A word not in use.
Thou hast prevented us with offertures of thy love, even when we were thine enemies. King Charles.

OFFICE. n. f. [office, Fr. officium, Latin.]
1. A public charge or employment.
You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

OFF

Methought this staff, mine office-badge in courts,
Was broke in twain. Shaksp. Henry VI. p. ii.
The insulence of office. Shaksp.

2. Agency; peculiar use.
All things that you should use to do me wrong, Deny their office. Shaksp. King Lear.
In this experiment the several intervals of the teeth of the comb do the office of so many prisms, every interval producing the phenomenon of one prism. Newet, Optis.

3. Business; particular employment.
The sun was sunk, and after him the star
Of Hesperus, whose office is to bring Twilight upon the earth. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix.

4. Act of good or ill voluntarily tendered.
Wolves and bears
Casting their savageness aside, have done
Like offices of pity. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
Mrs. Ford, I see you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only in the simple office of love, but in all the accompaniment, complement, and ceremony of it. Shaksp. Merry W. of Windsor.
I would I could do a good office between you. Shaksp.
The wolf took this occasion to do the fox a good office. L'Estrange.

You who your pious offices employ
To save the reliques of abandon'd Troy. Dryd. Virg.

5. Act of worship.
This gate
Instructs you how to adore the heavens, and bows you
To morning's holy office. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

6. Formulary of devotions.
Whoever hath children or servants; let him take care that they say their prayers before they begin their work: the Lord's prayer, the ten commandments, and the creed, is a very good office for them, if they are not fitted for more regular offices. Taylor's Devotion.

7. Rooms in a house appropriated to particular business.
What do we but draw anew the model
In fewer offices? at least desist
To build at all. Shaksp. Henry IV. p. ii.
Let offices stand at distance, with some low galleries to pass from them to the palace itself. Bacon.

8. Place where business is transacted. [Officina, Lat.]
What shall good old York see there,
But empty lodgings and unfurnish'd walls, Unpeopled offices, untrod stones? Sha. Rich. II.
Empton and Dudley, though they could not but hear of these scruples in the king's conscience, yet as if the king's soul and his money were in several offices, that the one was not to intermeddle with the other, went on with as great rage as ever. Bacon's Henry VII.

To OFFICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to discharge; to do.
I will be gone, altho'
The air of Paradise did fan the house,
And angels offic'd all. Sha. All's well that ends well.

OFFICER. n. f. [officier, French.]
1. A man employed by the publick.
'Tis an office of great worth,
And you an officer fit for the place. Shaksp.
Submit you to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and be content
To suffer lawful censure. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

The next morning there came to us the same officer that came to us at first to conduct us to the stranger's house. Bac.
If it should fall into the French hands, all the princes would return to be the several officers of his court. Temple.
As a magistrate or great officer he locks himself up from all approaches. South's Sermons.

Birds of prey are an emblem of rapacious officers. A superior power takes away by violence from them, that which by violence they took away from others. L'Estrange.

2. A commander in the army.
If he did not nimble ply the spade,
His furly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back.
I summon'd all my officers in haste,
All came resolv'd to die in my defence. Dryden.
The bad disposition he made in landing his men, shews him not only to be much inferior to Pompey as a sea officer, but to have had little or no skill in that element. Arb.

3. One who has the power of apprehending criminals.
The thieves are posselt with fear
So strongly, that they dare not meet each other;
Each takes his fellow for an officer. Shaksp. Henry IV.
We charge you
To go with us unto the officers. Shaksp. Henry VI.

OFFICERED. adj. [from officer.] Commanded; supplied with commanders.
What could we expect from an army officer'd by Irish papists and outlaws. Addison's Freeholder.

OFFICIAL. adj. [official, Fr. from officiarius.]

1. Conductive; appropriate with regard to their use.

In this animal are the guts, the stomach, and other parts official unto nutrition, which, were its aliment the empty reception of air, their provisions had been superfluous. Brown.

2. Pertaining to a public charge.

The tribunes
Endue you with the people's voice. Remains
That in th' official marks invested, you Anon do meet the senate. Shakef. Coriolanus.

Official is that person to whom the cognizance of causes is committed by such as have ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Ayl.
A poor man found a priest over familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad and could not prove it, the priest sued him before the bishop's official for defamation. Camden.
OFFICIALTY. n. f. [officialit, Fr. from official.] The charge or post of an official.

The office of an official to an archdeacon. Ayliffe.
To OFFICIATE. v. a. [from officiarius.] To give, in consequence of office.

All her number'd stars that seem to rowl Spaces incomprehensible, for such
Their distance argues, and their swift return
Diurnal, merely to officiate light Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot. Milton.

To OFFICIATE. v. n.

1. To discharge an office, commonly in worship.
No minister officiating in the church, can with a good conscience omit any part of that which is commanded by the afore said law. Sanderfon.

Who of the bishops or priests that officiates at the altar, in the places of their sepulchres, ever said we offer to thee Peter or Paul?

To prove curates no servants, is to rescue them from that contempt which they will certainly fall into under this notion; which considering the number of persons officiating this way, must be very prejudicial to religion. Collier.

2. To perform an office for another.
OFFICIAL. adj. [from officina, a shop.] Used in a shop, or belonging to it: thus official plants and drugs are those used in the shops.

OFFICIOUS. adj. [officiens, Fr. officius, Lat.]

1. Kind; doing good offices.

Yet, not to earth are those bright luminaries Officious; but to thee, earth's habitant. Milt. P. Lest.

2. Importunately forward.

You are too officious
In her behalf that scorns your services. Shakef.
At Taunton they killed in fury an officious and eager commissioner for the subsidy. Bacon's Henry VII.

Cato, perhaps
I'm too officious, but my forward cares
Would fain preserve a life of so much value. Addison.

OFFICIOUSLY. adv. [from officius.]

1. Importunately forward.

The most corrupt are most obsequious grown,
And those they scorn'd, officiously they own. Dryden.

Flat ring crouds officiously appear,
To give themselves, not you, an happy year. Dryd.

2. Kindly; with unasked kindness.

Let thy goats officiously be nurs'd,
And led to living streams to quench their thirst. Dryd.

OFFICIOUSNESS. n. f. [from officius.]

1. Forwardness of civility, or respect, or endeavour. Commonly in an ill sense.

I threw my officiousness by an offering, though I betray my poverty by the measure. South's Serm.

2. Service.

In whom is required understanding as in a man, courage and vivacity as in a lion, service and ministerial officiousness as in the ox, and expedition as in the eagle. Brown's V. Err.

OMPHALOPTICK. n. f. [ὀμφαλός and οπτικός.] An optic glass that is convex on both sides, commonly called a convex lens. Diſt.

ON. prep. [aen, Dutch; an, German.] 1. It is put before the word, which signifies that which is under, that by which any thing is supported, which any thing covers, or where any thing is fixed.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed, But on his knees at meditation. Shakep. Rich. III.

What news?— —Richmond is on the seas. —There let him sink and be the seas on him. Shakep.

Distracted terror knew not what was best; On what determination to abide. Daniel's Civ. War.

How soon hath time, the fittle thief of youth, Stol'n on his wing my three and twentieth year, My halting days fly on with full career. Milton.

As some to witness truth heav'n's call obey, So some on earth must, to confirm it, stay. Dryden.

They slooping low, Perch'd on the double tree. Dryden's En. vi.

2. It is put before any thing that is the subject of action. Th' unhappy husband, husband now no more, Did on his tuneful harp his loss deplore. Dryden.

3. Noting addition or accumulation. Mischiefs on mischiefs, greater still and more, The neighb'ring plain with arms is cover'd o'er. Dryden.

4. Noting a state of progression. Ho Maris! whither on thy way so fast? This leads to town. Dryden.

5. It sometimes notes elevation. Chuse next a province for thy vineyard's reign, On hills above, or in the lowly plain. Dryden.

6. Noting approach or invasion. Their navy ploughs the wat'ry main, Yet soon expect it on your shores again. Dryden.

On me, on me let all thy fury fall, Nor err from me, since I deserve it all. Pope.

7. Noting dependence or reliance. On God's providence and on your bounty, all their present support and future hopes depend. Smalbridge.

8. At, noting place. On each side her, Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids. Sha. Ant. and Cleop.

9. It denotes the motive or occasion of any thing. The same prevalence of genius, the world cannot pardon your concealing, on the same consideration; because we neither have a living Varus nor a Horace. Dryden.

The joy of a monarch for the news of a victory, must not be exprest like the ecstasy of a harlequin on the receipt of a letter from his mistress. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The best way to be used by a father on any occasion, to reform any thing he wishes mended in his son. Locke.

We abstain on such solemn occasions from things lawful, out of indignation that we have often gratified ourselves in things unlawful. Smalbridge's Sermons.

10. It denotes the time at which any thing happens: as, this happened on the first day. On is used, I think, only before day or hour.

11. It is put before the object of some passion. Compassion on the king commands me stop. Shakep.

Could tears recal him into wretched life, Their sorrow hurts themselves; on him is lost. Dryden.

12. In forms of denunciation it is put before the thing threatened. Hence on thy life; the captive maid is mine, Whom not for price or pray's I will resign. Dryden.

13. Noting imprecation. Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you, That triumph thus upon my misery! Shakespeare.

14. Noting invocation. On thee, dear wife, in deserts all alone He call'd. Dryden's Virg. Georg. iv.

15. Noting the state of any thing. —The earth shook to see the heav'n's on fire, And not in fear of your nativity. Shakep. Henry IV.

The horses burnt as they stood fast tied in the stables, or by chance breaking loose ran up and down with their tails and mains on a light fire. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

His fancy grows in the progress, and becomes on fire like a chariot wheel by its own rapidity. Pep. Pref. to Iliad.

16. Noting stipulation or condition. I can be satisfied on more easy terms. Dryden.

17. Noting distinction or opposition. The Rhodians, on the other side, mindful of their former honour, valiantly repulsed the enemy. Knolles.

18. Before

ONC

18. Before it, by corruption, it stands for of.
This tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach on't. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
A thriving gamester has but a poor trade on't, who fills his pockets at the price of his reputation. Locke's Educat.
19. Noting the manner of an event.
Note,
How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden? Shakefp.
ON. adv. See UPON.
20. On, the fame with upon. See UPON.
1. Forward; in succession.
As he forbore one act, so he might have foreborn another, and after that another, and so on, till he had by degrees weakened, and at length mortified and extinguished the habit itself. South's Sermons.
If the tenant fail the landlord, he must fail his creditor, and he his, and so on. Locke.
These smaller particles are again composed of others much smaller, all which together are equal to all the pores or empty spaces between them; and so on perpetually till you come to solid particles, such as have no pores. Newt.
2. Forward; in progression.
On indeed they went; but oh! not far;
A fatal stop travers'd their head-long course. Daniel.
So saying, on he led his radiant files. Milton.
Hopping and flying, thus they led him on To the flow lake. Dryden.
What kindled in the dark the vital flame,
And ere the heart was form'd, push'd on the red'ning stream.
Blackmore on Creation.
Go to, I did not mean to chide you;
On with your tale. Rosw's J. Shore.
3. In continuance; without ceasing.
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn. Crashaw.
Sing on, sing on, for I can ne'er be cloy'd. Dryden.
You roam about, and never are at rest;
By new desires, that is, new torments still possess:
As in a feverish dream you still drink on,
And wonder why your thirst is never gone. Dryden.
The peasants defy the sun; they work on in the hottest part of the day without intermission. Locke's Educat.
4. Not off.
Upon the body, as part of dress.
A long cloak he had on. Sidney.
Stiff in brocade, and pinch'd in stays,
Her patches, paint, and jewels on;
All day let envy view her face,
And Phyllis is but twenty-one. Prior.
6. It notes resolution to advance.
Since 'tis decreed, and to this period lead
A thousand ways, the noblest path we'll tread;
And bravely on, till they or we, or all,
A common sacrifice to honour fall. Denham.
- ON. interj. A word of incitement or encouragement to attack; elliptically for go on.
Therefore on, or strip your sword stark-naked; for meddle you must. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace,
By this one bloody trial of sharp war. Shakefp. R. III.
- ONCE. adv. [from one.]
1. One time.
Trees that bear mast, are fruitful but once in two years;
the cause is, the expence of sap. Bacon.
Forthwith from out the ark a raven flies,
And after him the surer messenger,
A dove, sent forth once and again to spy
Green trees or ground. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
You came out like some great monarch, to take a town but once a year, as it were for your diversion, though you had no need to extend your territories. Dryden.
O virgin! daughter of eternal night,
Give me this once thy labour, to sustain
My right, and execute my just disdain.
In your tuneful lays,
Once more rebound the great Apollo's praise. Pope.
2. A single time.
Who this heir is, he does not once tell us. Locke.
3. The same time.
At once with him they rose:
Their rising all at once was as the sound
Of thunder heard remote. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast,
And on the lips a burning kiss impress'd. Dryden.
Now that the fixed stars, by reason of their immense distance, appear like points, unless so far as their light is dilated by refraction may appear from hence, that when the

ONE

- moon passes over them and eclipses them, their light vanishes;
not gradually like that of the planets, but all at once. Newt.
4. At a point of time indivisible.
Night came on, not by degrees prepared,
But all at once; at once the winds arise,
The thunders roll. Dryden's Cimon and Iphig.
5. One time, though no more.
Fufinus, those ill deeds that fully fame,
In blood once tainted, like a current run
From the lewd father to the lewder son. Dryden.
6. At the time immediate.
This hath all its force at once, upon the first impression, and is ever afterwards in a declining state. Atterbury.
7. Formerly; at a former time.
Thereon his arms and once-lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.
My soul had once some foolish fondness for thee,
But hence 'tis gone. Addison.
8. Once seems to be rather a noun than an adverb, when it has at before it, and when it is joined with an adjective: as, this once, that once.
ONE. adj. [an, cene, Saxon; een, Dutch; ein, German; εἷς, Greek.]
1. Less than two; single; denoted by an unite.
The man he knew was one that willingly,
For one good look would hazard all. Daniel.
Pindarus the poet, and one of the wisest, acknowledged also one God the most high, to be the father and creator of all things. Raleigh.
If one must be rejected, one succeed,
Make him my Lord, within whose faithful breast
Is fix'd my image, and who loves me best. Dryden.
Love him by parts in all your numerous race,
And from those parts form one collected grace;
Then when you have refin'd to that degree,
Imagine all in one, and think that one is he. Dryden.
2. Indefinitely; any.
We shall
Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days. Shakespeare.
I took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other. Shakespeare's Tempest.
When any one hearth the word of the kingdom, and un-derstandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. Matt. xiii. 19.
If any one prince made a felicity in this life, and left fair fame after death, without the love of his subjects, there were some colour to despise it. Suckling.
3. Different; diverse; opposed to another.
What a precious comfort to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes. Shakespeare.
It is one thing to draw outlines true, the features like, the proportions exact, the colouring tolerable, and another thing to make all these graceful. Dryden.
Suppose the common depth of the sea, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile. Burnet.
It is one thing to think right, and another thing to know the right way to lay our thoughts before others with advantage and clearness. Locke.
My legs were clost together by so many wrappers one over another, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. Add.
Two bones rubbed hard against one another, or with a file, produce a fetid smell. Arbutnot on Aliments.
At one time they keep their patients so warm, as almost to fright them, and all of a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue.
Baker on Learning.
4. One of two opposed to the other.
Ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this. Deutr. iv. 32.
Both the matter of the stone and marchafite, had been at once fluid bodies, till one of them, probably the marchafite, first growing hard, the others, as being yet of a more yielding consistence, accommodated itself to the harder's figure. Boyle.
There can be no reason why we should prefer any one action to another, but because we have greater hopes of advantage from the one than from the other. Smallridge.
5. Particularly one.
One day when Phæbe fair,
With all her band was following th' chase,
This nymph quite tire'd with heat of scorching air,
Sat down to rest. Fairy Queen, b. i.
6. Some future.
Heav'n waxeth old, and all the spheres above
Shall one day faint, and their swift motion stay;
And time itself, in time shall cease to move,
But the soul survives and lives for aye. Davies.
- ONE. n. f. [There are many uses of the word one, which serve to denominate it a substantive, though some of them may seem rather to make it a pronoun relative, and some may perhaps

ONE

- perhaps be considered as consistent with the nature of an adjective.]
1. A single person.
If one by one you wedded all the world,
She you kill'd would be unparallel'd. Shakespeare.
Although the beauties, riches, honours, sciences, virtues, and perfections of all men were in the present possession of one, yet somewhat beyond and above all this there would still be fought and earnestly thirsted for. Hooker, b. i.
From his lofty steed he flew,
And raising one by one the suppliant crew,
To comfort each. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
When join'd in one, the good, the fair, the great,
Descends to view the muse's humble seat. Graville.
2. A single mass or aggregate.
It is one thing only as a heap is one. Blackmore.
3. The first hour.
Till 'tis one o'clock, our dance of custom
Let us not forget. Shakefp. M. Wives of Wind.
4. The same thing.
I marvel, why I answer'd not again;
But that's all one, omittance is no-quittance. Shakefp.
To be in the understanding, and not to be understood, is all one as to say any thing is, and is not in the understanding. Locke.
5. A person.
A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in ranging human affairs. Watts's Logick.
6. A person by way of eminence.
Ferdinand
My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one,
The wisest prince that there had reign'd. Shakefp.
7. A distinct or particular person.
That man should be the teacher is no part of the matter;
for birds will learn one of another. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
No nations are wholly aliens and strangers the one to the other. Bacon's Holy War.
One or other fees a little box which was carried away with her, and so discovers her to her friends. Dryden.
8. Persons united.
As I have made ye one, lords, one remain:
So I grow stronger, you more honour gain. Shakefp.
9. Concord; agreement; one mind.
The king was well in structed how to carry himself between Ferdinand and Philip, resolving to keep themat one within themselves. Bacon's Henry VII.
He is not at one with himself what account to give of it.
Tillotson.
10. [On, on, French. It is used sometimes a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any person. For one the English formerly used men; as, they live obscurely men know not how, or die obscurely, men mark not when. Afcham. For which it would now be said, one knows not how, one knows not when; or, it is not known how.] Any person; any man indefinitely.
It is not worthy to be brought to heroic effects by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney, b. ii.
One may be little the wiser for reading this dialogue, since it neither lets forth what Ærona is, nor what the cause should be which threatens her with death. Sidney, b. ii.
One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease, affluence and power; not of one who had been just stripped of all those advantages. Atterbury.
For provoking of urine, one should begin with the gentlest first. Arbutnot on Aliments.
For some time one was not thought to understand Aristotle, unless he had read him with Averroes's comment. Baker.
11. A person of particular character.
Then must you speak
Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well;
Of one not easily jealous; but being wrought Perplex'd in the extreme. Shakefp. Othello.
With lives and fortunes trusting one Who so discreetly us'd his own. Waller.
Edward I. was one that very well knew how to use a victory, as well as obtain it. Hale.
One who contemned divine and human laws. Dryden.
12. One has sometimes a plural, either when it stands for persons indefinitely; as, the great ones of the world; or when it relates to some thing going before, and is only the representative of the antecedent noun. This relative mode of speech, whether singular or plural, is in my ear not very elegant, yet is used by good authors.
Be not found here; hence with your little ones. Shakefp.
These successes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than such ruinous ones as are dyed in human blood.
Glanville's Scip. Pref.
He that will overlook the true reason of a thing which is but one, may easily find many false ones, error being infinite. Tillotson, Serm. 1.

ONO

- The following plain rules and directions, are not the less useful because they are plain ones. Atterbury.
There are many whose waking thoughts are wholly employed on their sleeping ones. Addison's Spectator.
Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority limited by law. Addison's Freeholder.
This evil fortune which attends extraordinary men, hath been imputed to divers causes that need not be set down, when so obvious an one occurs, that when a great genius appears the dunces are all in conspiracy against him. Swift.
- ONE'EYED. adj. [one and eye.] Having only one eye.
A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint
The oncey'd heron on his elephant. Dryden.
The mighty family
Of oncey'd brothers hasten to the shore. Addison.
- ONEIROCRITICAL. adj. [ὄνειρος, Gr. onirocritique, Fr. it should therefore according to analogy be written onirocritique and onirocritic.] Interpretative of dreams.
If a man has no mind to pass by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumstances, he may employ himself in that new kind of observation which my oneirocritical correspondent has directed him to make. Addison's Spectator.
- ONEIROCRITICK. n. f. [ὄνειρος, Gr.] An interpreter of dreams.
Having surveyed all ranks and professions, I do not find in any quarter of the town an oneirocritick, or an interpreter of dreams. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup> 505.
- ONE'NESS. n. f. [from one.] Unity; the quality of being one.
Our God is one, or rather very oneness and mere unity, having nothing but itself in itself, and not consisting, as all things do besides God, of many things. Hooker.
The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases, is the one eternal indivisible divine nature, and the eternity of the son's generation, and his co-eternity, and his consubstantiality with the father when he came down from Heaven and was incarnate. Hammond.
- ON'ERARY. adj. [onerarius, Lat. oneraire, Fr.] Fitted for carriage or burthens.
TO ON'ERATE. v. a. [onerare, Lat.] To load; to burthen.
ON'ERATION. n. f. [from onerate.] The act of loading. DiZ.
- ON'EROUS. adj. [onerous, Fr. onerous, Lat.] Burthenfome; oppressive.
A banished person, that is absent out of necessity, retains all things onerous to himself, as a punishment for his crime.
Ayliffe's Pervergon.
- ONION. n. f. [oignon, French.]
It hath an orbicular, coated, bulbous root; the leaves are hollow or pip; the stalk also hollow and swells out in the middle; the flowers consisting of six leaves are collected into a spherical head; the style of the flower becomes a roundish fruit divided into three cells, containing roundish seeds. Milth.
If the boy have not a woman's gift
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well. Sha. Taming of the Shrew.
I an ass, am onion-cy'd. Sha. Ant. and Cleopatra.
This is ev'ry cook's opinion,
No faw'ry dish without an onion:
But lest your kissing should be spoil'd,
Your onions must be thoroughly boil'd. Swift.
- ON'LY. adj. [from one, only, or unlike.]
1. Single; one and no more.
Of all whom fortune to my sword did bring,
This only man was worth the conquering. Dryden.
2. This and no other.
The logic now in use has long possessed the chair, as the only art taught in the schools for the direction of the mind in the study of the sciences. Locke.
3. This above all other: as, he is the only man for music.
ONLY. adv.
1. Simply; singly; merely; barely.
I propose my thoughts only as conjectures. Burnet.
The posterity of the wicked inherit the fruit of their father's vices; and that not only by a just judgment, but from the natural course of things. Tillotson, Serm. 4.
All who deserve his love, he makes his own;
And to be lov'd himself, needs only to be known. Dryd.
Nor must this contrition be exercised by us, only for grosser evils; but when we live the best. Wake.
2. So and no otherwise.
Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, was only evil continually. Gen. vi. 5.
3. Singly without more: as, only begotten.
ONOMANCY. n. f. [ὄνομα and μαντεια.] Divination by a name.
Definitions were superstitiously, by onomancy, deciphered out of names, as though the names and natures of men were suitable, and fatal necessities concurred herein with voluntary motion. Camden.
- ONOMANTICAL. adj. [ὄνομα and μαντεια.] Predicting by names.
Theodatus, when curious to know the success of his wars against the Romans, an onomantical or name-wizard Jew, 18 P willed

ONY

willed him to shut up a number of swine and give some of them Roman names, others Gothish names with several marks, and there to leave them. Camden.

ONSET. n. f. [on and set.]

1. Attack; storm; assault; first brunt.
As well the soldier dieth, which standeth still, as he that gives the bravest onset. Sidney, b. ii.

All breathless, weary, faint,
Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd,
And kindling new his courage, seeming quaint,
Struck him so hugely, that through great contrainst
He made him stoop. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

The shout
Of battle now began, and rushing found
Of onset. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Sometimes it gains a point; and presently it finds itself baffled and beaten off; yet still it renews the onset, attacks the difficulty afresh; plants this reasoning and that argument, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obdurate enclosed truth. South.

Without men and provisions it is impossible to secure conquests that are made in the first onsets of an invasion. Addis.

Observe
The first impetuous onsets of his grief;
Use every artifice to keep him steadfast. Philips.

2. Something added by way of ornamental appendage. This sense, says Nicholson, is still retained in Northumberland, where onset means a tuft.

I will with deeds requite thy gentleness;
And for an onset, Titus, to advance Thy name and honourable family, Shakespeare, Tit. And.

Lavinia will I make my emprise. Shakespeare, Tit. And.

To ONSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To set upon; to begin.

This for a while was hotly onsett and a reasonable price offered, but soon cooled again. Carew.

ONSLAUGHT. n. f. [on and slay. See SLAUGHTER.] Attack; storm; onset.

They made a halt
To view the ground, and where t'assault,
Then call'd a council, which was best,
By siege or onslaught to invest
The enemy; and 'twas agreed
By storm and onslaught to proceed. Hudibras, p. i.

ONTOLOGIST. n. f. [from ontology.] One who considers the affections of being in general; a metaphysician.

ONTOLOGY. n. f. [ὄντα and λόγος.] The science of the affections of being in general; metaphysics.

The modes, accidents and relations that belong to various beings, are copiously treated of in metaphysics, or more properly ontology. Watts's Logic.

ONWARD. adv. [onþearþ, Saxon.]

1. Forward; progressively.

My lord,
When you went onward on this ended action,
I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye, Shakespeare, b. ii.

Satan was now at hand, and from his seat
The monster moving onward came as fast,
With horrid strides. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Him thro' the spicy forest onward come Adam discern'd, as in the door he sat
Of his cool bow'r. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Not one looks backward, onward still he goes,
Yet ne'er looks forward farther than his nose. Pope.

2. In a state of advanced progression.

Philoxenus came to see how onward the fruits were of his friends labour. Sidney.

You are already so far onward of your way, that you have forsaken the imitation of ordinary converse. Dryden.

3. Somewhat farther.

A little onward lend thy guiding hand
To these dark steps, a little farther on. Milton.

ONYCHA. n. f. It is found in two different senses in scripture. — The odoriferous snail or shell, and the stone named onyx. The greatest part of commentators explain it by the onyx or odoriferous shell, like that of the shell-fish called purpura. The onyx is fished for in watry places of the Indies, where grows the spicardi, which is the food of this fish and what makes its shell so aromatick. Calmet.

Take sweet spices, onycha, and galbanum. Ex. xxx. 34.

ONYX. n. f. [ὄνυξ.] The onyx is a semipellucid gem, of which there are several species, is the true onyx legitima of the ancients. It is a very elegant and beautiful gem, and the regular arrangement and disposition of its colours make amends for their want of show. Hill's Mat. Med.

Nor are her rare endowments to be sold,
For glittering sand by Ophir shewn,
The blue-eyed saphir, or rich onyx stone. Samuel.

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind: it is of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red: when on one or both sides the white, there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish or fresh colour, the jewellers call the stone a fardonyx. Woodward on Effig.

OOZE. n. f. [either from eaux, waters, French; or pæz, wetness, Saxon.]

1. Soft mud; mire at the bottom of water; slime.

My fou i' th' ooze is bedded. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Some carried up into their grounds the ooze or salt water mud, and found good profit thereby.

Old father Thames rais'd up his rev'rend head,
Deep in his ooze he fought his sedge bed,
And shrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

2. Soft flow; spring. This seems to be the meaning in Prior.

From his first fountain and beginning ooze,
Down to the sea each brook and torrent flows. Prior.

3. The liquor of a tanner's vat.

To OOZE. v. n. [from the noun.] To flow by stealth; to run gently; to drain away.

When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, even then
A war'ish humour swell'd and ooze'd agen. Dryden.

Where creeping waters ooze,
Where marishes stagnate, and where rivers wind,
Cluster the rolling fogs. Thomson, Autumn.

The lilly drinks
The latent rill, scarce oozing thro' the grafs. Thomson.

O'OZY. adj. [from ooze.] Miry; muddy; slimy.

From his oozy bed,
Old father Thames advanc'd his rev'rend head. Pope.

To OPA'CATE. v. a. [opaco, Lat.] To shade; to cloud; to darken; to obscure.

The same corpufcles upon the unstopping of the glafs, did opacate that part of the air they moved in. Boyle.

OPACITY. n. f. [opacitas, Fr. opacitas, Lat.] Cloudiness; want of transparency.

Can any thing escape the perspicacity of those eyes in whose optics there is no opacity? Brown.

Had there not been any night, shadow or opacity, we should never have had any determinate conceit of darkness. Glanville.

How much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit is it to transmit the species. Ray on the Creation.

The least parts of almost all natural bodies, are in some measure transparent; and the opacity of those bodies ariseth from the multitude of reflexions cauled in their internal parts. Newt. Opt.

OPACOUS. adj. [opacus, Latin.] Dark; obscure; not transparent.

When he perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal diffuſion through the whole place that it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, and more subtle far than they, and consequently, divisible into lesser atoms; and having lesser pores, gives less scope to our eyes to miss light. Digby.

Upon the firm opacous globe
Of this round world, whose first convex divides
The luminous inferior orbs, inclos'd
From chaos, and th' inroad of darkness old, Satan alighted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

OPAL. n. f. The opal is a very elegant and a very singular kind of stone, it hardly comes within the rank of the pellucid gems, being much more opaque, and less hard. It is found always in the pebble shape of various sizes, from the head of a pin to the bigness of a walnut. It is naturally bright, smooth and glossy, and shows all its beauty without the help of the lapidary: in colour it much resembles the finest mother of pearl; its basis seeming a bluish or greyish white, but with a property of reflecting all the colours of the rainbow, as turned differently to the light, among which the green and the blue are particularly beautiful, but the fiery red is the finest of all. This stone is found in the East-Indies, in Egypt, Persia and Tartary, and in some parts of Europe, particularly in Bohemia; but the oriental is much the finest. Hill's Mat. Med.

Thy mind is a very opal. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

Th' empyreal heav'n, extended wide
In circuit, undetermin'd square or round;
With opal tow'rs, and battlements adorn'd
Of living saphir. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

We have this stone from Germany, and is the same with the opal of the ancients. Woodw. on Effig.

OPALQUE. adj. [opacus, Lat.] They Shot upward still direct, whence no way round Shadow from body opaque can fall. Milton, Paradise Lost.

These disappearing fixt stars were actually extinguish'd and turned into more opaque and gross plainer-like bodies. Chene's Phil. Prin.

OPIPAROUS. adj. [from opiparus, Lat.] Sumptuous. DiD.

OPITULATION. n. f. [from opitulation, Lat.] An aiding; a helping. DiD.

OPIMUM. n. f. A juice, partly of the resinous, partly of the gummy kind. It is brought to us in flat cakes or masses; usually of a roundish figure, very heavy and of a dense texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark brownish yellow; its smell is very unpleasant, of a dead faint kind; and its taste very bitter and very acrid. It is brought from Natolia, from Egypt, and from the East-Indies, where it is produced from the white garden poppy; a plant of which every part is full of a milky juice, and with which the fields of Asia-Minor are in many places sown as ours are with corn. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet soft, green and full of juice, incisions are made in them, and from every one of these a few drops flow of a milky juice, which soon hardens into a solid consistence. These drops are gathered with great care, and the finest opium proceeds from the first incisions. In the countries where opium is produced, multitudes are employed in preparing it with water, honey and spices, and working it up into cakes; but what we generally have is the mere crude juice, or at most worked up with water, or a small quantity of honey sufficient to bring it into form. The ancients were greatly divided about the virtues and use of opium; some calling it a poison, and others the greatest of all medicines. At present it is in high esteem, and externally applied it is emollient, relaxing and discutient, and greatly promotes suppuration. A moderate dose of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet custom will make people bear a dram as a moderate dose; but in that case nature is vitiated. Its first effect is the making the patient cheerful, as if he had drank moderately of wine; it removes melancholy, excites boldness, and dissipates the dread of danger; and for this reason the Turks always take it when they are going to battle in a larger dose than ordinary: it afterward quiets the spirits, eases pain, and disposes to sleep. After the effect of a dose of opium is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the spirits, which had been elevated by it, become lower than before; and the pulse languid. An immoderate dose of opium brings on a sort of drunkenness, cheerfulness and loud laughter, at first, and, after many terrible symptoms, death itself. Those who have accustomed themselves to an immoderate use of opium, are subject to relaxations and weaknesses of all the parts of the body; they are apt to be faint, idle and thoughtless, and are generally in a stupid and uncomfortable state, except just after they have taken a fresh dose: they lose their appetite, and in fine grow old before their time. Hill.

Sleep hath forsook and giv'n me o'er To death's benumbing opium as my only cure. Milton.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporific or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies. Locke.

OPILE-TREE. n. f. [from opile and tree.] A sort of tree. Ainsl.

OPOBALSAMUM. n. f. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPOPONAX. n. f. [Latin.] A gum resin of a tolerably firm texture, in small loose granules, and sometimes in large masses, which are impure. It is of a strong disagreeable smell, and an acrid and extremely bitter taste. It is brought to us from the East, and was well known to the Greeks; but we are entirely ignorant of the plant which produces this drug. It is attenuating and discutient, and gently purgative. Hill.

OPP

OPPIDAN. n. f. [Oppidanus, Lat.] A townsman; an inhabitant of a town.

To OPPINGNERATE. v. a. [Oppingere, Lat.] To pledge; to pawn.

The duke of Guise Henry was the greatest usurer in France, for that he had turned all his estate into obligations; meaning that he had sold and oppingnerated all his patrimony, to give large donatives to other men. Bacon.

Ferdinando merchanted at this time with France, for the restoring Rouffillon and Perpignan, oppingnerated to them. Bacon's Henry VII.

To OPPILATE. v. a. [Oppile, Lat. oppiler, Fr.] To heap up obstruction.

OPPILATION. n. f. [Oppilation, Fr. from oppilate.] Obstruction; matter heaped together.

The ingredients prescribed in their substance actuate the spirits, reclude oppilations, and mundify the blood. Harvey.

OPPILATIVE. adj. [Oppilative, Fr.] Obstructive.

OPPLET. adj. [Oppletus, Lat.] Filled; crowded.

OPPO'NENT. adj. [Opponens, Lat.] Opposite; adverse.

Ere the foundations of this earth were laid,
It was opponent to our search ordain'd,
That joy, still fought, should never be attain'd. Prior.

OPPO'NENT. n. f. [Opponent, Lat.]

1. Antagonist; adversary.
2. One who begins the dispute by raising objections to a tenet.

Inasmuch as ye go about to destroy a thing which is in force, and to draw in that which hath not as yet been received, to impose on us that which we think not ourselves bound unto; that therefore ye are not to claim in any conference other than the plaintiffs or opponents part. Hooker.

How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator. More.

OPPORTUNE. adj. [opportune, Fr. opportunus, Latin.] Seasonable; convenient; fit; timely; well-timed; proper.

There was nothing to be added to this great king's felicity, being at the top of all worldly bliss, and the perpetual constancy of his prosperous successes, but an opportune death to withdraw him from any future blow of fortune. Bacon.

Will lift us up in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient seat; perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence with neighb'ring arms
And opportune excursion, we may chance
Re-enter heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Consider'd every creature, which of all
Most opportune might serve his wiles; and found
The serpent subtlest beast of all the field. Milton.

OPPORTUNELY. adv. [opportune, Fr. opportunus, Latin.] Conveniently; with opportunity either of time or place.

He was resolved to chuse a war rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being situate opportune to annoy England either for coast or trade. Bacon's Henry VII.

Against these there is a proper objection, that they offend uniformity; whereof I am therefore opportune induced to say somewhat. Wotton's Architecture.

This experiment does opportune supply the deficiency. Boyle.

OPPORTUNITY. n. f. [opportunitas, Fr. opportunitas, Lat.] Fit fit place; time; convenience; suitability of circumstances to any end.

A wife man will make more opportunities than he finds.
Mens behaviour should be like their apparel, not too straight but free for exercise. Bacon, Essay 53.

Opportunity, like a sudden gust,
Hath swell'd my calmer thoughts into a tempest.
Accur'd opportunity!
That work'd our thoughts into desires, desires
To resolutions; those being ripe and quicken'd, Thou giv'st them birth, and bring'st them forth to action. Denham.

Tho' their advice be good, their counsel wise,
Yet length still loses opportunities.
Neglect no opportunity of doing good, nor check thy desire of doing it, by a vain fear of what may happen. Atterb.

All poets have taken an opportunity to give long descriptions of the night. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

To OPPOSE. v. a. [Opposere, French; oppono, Latin.]

1. To act against; to be adverse; to hinder; to resist.

There's no bottom, none
In my voluptuousness: and my desire
All continent impediments would o'erbear,
That did oppose my will. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. To put in opposition; to offer as an antagonist or rival.

If all men are not naturally equal, I am sure all slaves are; and then I may, without presumption, oppose my single opinion to his. Locks.

3. To place as an obstacle.

Since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me

OPP

Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

I thro' the seas puri'd their evil'd race,
Engag'd the heav'n's, oppos'd the stormy main;
But billows roar'd and tempests rag'd in vain. Dryden.

4. To place in front.

Her grace sat down
In a rich chair of state; opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people. Shakespeare.

To OPPOSE. v. n.

1. To act adversely.

A servant, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great matter. Shakespeare. King Lear.

He practis'd to dispatch such of the nobility as were like to oppose against his mischievous drift, and in such sort to en-cumber and weaken the rest, that they should be no impediments to him. Hayward.

2. To object in a disputation; to have the part of raising difficulties against a tenet supposed to be right.

OPPOSELESS. adj. [from oppose.] Irrefutable; not to be opposed.

I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your great opposeless wills. Shakespeare.

OPPOSE'ER. n. f. [from oppose.] One that opposes; antagonist; enemy; rival.

Now the fair goddess fortune
Fall deep in love with thee, and her great charms
Misguide thy opposers swords: bold gentleman!
Prosperity be thy page. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Brave wits that have made essays worthy of immortality;
yet by reason of envious and more popular opposers, have submitted to fate, and are almost lost in oblivion. Clowe.

I do not see how the ministers could have continued in their stations, if their opposers had agreed about the methods by which they should be ruined. Swift.

A hardy modern chief,
A bold opposer of divine belief. Blackmore.

OPPOSITE. adj. [opposite, Fr. oppositus, Lat.]

1. Placed in front; facing each other.

To th' other five,
Their planetary motions and aspects,
In sextile, square, trine and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
- 2. Adverse; repugnant.

Nothing of a foreign nature, like the trifling novels, by which the reader is misled into another sort of pleasure, opposite to that which is designed in an epic poem. Dryd.

This is a prospect very uneasy to the lusts and passions, and opposite to the strongest desires of flesh and blood. Roger.

3. Contrary.

In this fallen state of man religion begins with repentance and conversion, the two opposite terms of which are God and sin. Tillotson, Sermon 1.

Particles of speech have divers, and sometimes almost opposite significations. Locke.

OPPOSITE. n. f. Adversary; opponent; antagonist; enemy.

To the best and wisest, while they live, the world is continually a froward opposite, a curious observer of their defects and imperfections; their virtues it afterwards as much admireth. Hooker, b. v. f. 7.

He is the most skilful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you could have found in Illyria. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

The knight whom fate or happy chance
Shall grace his arms so far in equal fight,
From out the bars to force his opposite,
The prize of valour and of love shall gain. Dryden.

OPPOSITELY. adv. [from opposite.]

1. In such a situation as to face each other.

The lesser pair are joined edge to edge, but not oppositely with their points downward, but upward. Grew's Med.- 2. Adversely.

I oft have seen, when corn was ripe to mow,
And now in dry, and brittle straw did grow,
Winds from all quarters oppositely blow. May's Virgil.

OPPOSITENESS. n. f. [from opposite.] The state of being opposite.

OPPOSITION. n. f. [Opposition, Fr. oppositio, Lat.]

1. Situation so as to front something opposed.
2. Hostile resistance.

He
Cry'd oh! and mounted; found no opposition
From what he look'd for should oppose. Shakespeare.

Virtue which breaks thro' all opposition,
And all temptation can remove,
Most fitness, and most is acceptable above.
He considers Lausus rescuing his father at the hazard of his own life, as an image of himself when he took Anchises on his shoulders, and bore him safe thro' the rage of the fire and the opposition of his enemies. Dryden's Durydan.- 3. Contrariety of affection.

They who never tried the experiment of a holy life, measure

OPP

sure the laws of God not by their intrinsic goodness, but by the reluctance and opposition which they find in their own hearts. Tillotson, Sermon 6.

4. Contrariety of interest; contrariety of measures.
5. Contrariety of meaning; diversity of meaning.

The parts of every true opposition do always both concern the same subject, and have reference to the same thing, with otherwise they are but in shew opposite, and not in truth. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.

Reason can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident, nor allow it to enter probability in opposition to knowledge and certainty. Locke.

To OPRESS. v. a. [Oppressus, Lat.]

1. To crush by hardship or unreasonable severity.

Israel and Judah were oppressed together, and all that took them captives held them fast, they refused to let them go. Jer. l. 33.

Alas! a mortal moil oppress of those Whom fate has loaded with a weight of woes. Pope.

2. To overpower; to subdue.

We're not ourselves,
When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body. Shakespeare. King Lear.

In blazing height of noon,
The sun oppress'd, is plung'd in thickest gloom. Thomf.

OPPRESSION. n. f. [Oppression, Fr. from oppressus.]

1. The act of oppressing; cruelty; severity.
2. The state of being oppressed; misery.

Famine is in thy cheeks;
Need and oppression stare within thine eyes,
Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back. Shakespeare.

Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.

3. Hardship; calamity.

We are all subject to the same accidents; and when we see any under particular oppression, we should look upon it as the common lot of human nature. Addis. Spectator.

4. Dullness of spirits; lassitude of body.

Drouthness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbutnot on Aliment.

OPPRESSIVE. adj. [from oppress.]

1. Cruel; inhuman; unjustly exacting or severe.
2. Heavy; overwhelming.

Alicia, reach thy friendly arm,
And help me to support that feeble frame,
That nodding totters with oppressive we,
And sinks beneath its load. Rowe's Jane Shore.

OPPRESSOR. n. f. [Oppressor, Fr. from oppressus.] One who harasseth others with unreasonable or unjust severity.

I from oppressors did the poor defend,
The fatherless, and such as had no friend. Sandys.

The cries of orphans, and th' oppressor's rage,
Had reach'd the stars. Dryden.

Power when employed to relieve the oppressed, and to punish the oppressor, becomes a great blessing. Swift.

OPPROBRIOUS. adj. [from opprobrium, Lat.] Reproachful; disgraceful; causing infamy; scurrilous.

Himself pronounceth them blessed, that should for his name fake be subject to all kinds of ignominy and opprobrious malediction. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.

I will not here defile
My unstain'd verse with his opprobrious name. Daniel.

Solomon he led by fraud to build
His temple right against the temple of God,
On the opprobrious hill. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

They see themselves unjustly aspersed, and vindicate themselves in terms no less opprobrious than those by which they are attacked. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 137.

OPPROBRIOUSLY. ad. [from opprobrious.] Reproachfully; scurrilously.

Think you, this little prating York
Was not incited by his subtle mother,
To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously. Shakespeare. R. III.

OPPROBRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from opprobrious.] Reproachfulness; scurrility.

To OPPUGN. v. a. [Oppugno, Lat.] To oppose; to attack;
to resist.

For the ecclesiastical laws of this land we are led by a great reason to observe, and ye be by no necessity bound to oppugn them. Hooker's Pref.

They said the manner of their impeachment they could not but conceive did oppugn the rights of parliament. Clar.

If nothing can oppugn his love,
And virtue invidious ways can prove,
What cannot he confide to do
That brings both love and virtue too? Hud. p. i.

The ingredients reclude oppuginations, mundify the blood, and oppugn putrefaction. Harvey.

OPPU'GNANCY. n. f. [from oppugn.] Opposition.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows, each thing meets In meer oppugnancy. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cress.

OR

OPPU'GNER. n. f. [from oppugn.] One who opposes or attacks.

The modern and degenerate Jews be, upon the score of being the great patrons of man's free will, not causelessly esteemed the great oppugners of God's free grace. Boyle.

OPSI'MATHY. n. f. [Opsimathia, Lat.] Late education; late erudition.

OPSONATION. n. f. [Opsonatio, Latin.] Catering; a buying provisions. Diet.

OPTABLE. adj. [Optabilis, Lat.] Desirable; to be wished.

OPTATIVE. adj. [Optativus, Lat.] Expressive of desire. [In grammar.]

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation to signify wishing, which is called the optative mood. Clarke.

OPTICAL. n. f. [Opticus, Lat.] Relating to the science of optics.

It seems not agreeable to what anatomists and optical writ-ters deliver, touching the relation of the two eyes to each other. Boyle.

OPTICIAN. n. f. [from optick.] One skilled in opticks.

OPTICK. adj. [Opticus, Lat.]

1. Visual; producing vision; subservient to vision.

May not the harmony and discord of colours arise from the proportions of the vibrations propagated through the fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, as the harmony and discord of sounds arise from the proportions of the vibrations of the air? Newt. Opt.- 2. Relating to the science of vision.

Where our master handleth the contractions of pillars, we have an optic rule, that the higher they are the less should be always their diminution aloft, because the eye itself doth naturally contract all objects, according to the distance. Wotton's Architecture.

OPTICK. n. f. An instrument of sight; an organ of sight.

Can any thing escape the perspicacity of those eyes which were before light, and in whose opticks there is no opacity. Brown.

Our corporeal eyes we find Dazzle the opticks of our mind. Denham.

You may neglect, or quench, or hate the flame,
Whose smoke too long obscur'd your rising name,
And quickly cold indiff'rence will ensue,
When you love's joys thro' honour's optick view. Prior.

Why has not man a microscopick eye?
For this plain reason, man is not a fly.
Say what the use, were finer opticks giv'n,
T'inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n. Pope.

OPTICK. n. f. [Opticus, Lat.] The science of the nature and laws of vision.

No spherical body of what bigness soever illuminates the whole sphere of another, although it illuminate something more than half of a lesser, according unto the doctrine of opticks. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. vi.

Those who desire satisfaction in the appearance, must go to the admirable treatise of opticks by Sir Isaac Newton. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

OPTIMACY. n. f. [Optimates, Lat.] Nobility; body of nobles.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare co-ordination of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optimacy, and democracy. Howel.

OPTIMITY. n. f. [from optimus.] The state of being best.

OPTION. n. f. [Optio, Lat.] Choice; election.

Transplantation must proceed from the option of the people, else it sounds like an exile; so the colonies must be raised by the leave of the king and not by his command. Bacon.

Which of these two rewards we will receive, he hath left to our option. Smallbridge's Sermon.

OPULENCE. n. f. [Opulencia, Fr. opulentia, Latin.] Wealth;
Opulency. riches; affluence.

It must be a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulency. Shakespeare. Tim. of Athens.

After eight years spent in outward opulency and inward murmur, that it was not greater; after vast sums of money and great wealth gotten, he died unlamented. Clarendon.

He had been a person not only of great opulency, but authority. Atterbury.

There in full opulency a banker dwelt,
Who all the joys and pangs of riches felt;
His side board glitter'd with imagin'd plate,
And his proud fancy held a vast estate. Swift.

OPULENT. adj. [Opulent, Fr. opulentus, Lat.] Rich; wealthy; affluent.

He made him his ally, and provoked a mighty and opulent king by an offensive war in his quarrel. Bacon.

To begin with the supposed policy of gratifying only the rich and opulent. Does our wife man think that the grandee whom he courts does not see through all the little plots of his courtship. South's Sermons.

OPULENTLY. adv. [from opulent.] Richly; with splendor.

OR. conjunct. [Olden, Saxon.]

1. A disjunctive particle, marking distribution, and sometimes opposition.

Inquire what the antients thought concerning this world, whether it was to perish or no; whether to be destroyed

ORA

froyed or to stand eternally?
He my muse's homage shou'd receive,
If I cou'd write or Holles cou'd forgive.
Every thing that can be divided by the mind into two or more ideas, is called complex.
It corresponds to either; he must either fall or fly.
Or is sometimes redundant, but is then more properly omitted.
How great soever the sins of any unreformed person are, Christ died for him because he died for all; only he must reform and forsake his sins, or else he shall never receive benefit of his death.
[Or, or aye, Saxon.] Before; or ever, is before ever.
Or we go to the declaration of this psalm, it shall be convenient to shew who did write this psalm.
The dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd for whom, and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they sicken.
Learn before thou speak, and use physick or ever thou be sick.
OR. n. f. [French.] Gold.
The show'ry arch
With lifted colours gay, or, azure, gules, Delights and puzzles the beholders eyes.
ORACH. n. f. The flower is without leaves, but consists of many stamina arising from a five leav'd empalement; the point becomes a flat orbicular seed, enclosed in the empalement, which becomes a foliaceous capsule, including two sorts of seeds. There are thirteen species; of which the first called garden orach, was cultivated as a culinary herb, and used as spinach, though it is not generally liked by the English, but still esteemed by the French. It was formerly used in medicine.
ORACLE. n. f. [oracle, Fr. oraculum, Lat.]
1. Something delivered by supernatural wisdom.
The main principle whereupon our belief of all things therein contained dependeth, is, that the scriptures are the oracles of God himself.
2. The place where, or person of whom the determinations of heaven are enquired.
Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And fet me up in hope?
God hath now sent his living oracle
Into the world to teach his final will,
And sends his spirit of truth henceforth to dwell
In pious hearts, an inward oracle,
To all truth requisite for men to know.
3. Any person or place where certain decisions are obtained.
There mighty nations shall enquire their doom,
The world's great oracle in times to come.
4. One famed for wisdom; one whose determinations are not to be disputed.
To ORACLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To utter oracles. A word not received.
No more shalt thou by oracibus abuse
The gentiles.
ORACULAR. adj. [from oraculum.] Uttering oracles; resembling oracles.
Thy counsel would be as the oracle of Urim and thummim, those oraculous gems
On Aaron's breast, or tongue of seers old Infallible.
Here Charles contrives the ord'ring of his states,
Here he resolves his neighb'ring princes fates;
What nation shall have peace, where war be made,
Determin'd is in this oraculous shade.
Though their general acknowledgments of the weakness
Of human understanding look like cold and sceptical discouragements;
yet the particular expressions of their sentiments are as oraculous as if they were omniscient.
They have something venerable and oracular, in that unadorned gravity and shortness in the expression.
Th' oraculous seer frequents the Pharian coast,
Proteus a name tremendous o'er the main.
ORACULOUSLY. adv. [from oraculous.] In manner of an oracle.
The testimony of antiquity, and such as pass oraculosity amongst us, were not always so exact as to examine the doctrine they delivered.
Hence rise the branching beech and vocal oak,
Where Jove of old oraculosity spoke.
ORACULOUSNESS. n. f. [from oracular.] The state of being oracular.
ORATION. n. f. [oratio, Fr. oratio, Lat.] Prayer; verbal supplication; or oral worship: more frequently written orison.
Stay, let's hear the orations he makes.
Business might shorten, not disturb her pray'r;
Heav'n had the best, if not the greater share:
An active life, long oraisons forbids,
Yet still the pray'r, for still the pray'r by deeds.
ORAL. adj. [oral, Fr. oralis, Latin.] Delivered by mouth; not written.
Oral discourse, whose transient faults dying with the sound that gives them life, and so not subject to a strict review, more easily escapes observation.
St. John was appealed to as the living oracles of the church; and as his oral testimony lasted the first century, many have observed, that by a particular providence several of our Saviour's disciples, and of the early converts, lived to a very great age, that they might personally convey the truth of the gospel to those times which were very remote.
ORALLY. adv. [from oral.] By mouth; without writing.
Oral tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws of a kingdom, because they are complex, not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages.
ORANGE. n. f. [orange, Fr. aurantia, Latin.] The leaves have two lobes or appendages at their base like ears, and cut in form of a heart; the fruit is round and depressed, and of a yellow colour when ripe, in which it differs from the citron and lemon. The species are eight.
I will discharge it in your straw-colour'd beard, your orange tawny beard.
The notary came aboard, holding in his hand a fruit like an orange, but of colour between orange tawny and scarlet, which cast a most excellent odour, and is used for a preservative against infection.
Fine oranges, sauce for your veal,
Are charming when squeezed in a pot of brown ale.
The ideas of orange colour and azure, produced in the mind by the same infusion of lignum nephriticum, are no less distinct ideas than those of the same colours taken from two different bodies.
ORANGERY. n. f. [orangerie, Fr.] Plantation of oranges.
A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery, or artificial green house.
ORANGEMUSK. n. f. See PEAR, of which it is a species.
ORANGEWIFE. n. f. [orange and wife.] A woman who sells oranges.
You wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orangewife and a fofset feller.
ORATION. n. f. [oratio, Fr. oratio, Lat.] A speech made according to the laws of rhetoric; a harangue; a declamation.
There shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men.
This gives life and spirit to every thing that is spoken, awakens the dullest spirits, and adds a singular grace and excellency both to the person and his oration.
ORATORICAL. adj. [from orator.] Rhetorical; befitting an orator.
Where he speaks in an oratorical, affecting, or persuasive way, let this be explained by other places where he treats of the same theme in a doctrinal way.
ORATOR. n. f. [orator, Fr. orator, Lat.]
1. A public speaker; a man of eloquence.
Poor queen and son! your labour is but lost;
For Warwick is a subtle orator.
As when of old some orator renown'd,
In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence Flourish'd, since mute! to some great cause address'd, Stood in himself collected; while each part,
Motion, each act, won audience.
The constant design of both these orators in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point.
I have listened to an orator of this species, without being able to understand one single sentence.
Both orators so much renown'd,
In their own depths of eloquence were drown'd.
2. A petitioner. This sense is used in addresses to chancery.
ORATORY. n. f. [oratoria, Fr. oratoria, Lat.]
1. Eloquence; rhetorical skill.
Each pasture stored with sheep feeding with sober security, while the pretty lambs with bleating oratory craved the dams comfort.
When a world of men
Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath a woman's kindness over-rul'd.
When my oratory grew tow'rd end,
I bid them that did love their country's good,
Cry, God save Richard.
Unutterable, which the spirit of pray'r
Inspir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight
Than loudest oratory.
By this kind of oratory and professing to decline their own inclinations and wishes, purely for peace and unity, they prevailed over those who to deal with a people of much more politeness, learning, and wit, laid the greatest weight of his oratory upon the strength of his arguments.
ORCHAL. n. f. [orca, Lat. orca, Latin.] A sort of sea-fish.
An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals and orcas, and sea-maws clang.
ORCHAL. n. f. A stone from which a blue colour is made.
ORCHANET. n. f. An herb.
ORCHARD. n. f. [either hortyard or wortyard, says Skinner; ortzgarb, Saxon. Junius.] A garden of fruit-trees.
Planting of orchards is very profitable, as well as pleasurable.
They overcome their riches, not by making Baths, orchards, fish pools.
Her private orchards wall'd on ev'ry side,
To lawless Sylvans all access deny'd.
ORCHESTRE. n. f. [French. orchestre.] The place where the musicians are set at a publick show.
ORD. n. f. An edge or sharpness; as in ordhelm, ordbright, &c.
and in the Islandish tongue, ord signifies a spear or dart. Gib.
Ord, in old English, signified beginning; whence probably the proverbial phrase odds [ords] and ends, for scraps or remnants.
To ORDAIN. v. a. [ordaino, Lat. ordonner, Fr.]
1. To appoint; to decree.
Know the cause why musick was ordain'd;
Was it not to refresh the mind of man
After his studies, or his usual pain?
Jeroboam ordain'd a feast.
He hath also prepared for him the instruments of death;
he ordaineth his arrows against the persecutors.
As many as were ordain'd to eternal life, believed.
He commanded us to testify that it is he which was ordain'd of God to be the judge of quick and dead.
The fatal tent,
The scene of death, and place ordain'd for punishment.
To souls oppress'd and dumb with grief,
The Gods ordain this kind relief,
That musick should in sounds convey What dying lovers dare not say.
My reason bends to what thy eyes ordain;
For I was born to love, and thou to reign.
2. To establish; to settle; to institute.
Mulmutius
Ordain'd our laws, whose use the sword of Cæsar Hath too much mangled.
I will ordain a place for Israel.
God from Sinai descending, will himself
In thunder, lightning, and loud trumpets sound, Ordain them laws.
For thee I have ordain'd it, and Have suffer'd, that the glory may be thine
Of ending this great war; since none but thou
Can end it.
Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice.
3. To set in an office.
All signified unto you by a man, who is ordain'd over the affairs, shall be utterly destroyed.
4. To invest with ministerial function, or sacerdotal power.
Meletius was ordain'd by Arian bishops, and yet his ordination was never questioned.
ORDAINER. n. f. [from ordain.] He who ordains.
ORDEAL. n. f. [ordal, Sax. ordalium, low Lat. ordalie, Fr.] A trial by fire or water, by which the person accused appealed to heaven, by walking blindfold over hot bars of iron; or being thrown, I suppose, into the water; whence the vulgar trial of witches.
Their ordeal laws they used in doubtful cases, when clear proofs wanted.
In the time of king John, the purgation per ignem et aquam, or the trial by ordeal continued; but it ended with this king.
ORDER. n. f. [ordo, Lat. ordre, Fr.]
1. Method; regular disposition.
To know the true state of Solomon's house, I will keep this order; I will set forth the end of our foundation, the instruments for our works, the several employments assigned, and the ordinances we observe.
As St. Paul was full of the doctrine of the gospel; so it lay all clear and in order, open to his view.
2. Established process.
The moderator, when either of the disputants breaks the rules, may interpose to keep them to order.
3. Proper state.
Any of the faculties wanting, or out of order, produce suitable defects in mens understandings.
4. Regularity; settled mode.
This order with her sorrow she accords,
Which orderless all form of order brake.

5. Mandate;

ORA

Some harmless characters, that no one hit,
Come Henley's oratory, Osborn's wit.
2. Exercise of eloquence.
The Romans had feised upon the fleet of the Antiates, among which there were six armed with rostra, with which the consul Menenius adorned the publick place of oratory.
3. [Oratoire, French.]
Oratory signifies a private place, which is deputed and allotted for prayer alone, and not for the general celebration of divine service.
They began to erect to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner, which neither was possible by reason of the poor estate of the church, and had been perilous in regard of the world's envy towards them.
Do not omit thy prayers for want of a good oratory or place to pray in; nor thy duty for want of temporal encouragements.
ORB. n. f. [orbe, Fr. orbis, Latin.]
1. Sphere; orbicular body; circular body.
A mighty collection of water inclosed in the bowels of the earth, constitutes an huge orb in the interior or central parts; upon the surface of which orb of water the terrestrial strata are expanded.
The with a storm of darts to distance drive
The Trojan chief; who held at bay from far,
On his Vulcanian orb sustain'd the war.
2. Mundane sphere; celestial body; light of heaven.
The floor of heav'n
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims.
3. Wheel; any rolling body.
Of his fierce chariot roll'd as with the found
Of torrent floods.
4. Circle; line drawn round.
Circle described by any of the mundane spheres.
Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricities and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs, though no such things were.
With smiling aspect you serenely move,
In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love.
6. Period; revolution of time.
Self-begot, self-raised,
By our own quick'ning pow'r, when fatal course
Had circled his full orb, the birth mature
Of this our native heav'n.
7. Sphere of action.
Will you again unknot
This churlish knot of all abhorred war,
And move in that obedient orb again,
Where you did give a fair and nat'ral light.
8. It is applied by Milton to the eye, as being luminous and spherical.
A drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veild.
ORBIT. n. f. [orbatus, Lat.] Privation of parents or children.
ORBED. adj. [from orb.]
1. Round; circular; orbicular.
All those sayings will I overwear,
And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
As doth that orb'd continent the fire,
That severs day from night.
2. Formed into a circle.
Truth and justice then
Will down return to men,
Orb'd in a rainbow, and like glories wearing.
3. Rounded.
A golden axle did the work uphold,
Gold was the beam, the wheels were orb'd with gold.
ORBITAL. adj. [orbitalis, Fr. orbitalis, Lat.]
1. Spherical.
He shall monarchy with thee divide
Of all things, parted by th' empyreal bounds,
His quadrature from thy orbicular world.
2. Circular.
The form of their bottom is not the same; for whereas before it was of an orbicular make, they now look as if they were pressed.
By a circle I understand not here a perfect geometrical circle, but an orbicular figure, whose length is equal to its breadth, and which as to sense may seem circular.
ORBITALLY. adj. [from orbicular.] Spherically; circularly.
ORBITALNESS. n. f. [from orbicular.] The state of being orbicular.
ORBITATED. adj. [orbitalatus, Latin.] Moulded into an orb.
ORBIT. n. f. [orbite, Fr. orbite, Latin.] The line described by the revolution of a planet.
Suppose more suns in proper orbits roll'd,
Diffolv'd the frowns and chac'd the polar cold.
Suppose the earth placed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orb of Mercury; there the whole ocean

5. Mandate; precept; command.
Give order to my servants, that they take
No note of our being absent. Shakeſp. Mer. of Ven.
If the lords of the council iſſued out any order againſt them, or if the king ſent a proclamation for their repair to their houſes, preſently ſome nobleman deputed by the tables published a proteſtation againſt thoſe orders and proclamations.
Clarendon.
Upon this new fright, an order was made by both houſes for diſarming all the papists in England; upon which, and the like orders, though ſeldom any thing was after done, yet it ſerved to keep up the apprehenſions in the people, of dangers and deſigns, and to diſincline them from any reverence or affection to the queen. Clarendon.
I have received an order under your hand for a thouſand

11. [In the plural.] Hierarchical ſtate.
If the faults of men in orders are only to be judged among themſelves, they are all in ſome ſort parties. Dryden.
Having in his youth made a good progreſs in learning, that he might dedicate himſelf more intirely to religion he entered into holy orders, and in a few years became renowned for his ſanctity of life. Addiſon's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 164.
12. Means to an end.
Virgins muſt remember, that the virginity of the body is only excellent in order to the purity of the ſoul; for in the ſame degree that virgins live more ſpiritually than other per-ſons, in the ſame degree is their virginity a more excellent ſtate. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
We ſhould behave reverently towards the Divine Maſteſty, and juſtly towards men; and in order to the better diſcharge of theſe duties, we ſhould govern ourſelves in the uſe of ſen-ſual delights, with temperance. Tillotſon, Sermon 6.
The beſt knowledge is that which is of greateſt uſe in order to our eternal happineſs. Tillotſon, Sermon 1.
What we ſee is in order only to what we do not ſee; and both theſe ſtates muſt be joined together. Atterbury.
One man purſues power in order to wealth, and another wealth in order to power, which laſt is the ſafer way, and generally followed. Swift's Exam. N<sup>o</sup>. 27.
13. Meaſures; care.
It were meet you ſhould take ſome order for the ſoldiers, which are now firſt to be diſcharged and diſpoſed of ſome way; which may otherwiſe grow to as great inconvenience as all this that you have quit us from. Spencer on Ireland.

14. [In architecture.] A ſyſtem of the ſeveral members, ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilasters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, eſpecially thoſe of a column; ſo as to form one beautiful whole: or order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which ſome of the parts ought to have, on the account of the proportions that are given them.
There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek,
viz. the doric, ionic, and corinthian; and two Italian, viz.
the tuſcan and compoſite. The whole is compoſed of two parts at leaſt, the column and the entablature, and of four

ORD

- parts at the moſt; where there is a pedefal under the columns, and one acroter or little pedefal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts; the baſe, the ſhaft, and the capital; which parts are all different in the ſeveral orders.
In the tuſcan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, called diameters, by diameters is meant the thickneſs of the ſhaft at the bottom, the pe-defal having two; the column with baſe and capital, ſeven;
and the entablature one and three quarters.
In the doric order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedefal having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.
In the ionic order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedefal having two and two thirds, the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.
In the corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half, the pedefal having three, the column nine and a half, and the entablature two.
In the compoſite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedefal having three and one third, the column ten, and the entablature two.
In a columnade or range of pillars, the intercolumniation or ſpace between columns in the tuſcan order, is four diameters.
In the doric order, two and three quarters; in the ionic order, two and a quarter; in the corinthian order, two; and in the compoſite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.

As the ſun when it ariſeth in the heaven, ſo is the beauty of a good wife in the ordering of her houſe. Eccles. xxvi. 16.
Thou haſt ordered all in meaſure, number, and weight. Wisd. xi. 20.
Bias being aſked how a man ſhould order his life? anſwered, as if a man ſhould live long, or die quickly. Bacon.
2. To manage; to procure.
The kitchen clerk that hight diſfection,
Did order all the cates in ſcemly wife. Fairy Queen.
3. To methodiſe; to diſpoſe ſtly.
Theſe were the orderings of them in their ſervice, to come into the houſe of the Lord. 1 Chron. xxiv. 19.
4. To direct; to command.
5. To ordain to ſacerdotal function.
The book requirerth due examination, and giveth liberty to object any crime againſt ſuch as are to be ordered. Whiſt.
ORDERER. n. f. [from order.] One that orders, methodiſes, or regulates.
That there ſhould be a great diſpoſer and orderer of all things, a wife rewarder and puniſher of good and evil, hath appeared ſo equitable to men, that they have concluded it neceſſary. Suckling.
ORDERLESS. adj. [from order.] Diſorderly; out of rule.
All form is formleſs, order orderleſs,
Save what is oppoſite to England's love. Shakeſp.
ORDERLINESS. n. f. [from order.] Regularity; methodicalneſs.
ORDERLY. adj. [from order.]
1. Methodical; regular.
The book requirerth but orderly reading. Hooker.
2. Not tumultuous; well regulated.
Balfour, by an orderly and well-governed march, paſſed in the king's quarters without any conſiderable loſs, to a place of ſafety. Clarendon, b. viii.
3. According with eſtabliſhed method.
As for the orders eſtabliſhed, ſith the law of nature, of God and man, do all favour that which is in being, till orderly judgment of deciſion be given againſt it, it is but juſtice to exact obedience of you. Hooker's Pref.
A clergy reformed from popery in ſuch a manner, as happily to preſerve the mean between the two extremes, in doctrine, worſhip, and government, perfected this reformation by quiet and orderly methods, free from thoſe confuſions and tumults that elſewhere attended it. Atterbury.
ORDERLY. adv. [from order.] Methodically; according to order; regularly; according to rule.
All parts of knowledge have been thought by wiſe men to be then moſt orderly delivered and proceeded in, when they are drawn to their firſt original. Hooker, b. i.
Aſk him his name, and orderly proceed Shakeſp. Rich. III.
To ſwear him.
Make it orderly and well, Shakeſp.
According to the faſhion of the time.
It is walled with brick and ſtone, intermixed orderly. Sandy.
How ſhould thoſe active particles, ever and anon juſtified by the occuſion of other bodies, whereof there is an infinite ſtore, ſo orderly keep their cells without any alteration of ſite. Glouceſter.
In the body, when the principal parts, the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferior ſmaller veſſels act orderly

ORD

- orderly and duly, there ariſes a ſweet enjoyment upon the whole, which we call health. South's Sermon.
ORDINABLE. adj. [ordinatus, Lat.] Such as may be appointed.
All the ways of oeconomy God hath uſed toward a rational creature, to reduce mankind to that courſe of living which is moſt perfectly agreeable to our nature, and by the mercy of God ordinable to eternal bliſs. Hamm.
ORDINAL. adj. [ordinalis, Fr. ordinalis, Lat.] Noting order:
as, ſecond, third.
The moon's age is thus found; add to the epact the day of the month and the ordinal number of that month from March incluſive, becauſe the epact begins at March, and the ſum of thoſe, caſting away thirty or twenty-nine, as often as it ariſeth, is the age of the moon. Halder.
ORDINAL. n. f. [ordinalis, Fr. ordinale, Latin.] A ritual; a book containing orders. Ainſ.
ORDINANCE. n. f. [ordinance, French.]
1. Law; rule; preſcript.
It ſeemeth hard to plant any found ordinance, or reduce them to a civil government; ſince all their ill cuſtoms are permitted unto them. Spencer on Ireland.
Let Richard and Elizabeth,
The true ſucceders of each royal houſe,
By God's fair ordinance conjoin together! Shakeſp.
2. Obſervance commanded.
One ordinance ought not to exclude the other, much leſs to diſparage the other, and leaſt of all to undervalue that which is the moſt eminent. Taylor.
3. Appointment.
Things created to ſhew bare heads,
When one but of my ordinance ſtood up,
To ſpeak of peace or war. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
4. A canon. It is now generally written for diſtinction ordinance; its derivation is not certain.
Caves and wombly vaultages of France,
Shall chide your treſpaſs and return your mock,
In ſecond accent to his ordinance. Shakeſp. Hen. V.
ORDINARILY. adv. [from ordinary.]
1. According to eſtabliſhed rules; according to ſettled method.
We are not to look that the church ſhould change her public laws and ordinances, made according to that which is judged ordinarily, and commonly fitteſt for the whole, although it chance that for ſome particular men the ſame be found inconvenient. Hooker, b. iv. f. 12.
Springs and rivers do not derive the water which they ordinarily refund, from rain. Woodward's Nat. Hiſt.
2. Commonly; uſually.
The inſtances of human ignorance were not only clear ones, but ſuch as are not ſo ordinarily ſuſpected. Glenn.
Prayer ought to be more than ordinarily fervent and vigorous before the ſacrament. South's Sermons.
ORDINARY. adj. [ordinarius, Latin.]
1. Eſtabliſhed; methodical; regular.
Though in arbitrary governments there may be a body of laws obſerved in the ordinary forms of juſtice, they are not ſufficient to ſecure any rights to the people; becauſe they may be diſpenſed with. Addiſon's Freeholder.
The ſtanding ordinary means of conviction failing to influence them, it is not to be expected that any extraordinary means ſhould be able to do it. Atterbury.
2. Common; uſual.
Yet did the only utter her doubt to her daughters, thinking, ſince the worſt was paſt, ſhe would attend a further occaſion, leaſt over much haſte might ſeem to proceed of the ordinary miſlike between ſiſters in law. Sidney.
It is ſufficient that Moſes have the ordinary credit of an hiſtorian given him. Tillotſon, Sermon 1.
This designation of the perſon our author is more than ordinary obliged to take care of, becauſe he hath made the conveyance, as well as the power itſelf, ſacred. Locke.
There is nothing more ordinary than children's receiving into their minds propoſitions from their parents; which being ſtaffed by degrees, are at laſt, whether true or falſe, riveted there. Locke.
Method is not leſs requiſite in ordinary converſation, than in writing. Addiſon's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 476.
3. Mean; of low rank.
Theſe are the paths wherein ye have walked, that are of the ordinary ſort of men; theſe are the very ſteps ye have trodden, and the manifeſt degrees whereby ye are of your guides and directors trained up in that ſchool. Hooker.
Men of common capacity, and but ordinary judgment, are not able to diſcern what things are fitteſt for each kind and ſtate of regiment. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.
Every ordinary reader, upon the publiſhing of a new poem, has will and ill-nature enough to turn ſeveral paſſages of it into ridicule, and very often in the right place. Addiſon.
My ſpeculations, when ſold ſingle, are delights for the rich and wealthy; after ſome time they come to the market in great quantities, and are every ordinary man's money.

ORE

- You will wonder how ſuch an ordinary fellow as Wood, could get his majeſty's broad ſeal. Swift.
4. Ugly; not handſome: as ſhe is an ordinary woman.
ORDINARY. n. f.
1. Eſtabliſhed judge of eccleſiaſtical cauſes.
The evil will
Of all their pariſhioners they had conſtrain'd,
Who to the ordinary of them complain'd. Hubberd.
If fault be in theſe things any where juſtly found, law hath reſer'd the whole diſpoſition and redreſs thereof to the ordinary of the place. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.
2. Settled eſtabliſhment.
Spain had no other wars ſave thoſe which were grown into an ordinary; now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Valtoline and Palatinate. Bacon.
3. Actual and conſtant office.
Villiers had an intimation of the king's pleaſure to be his cup-bearer at large; and the ſummer following he was admitted in ordinary. Wott.
4. Regular price of a meal.
Our courteous Antony,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the ſeaſt;
And for his ordinary pays his heart
For what his eyes eat only. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleopat.
5. A place of eating eſtabliſhed at a certain price.
They reckon all their errors for accompliſhments; and all the odd words they have picked up in a coffee-houſe, or a gaming ordinary, are produced as flowers of ſtyle. Swift.
TO ORDINATE. v. a. [ordinatus, Latin.]
1. To appoint.
Finding how the certain right did ſtand,
With full conſent this man did ordinate
The heir apparent to the crown and land. Daniel.
ORDINATE. adj. [ordinatus, Lat.] Regular; methodical.
Ordinate figures are ſuch as have all their ſides, and all their angles equal. Ray on the Creation.
ORDINATION. n. f. [ordinatio, Lat. from ordinare.]
1. Eſtabliſhed order or tendency.
Virtue and vice have a natural ordination to the happineſs and miſery of life reſpectively. Norris.
2. The act of inveſting any man with ſacerdotal power.
Though ordained by Arian biſhops, his ordination was never queſtioned. Stillingfleet.
St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prime ruler of the church, and entrufled with a large dioceſe under the immediate government of their reſpective elders;
and thoſe deriving authority from his ordination. South.
ORDNANCE. n. f. [This was anciently written more frequently ordnance; but ordnance is uſed for diſtinction.] Cannon; great guns.
Have I not heard great ordnance in the field?
And heav'n's artillery thunder in the ſkies? Shakeſp.
When a ſhip ſeels or rolls in foul weather, the breaking loofe of ordnance is a thing very dangerous. Raleigh.
There are examples now of wounded perſons that have roared for anguiſh and torment at the diſcharge of ordnance, though at a very great diſtance. Bentley's Sermon.
ORDONNANCE. n. f. [French.] Diſpoſition of figures in a picture.
ORDURE. n. f. [ordure, French; from ſordes, Lat. Skinner.]
Dung; filth.
Gard'ners with ordure hide thoſe roots
That ſhall firſt ſpring and be moſt delicate. Shakeſp.
Working upon human ordure, and by long preparation rendering it odoriferous, he terms it zibetta occidentalis. Brown.
We added fat pollutions of our own,
T' encreaſe the ſteamy ordures of the ſtage. Dryden.
Renew'd by ordure's ſympathetick force,
As oil'd with magic juices for the courſe, Pope.
Vig'rous he riſes.
ORE. n. f. [ore, or opa, Saxon; orr, Dutch, a mine.]
1. Metal unrefined; metal yet in its mineral ſtate.
Round about him lay on every ſide,
Great heaps of gold that never would be ſpent;
Of which ſome were rude ore not purify'd
Of Mulciber's devouring element. Fairy Queen.
They would have brought them the gold ore aboard their ſhips. Raleigh's Apology.
A hill not far,
Shone with a gloſſy ſcurf, undoubted ſign
That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
The work of ſulphur. Milton's Paradise Loſt, b. i.
Who have labour'd more
To ſearch the treaſures of the Roman ſtore,
Or dig in Grecian mines for purer ore? Roscommen.
We walk in dreams on fairy land,
Where golden ore lies mixt with common ſand. Dryden.
Thoſe who unripe veins in mines explore,
On the rich bed again the warm turf lay,
Till time digeſts the yet imperfect ore,
And know it will be gold another day. Dryden.
Thoſe

ORG

Those profounder regions they explore,
Where metals ripen in vast cakes of ore. Garth.

2. Metal. The liquid ore he drain'd
First his own tools; then what might else be wrought, Fusile, or grav'n in metal. Milt. Par. Lost, b. xi.

O'REWOOD. } n. f. A weed either growing upon the rocks un-O'REWOOD. } der high water mark, or broken from the bottom of the sea by rough weather, and cast upon the next by the wind and flood. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

O'RGAL. n. f. Lees of wine. Ainsf.

O'RGAN. n. f. [organe, Fr. ὄργανον.] 1. Natural instrument; as the tongue is the organ of speech, the lungs of respiration.
When he shall hear she died upon his words,
The ever lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparell'd in more precious habit,
Than when the liv'd indeed. Shakespeare.
For a mean and organ, by which this operative virtue might be continued, God appointed the light to be united,
and gave it also motion and heat. Raleigh.
The aptness of birds is not so much in the conformity of the organs of speech, as in their attention. Bacon.

Can judge and chuse, without the body's aid;
Tho' on such objects they are working still,
As thro' the body's organs are convey'd. Davies.

2. An instrument of musick consisting of pipes filled with wind and of stops, touched by the hand. [Orgue, Fr.]
A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes in the world, and making every one found a particular note. Keil.
While in more lengthen'd notes and flow,
The deep, majestic, solemn organs blow. Pope.

ORGA'NICAL. } adj. [organique, Fr. organicus, Lat.]
ORGA'NICK. } 1. Consisting of various parts co-operating with each other.
He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.
He with serpent tongue
Organick, or impulse of vocal air,
His fraudulent temptation thus began: Milt. P. Lost.
The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they live and move and are vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent being. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Instrumental; acting as instruments of nature or art, to a certain end.
Read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton.

3. Respecting organs.
She could not produce a monster of any thing that hath more vital and organical parts than a rock of marble. Ray.
They who want the sense of discipline, or hearing, are also by consequence deprived of speech, not by any immediate, organical indisposition, but for want of discipline.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

ORGA'NICAL. adv. [from organical.] By means of organs or instruments; by organical disposition of parts:
All stones, metals, and minerals, are real vegetables; that is, grow organically from proper seeds, as well as plants.
Locke on Nat. Philosophy.

ORGA'NICALNESS. n. f. [from organical.] State of being or-ganical.

ORGA'NISM. n. f. [from organ.] Organical structure.
How admirable is the natural structure or organism of bodies. Grew's Capitul. b. i. c. 4.

ORGA'NIST. n. f. [organiste, Fr. from organ.] One who plays on the organ.
He is an organist, and serves that office in a publick choir.
Boyle on Colours.

ORGANIZA'TION. n. f. [from organize.] Construction in which the parts are so disposed as to be subservient to each other.
Every man's senses differ as much from others in their figure, colour, site, and infinite other peculiarities in the organization, as any one man's can from itself, through divers accidental variations. Glanv. Sceps. c. xxvi.
That being then one plant, which has such an organization of parts in one coherent body, partaking of one common life, it continues to be the same plant, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, in a like continued organization. Locke.

To O'RGANIZE. v. a. [organizer, Fr. from organ.] To construct so as that one part co-operates with another; to form organically.
As the soul doth organize the body, and give unto every member thereof that substance, quantity, and shape, which nature seeth most expedient, so the inward grace of sacraments may teach what ferveth best for their outward form.

ORI

Hooker, b. v. f. 58.

A genial and cherishing heat so acts upon the fit and obsequious matter, wherein it was harboured, as to organize and fashion that disposed matter according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.
Those nobler faculties in the mind, matter organized could never produce. Ray on the Creation.
The identity of the same man consists in a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.

ORGANLOFT. n. f. [organ and loft.] The loft where the organs stand.
Five young ladies of no small fame for their great severity of manners, would go no where with their lovers but to an organloft in a church, where they had a cold treat and some few opera songs. Tatler, No. 61.

ORGANPIPE. n. f. [organ and pipe.] The pipe of a musical organ.
The thunder,
That deep and dreadful organpipe pronounc'd
The name of Prosper. Shakespeare's Tempest.

ORGA'NY. n. f. [organum, Lat.] An herb. Ainsf.

ORGA'SM. n. f. [orgasme, Fr. ὄργασμος.] Sudden vehemence.
By means of the curious lodgment and inoculation of the auditory nerves, the organs of the spirits should be allayed, and perturbations of the mind quieted. Derham's Physico-Theol.

ORGEIS. n. f. A sea-fish, called likewise organling. Both seem a corruption of the orkenyling, as being taken on the Or-keny coast. Ainsf.

ORGILLOUS. adj. [orgueilleux, French.] Proud; haughty.
From isles of Greece
The princes orgilious, their high blood chafed,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships. Shakesp.

O'RGIES. n. f. [orgies, Fr. orgia, Lat.] Mad rites of Bacchus; frantick revels.
These are nights
Solemn to the shining rites,
Of the fairy prince and knights,
While the moon their orgies lights. Ben. Johnson.
She feign'd nocturnal orgies; left my bed,
And mix'd with Trojan dames, the dances led. Dryd.

O'RICHALCH. n. f. [orichalcum, Lat.] Brass.
Not Bilbo steel, nor brass from Corinth fet,
Nor costly orichalch from strange Phoenice,
But such as could both Phœbus' arrows ward,
And th' hailing darts of heav'n beating hard. Spenser.

O'RIENT. adj. [orientis, Latin.] 1. Rising as the sun.
Moon that now meet'st the orient sun, now fly'st
With the fix'd stars. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
When fair morn orient in heav'n appear'd. Milton.

2. Eastern; oriental.
3. Bright; shining; glittering; gaudy; sparkling.
The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,
Shall come again transform'd to orient pearl;
Advantaging their loan with interest,
Oftentimes double gain of happiness. Shakesp.
There do breed yearly an innumerable company of gnats, whose property is to fly unto the eye of the lion, as being a bright and orient thing. Abbot on the World.
We have spoken of the cause of orient colours in birds;
which is by the fineness of the frainer. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Morning light
More orient in yon western cloud, that draws
O'er the blue firmament a radiant white. Milton.
In thick shelter of black shades imbrow'd,
He offers to each weary traveller
His orient liquor in a crystal glass,
To quench the drouth of Phœbus. Milton.
The chiefs about their necks the futecheons wore,
With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er. Dryden.

O'RIENT. n. f. [orient, Fr.] The east; the part where the sun first appears.

O'RIENTAL. adj. [oriental, French.] Eastern; placed in the east; proceeding from the east.
Your ships went as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to Pequin upon the oriental seas, as far as to the borders of the east Tartary. Bacon's New Atlantis.
Some ascribing hereto the generation of gold, conceive the bodies of this situation to receive some appropriate influence from the sun's ascendent, and oriental radiations.
Brown's Vulgar Err. b. vi.

O'RIENTAL. n. f. An inhabitant of the eastern parts of the world.
They have been of that great use to following ages, as to be imitated by the Arabians and other orientals. Grew.

O'RIENTALISM. n. f. [from oriental.] An idiom of the eastern languages; an eastern mode of speech.

ORIENTALITY.

ORI

O'RIENTALITY. n. f. [from oriental.] State of being oriental.
His revolution being regular, it hath no power nor efficacy peculiar from its orientality, but equally disperseth his beams.
Brown's V. Err. b. vi.

O'RIFICE. n. f. [orifice, Fr. orificium, Lat.] Any opening or perforation.
The prince of Orange, in his first hurt by the Spanish boy, could find no means to stanch the blood, but was fain to have the orifice of the wound stopp'd by men's thumbs, succeeding one another for the space of two days. Bacon.
Their mouths
With hideous orifice gap'd on us wide, Portending hollow truce. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
Etna was bored through the top with a monstrous orifice. Addison's Guardian, No. 103.

O'RIFLAMME. n. f. [probably a corruption of auriflamme, Lat.
or flamme d'or, Fr. in like manner as oriment is corrupted.]
A golden standard. Ainsf.

O'RIGAN. n. f. [origan, Fr. origanum, Lat.] Wild marjorun.
I saw her in her proper hue,
Bathing herself in origan and thyme. Fairy Queen.

O'RIGIN. } n. f. [origine, Fr. origo, Lat.]
O'RIGINAL. } 1. Beginning; first existence.
The sacred historian only treats of the origins of terrestrial animals. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Fountain; source; that which gives beginning or existence.
Nature which contains its origin,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself. Shakesp. King Lear.
If any station upon earth be honourable, theirs was; and their posterity therefore have no reason to blush at the memory of such an original. Atterbury.
Original of beings! pow'r divine!
Since that I live and that I think, is thine. Prior.
These great orbs,
Primitive founts, and origins of light. Prior.

3. First copy; archetype; that from which any thing is transcribed or translated. In this sense origin is not used.
Compare this translation with the original, and the three first stanzas are rendered almost word for word, and not only with the same elegance, but with the same turn of expression.
Addison's Spectator, No. 229.

External material things, as the objects of sensation; and the operations of our minds within, as the objects of reflection; are the only originals from whence all our ideas take their beginnings. Locke.

4. Derivation; descent.
They, like the seed from which they sprung, accurst
Against the gods immortal hatred nurs'd;
An impious, arrogant, and cruel brood, Expressing their original from blood. Dryden.

O'RIGINAL. adj. [originalis, Fr. originalis, Latin.] Primitive; pristine; first.
The original question was, whether God by this law hath forbidden the giving any worship to himself by an image?
Stillingfleet on Idolatry.
Had Adam obeyed God, his original perfection, the knowledge and ability God at first gave him, would still have continued. Wake's Prep. for Death.
You still, fair mother, in your offspring trace
The flock of beauty destin'd for the race;
Kind nature, forming them the pattern took;
From heav'n's first work, and Eve's original look. Prior.

O'RIGINALLY. adv. [from original.] 1. Primarily; with regard to the first cause.
A very great difference between a king that holdeth his crown by a willing act of estates, and one that holdeth it originally by the law of nature and descent of blood. Bacon.
A present blessing upon our fests, is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity. Smallbridge's Sermons.

2. At first.
The metallic and mineral matter, found in the perpendicular intervals of the strata, was originally, and at the time of the deluge, lodged in the bodies of those strata. Woodw.

3. As the first author.
For what originally others writ,
May be so well disguis'd and so improv'd,
That with some justice it may pass for yours. Roscomm.

O'RIGINALNESS. n. f. [from original.] The quality or state of being original.

O'RIGINARY. adj. [originaire, Fr. from origin.] 1. Productive; causing existence.
The production of animals in the ordinary way, requires a certain degree of warmth, which proceeds from the sun's influence. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

2. Primitive; that which was the first state.
Remember I am built of clay, and must Resolve to my ordinary dust. Sandy's Par. on Job.

To O'RI'GINATE. v. a. [from origin.] To bring into existence.

O'RI'GINA'TION. n. f. [originatio, Lat. from originate.] The act of bringing into existence; first production.
The tradition of the origination of mankind seems to be universal; but the particular methods of that origination ex-cogitated by the heathen, were particular. Hale.
This crua is propagated by animal parents, to wit, butterflies, after the common origination of all caterpillars. Ray.
Descartes first introduced the fancy of making a world, and deducing the origination of the universe from mechanical principles. Keil.

O'RI'GINS. n. f. [oraisen, French: this word is variously accented; Shakespeare has the accent both on the first and second syllables; Milton and Crashaw on the first, others on the second.] A prayer; a supplication.
Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all thy sins remember'd. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
Alas! your too much love and care of me,
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch. Shakespeare.
He went into St. Paul's church, where he had orisons and Te Deum sung. Bacon's Henry VII.
My wakeful lay shall knock
At th' oriental gates, and duly mock
The early larks thrill orisons, to be An anthem at the day's nativity. Crashaw.
His daily orisons attract our ears. Sandys on Job.
Lowly they bow'd, adoring, and began Their orisons, each morning duly paid. Milton.
So went he on with his orisons,
Which, if you mark them well, were wise ones. Cotton.
Here at dead of night
The hermit oft, mid his orisons, hears Aghast the voice of time disparting tow'rs. Dyer.

O'RI'LOP. n. f. [overloep, Dutch.] The middle deck. Skimm.
A small ship of the king's called the Penfie, was assailed by the Lyon, a principal ship of Scotland; wherein the Penfie so applied her shot, that the Lyon's orelop was broken, her sails and tackling torn; and lastly, she was boarded and taken. Hoyward.

O'RI'NAMENT. n. f. [ornamentum, Lat. ornement, Fr.]
1. Embellishment; decoration.
So may the outward shows be least themselves;
The world is still deceiv'd with ornament. Shakespeare.
The Tuscan chief, to me has sent Their crown, and ev'ry regal ornament. Dryden.
No circumstances of life can place a man so far below the notice of the world, but that his virtues or vices will render him, in some degree, an ornament or disgrace to his profession. Rogers, Sermon 9.

2. Honour; that which confers dignity.
The persons of different qualities in both sexes, are indeed allowed their different ornaments; but these are by no means costly, being rather designed as marks of distinction than to make a figure. Addison on Italy.

O'RI'NAMENTAL. adj. [from ornament.] Serving to decoration; giving embellishment.
Some think it most ornamental to wear their bracelets on their wrists, others about their ancles. Brown.
If the kind be capable of more perfection, though rather in the ornamental parts of it, than the essential, what rules of morality or respect have I broken, in naming the defects that they may hereafter be amended? Dryden.
Even the Heathens have esteem'd this variety not only ornamental to the earth, but a proof of the wisdom of the creator. Woodw. Nat. Hist.
If no advancement of knowledge can be had from universities, the time there spent is lost; every ornamental part of education is better taught elsewhere. Swift on Religion.

O'RI'NAMENTALLY. adv. [from ornamental.] In such a manner as may confer embellishment.

O'RI'NAMENTED. adj. [from ornament.] Embellished; bedecked.

O'RI'NATE. adj. [ornatus, Lat.] Bedecked; decorated; fine.
What thing of sea or land,
Female of sex it seems,
That so bedeck'd, ornate and gay,
Comes this way sailing. Milton's Agonistes.

O'RI'NATENESS. n. f. [from ornate.] Finery; state of being embellished.

O'RI'NATURE. n. f. [ornatus, Lat.] Decoration. Ainsf.

O'RI'NOSCOPIST. n. f. [ὀρνις and σκοπεω.] One who examines the flight of birds in order to foretel futurity.

O'RI'NTHOLOGY. n. f. [ὀρνις and λόγος.] A discourse on birds.

O'RP'HAN. n. f. [ὀρφανός; orphanos, Fr.] A child who has lost father or mother, or both.
Poor orphan in the wide world scattered,
As budding branch rent from the native tree,
And thrown forth until it be withered:
Such is the state of man. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,

To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shakeſp.
Sad widows, by thee rified, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.
The ſea with ſpoils his angry bullets ſtrow,
Widows and orphans making as they go. Waller.
Pity, with a parent's mind,
This helpſe orphan whom thou leav'ſt behind. Dryden.
ORPHAN. adj. [orphelin, Fr.] Bereft of parents.
This king left orphan both of father and mother, found his eſtate, when he came to age, ſo diſjointed even in the nobleſt and ſtrongeſt limbs of government, that the name of a king was grown odious. Sidney, b. ii.
ORPHANAGE. n. f. [orphelinage, Fr. from orphan.] State of an orphan.
ORPIMENT. n. f. [auripigmentum, Lat. orpiment, orpin, Fr.]
True and genuine orpiment is a foliaceous foſſil, ſometimes found in maſſes of two or three inches diameter, and one inch in thickneſs; but it is oftener met with in ſmaller con-geries of flakes from an eighth of an inch to a third in diameter, lodged in zarnich. See ZARNICH. It is of a fine and pure texture, remarkably heavy, and its colour is a bright and beautiful yellow, like that of gold. It is not hard but very tough, eaſily bending without breaking: ſome have declared orpiment to be only muſcovy talk, ſtained by accident. But talk is always elatiſtic, but orpiment not ſo; talk alſo remains unaltered in the ſtrongeſt fire, whereas orpiment melts readily, and as readily burſts away. Orpiment has been ſuppoſed to contain gold, and is found in mines of gold, ſilver, and copper, and ſometimes in the ſtrata of marl.
It is frequent in the Eaſt-Indies and the Turkiſh dominions, the fineſt coming from Smyrna. We have it alſo in Germany and Saxony. The ancients were well acquainted with this drug, which they called arfenicon; and though they were utterly unacquainted with the poiſonous ſubſtance called arſenick, yet orpiment has been by ſome very unjuſtly deemed a poiſon; but it appears to be an innocent medicine which the ancients preſcribed internally. The painters are very fond of it as a gold colour. Hill's Mat. Med.
For the golden colour, it may be made by ſome ſmall mixture of orpiment, ſuch as they uſe to braſs in the yellow alchemy; it will eaſily recover that which the iron loſeth. Bacon.
ORPHANOTROPHY. n. f. [ὀρφανὸς and τροφή.] An hoſpital for orphans.
ORPINE. n. f. [orpin, Fr.] Liverer or roſe root, anacampſeros, Telephum, or Rhodia radis. A plant. It hath a roſe ſhaped flower, conſiſting of ſeveral leaves placed orbicularly; out of whoſe many-leaved empalement riſes the pointal, which afterward becomes a three-cornered fruit, conſiſting of one cell, which is filled with roundiſh ſeeds: the leaves are placed alternately on the branches. It is a low plant, whoſe branches trail on the ground; the leaves are ſmall and roundiſh, of a glaucous colour, and of a pretty thick confidence. The flowers are ſmall, and of a whitish green colour. Miller.
Cool violets and orpine growing fill,
Embatheſd balm and cheerful galingale. Spencer.
ORRERY. n. f. An inſtrument which by many complicated movements repreſents the revolutions of the heavenly bodies.
It was firſt made by Mr. Rowley, a mathematician born at Litchfield, and ſo named from his patron the earl of Orrery:
by one or other of this family almoſt every art has been encouraged or improved.
ORRIS. n. f. [orris, Latin.] A plant and flower.
It hath no leaves to the flower, but conſiſts of many ſta-mina ariſing from a five-leaved empalement. The pointal becomes the ſeed, which is flat and orbicular, and incloſed in the empalement, which becomes a foliaceous capsule, in which are included two ſorts of ſeeds. Miller.
The nature of the orris root is almoſt ſingular; for roots that are in any degree ſweet, it is but the ſame ſweetneſs with the wood or leaf; but the orris is not ſweet in the leaf;
neither is the flower any thing ſo ſweet as the root. Bacon.
ORRIS. n. f. [old Fr.] A ſort of gold or ſilver lace.
ORTS. n. f. ſeldom with a ſingular. [This word is derived by Skinner from ort, German, the fourth part of any thing;
by Mr. Lye more reaſonably from orda, Iriſh, a fragment.
In Anglo Saxon, ord ſignifies the beginning; whence in ſome provinces odds and ends; for ords and ends ſignify remnants, ſcattered pieces, reſidue; from ord thus uſed probably came ort.] Reſidue; things left or thrown away.
He muſt be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;
A barren-ſpirited fellow, one that feeds
On abject orts and imitations. Shakeſp. Jul. Cæſ.
The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, ſcraps, the bits, and greaſy reliques
Of her o'er eaten faith, are bound to Diomedes. Shakeſp.

The ſtagers, and the ſtage-wrights too. Ben. Johnson.

ORTHODOX. adj. [ὀρθός and δόξα; orthodox, Fr.] Sound in opinion and doctrine; not heretical.
Be you perſuaded and ſettled in the true proteſtant religion profefſed by the church of England; which is as found and orthodox in the doctrine thereof, as any Chriſtian church in the world. Bacon.
Eternal bliſs is not immediately ſuperſtruded on the moſt orthodox beliefs; but as our Saviour ſaith, if ye know theſe things, happy are ye if ye do them; the doing muſt be firſt ſuperſtruded on the knowing or believing, before any happineſs can be built on it. Hammend.
ORTHODOXY. adv. [from orthodox.] With foundneſs of opinion.
The doctrine of the church of England, expreſſed in the thirty-nine articles, is ſo foundly and ſo orthodoxly ſettled, as cannot be queſtioned without extreme danger to the honour of our religion. Bacon.
ORTHODOXY. n. f. [ὀρθόδοξία; orthodoxie, Fr. from orthodox.]
Soundneſs in opinion and doctrine.
I do not attempt explaining the myſteries of the Chriſtian religion, ſince Providence intended theſe ſhould be myſteries, it cannot be agreeable to piety, orthodoxy, or good ſenſe, to go about it. Swift.
ORTHODROMICKS. n. f. [from ὀρθόδρομος and δρόμος.] The art of failing in the ark of ſome great circle, which is the ſhorteſt or ſtraighteſt diſtance between any two points on the ſurface of the globe. Harri.
ORTHODROMY. n. f. [ὀρθόδρομος and δρόμος.] Orthodromie, Fr.]
Sailing in a ſtraight courſe.
ORTHOGON. n. f. [ὀρθός and γωνία.] A rectangled figure.
The ſquare will make you ready for all manner of compartments; your cylinder for vaulted turrets and round buildings; your orthogon and pyramid, for ſharp ſteeples. Peach.
ORTHOGONAL. adj. [orthogoniel, Fr. from orthogon.] Rectangular.
ORTHOGRAPHER. n. f. [ὀρθός and γράφω.] One who ſpells according to the rules of grammar.
He was wont to ſpeak plain, like an honeſt man and a ſoldier; and now he is turn'd orthographer, his words are juſt ſo many ſtrange diſhes. Shakeſp.
ORTHOGRAPHICAL. n. f. [from orthography.]
1. Rightly ſpelled.
2. Relating to the ſpelling.
I received from him the following letter, which, after having rectified ſome little orthographical miſtakes, I ſhall make a preſent of to the public. Addiſon's Speſiator.
3. Delineated according to the elevation, not the ground-plot.
In the orthographical ſchemes there ſhould be a true delineation and the juſt dimensions of each face, and of what belongs to it. Mortimer's Elog.
ORTHOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from orthographical.]
1. According to the rules of ſpelling.
2. According to the elevation.
ORTHOGRAPHY. n. f. [ὀρθός and γράφω; orthographia, Fr.]
1. The part of grammar which teaches how words ſhould be ſpelled.
This would render languages much more eaſy to be learned, as to reading and pronouncing, and eſpecially as to the writing them, which now as they ſtand we find to be trouble-ſome, and it is no ſmall part of grammar which treats of orthography and right pronunciation. Holder.
2. The art or practice of ſpelling.
In London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the ſuburbs; all which reduced to writing, would entirely confound ortho- graphy. Swift.
3. The elevation of a building delineated.
You have the orthography or upright of this ground-plot, and the explanation thereof with a ſcale of feet and inches.
Moxon's Mech. Exer.
ORTHOPNOEA. n. f. [ὀρθοπνοία; orthopnoia, Fr.] A diſorder of the lungs, in which reſpiration can be performed only in the upright poſture.
His diſeaſe was an aſthma oft turning to an orthopnoia; the cauſe a tranſlation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey on Conſumptions.
ORTIVE. adj. [ortive, Fr. ortivus, Lat.] Relating to the riſing of any planet or ſtar.
ORTOLAN. n. f. [French.] A ſmall bird accounted very delicious.
Not ortolans nor godwits. Cowley.
ORVAL. n. f. [orvale, Fr. orvala, Lat.] The herb clary. Diſt.
ORVIE'TAN. n. f. [orvietano, Italian; ſo called from a moun-tebank at Orvietto in Italy.] An antidote or counter poiſon;
a medicinal compoſition or electuary, good againſt poiſon.
Bailey.
OSCHEO'CELE. n. f. [ὀσχεός and χέλη.] A kind of hernia when the inteſtines break into the ſcrotum. Diſt.
OSCILLATION. n. f. [oscillum, Latin.] The act of moving backward and forward like a pendulum.
OSCILLATORY. adj. [oscillum, Lat.] Moving backwards and forwards like a pendulum. The OSCITANCY. n. f. [oscitantia, Lat.]

1. The act of yawning.
2. Unuſual ſleepineſs; careleſſneſs.
If perſons of ſo circumſpect a piety, have been thus overtaken, what ſecurity can there be for our wreckleſs oscitancy?
Government of the Tongue.
It might proceed from the oscitancy of tranſcribers, who,
to diſpatch their work the ſooner, uſed to write all numbers in cyphers. Addiſon's Speſiator, N<sup>o</sup>. 470.
OSCITANT. adj. [oscitans, Latin.]
1. Yawning; unuſually ſleepy.
2. Sleepy; ſluggiſh.
Our oscitant lazy piety gave vacancy for them, and they will now lend none back again for more active duty.
Decay of Piety.
OSCITATION. n. f. [oscite, Lat.] The act of yawning.
I ſhall defer conſidering this ſubject till I come to my treawork.

The rank of oſters, by the murmuring ſream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place. Shak.
Ere the fun advance his burning eye,
I muſt fill up this oſter cage of ours
With baleful weeds and precious juiced flowers. Shakeſp.
Bring them for food ſweet boughs and oſters cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay rick ſhut. May's Virg.
Like her no nymph can willing oſters bend,
In baſket-works, which painted breaks commend. Dryd.
Along the marſhes ſpread,
We made the oſter fringed bank our bed. Po. Odyſſ.
OSMUND. n. f. A plant. It is ſometimes uſed in medicine.
It grows upon bogs in divers parts of England. Miller.
OSPRAY. n. f. [corrupted from offſpraga, Latin.] The ſeaeagle, of which it is reported, that when he hovers in the air, all the fiſh in the water turn up their bellies, and lie ſtill for him to ſeize which he pleaſes. Hammer.
I think he'll be to Rome
As is the ospray to the fiſh who takes it,
By ſovereignty of nature. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
Among the fowls ſhall not be eaten, the eagle, the offſprage,

OSSELET. n. f. [French.] A little hard ſubſtance ariſing on the inſide of a horſe's knee, among the ſmall bones; it grows out of a gummy ſubſtance which faſtens thoſe bones together. Farrier's Dict.
OSSICLE. n. f. [officulum, Latin.] A ſmall bone.
There are three very little bones in the ear, upon whoſe right conſtitution depends the due tenſion of the tympanum; and if the action of one little muſcle, which ſerves to draw one of theſe officles, fixt to the tympanum, be loſt or abated, the tenſion of that membrane ceaſing, ſound is hindered from coming into the ear. Holder on Speech.
OSSIFIC. adj. [offe and facio, Lat.] Having the power of making bones, or changing carneous or membranous to bony ſubſtance.
If the caries be ſuperficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments conſume the moiſture in the caries, dry the bone, and diſpoſe it, by virtue of its offific faculty, to thruſt out a callus, and make ſeparation of its caries. Wiſeman.
OSSIFICATION. n. f. [from offify.] Change of carneous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony ſubſtance.
Offifications or indurations of the artery, appear ſo conſtantly in the beginnings of aneurifms, that it is not eaſy to judge whether they are the cauſe or the effect of them. Sharph.
OSSIFRAGE. n. f. [offſpraga, Lat. offſfrage, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whoſe fleſh is forbid under the name of gryphon. The off- fraga or ospray, is thus called, becauſe it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is ſaid to dig up bodies in church-yards, and eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occaſion that the Latins called it avis buſtaria. Calmet.
Among the fowls ſhall not be eaten the eagle and the offſfrage, and the ospray. Numb. xi. 13.
TO OSSIFY. v. a. [offa and facio.] To change to bone.
The dilated aorta every where in the neighbourhood of the cyſt is generally offified. Sharph's Surgery.
OSSIVOROUS. adj. [offa and voro.] Devouring bones.
The bore of the gullet is not in all creatures alike an-ſwerable to the body or ſtomach; as in the fox, which feeds on bones, and ſwallows whole, or with little chewing; and next in a dog and other offivorous quadrupeds, it is very large. Derham's Phyſico-Theol.
OSSUARY. n. f. [offuarium, Lat.] A channel houſe; a place ſenſe.

If all theſe ſecret ſprings of detraction fail, yet a vain
offentation of wit ſets a man on attacking an eſtabliſhed name, and ſacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of thoſe about him. Addiſon's Speſiator, N<sup>o</sup>. 256.
He knew that good and bountiful minds were ſometimes inclined to offentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: Take heed, ſays he, that you do not your alms before men, to be ſeen. Atterbury.

OTH

This man, upon a slight and false accusation of favouring arbitrary power, was banished by ostracism; which in English would signify, that they voted he should be removed from their presence and council for ever.

OSTRACITES. n. f. Ostracites expresses the common oyster in its fossil state, under whatever circumstances it has been petrified.

OSTRICH. n. f. [ostruche, Fr. struthio, Lat.] Ostrich is ranged among birds. It is very large, its wings very short, and the neck about four or five spans. The feathers of its wings are in great esteem, and are used as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are stained of several colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of course, for they never fly; but use their wings to assist them in running more swiftly. The ostrich swallows bits of iron or brass, in the same manner as other birds will swallow small stones or gravel, to assist in digesting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the sand, and the sun hatches them.

I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich.

The Scots errant fight, and fight to eat, Their ostrich stomachs make their swords their meat.

Modern ostriches are dwindled to meek larks, in comparison with those of the ancients.

OTACUSTICK. n. f. [otaz and otazé, otacustique, Fr.] An instrument to facilitate hearing.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is supplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacustick, is directed backward, as to receive the smallest and most distant sound that comes behind her.

OTHER. pron. [oðen, Sax. autre, Fr.]

1. Not the same; not this; different.

Of good actions some are better than other some.

That they have don't, Who dares receive it other?

He that will not give just occasion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beasts, where the strongest carries; and so lay a foundation for perpetual disorder and mischief, tumult, sedition and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypothesis so loudly cry out against, must of necessity find out another state of government.

No leaves shall ever be made other than leaves for years not exceeding thirty-one, in possession, and not in reversion or remainder.

2. Not I, or he, but some one else.

I should cut off the nobles for their lands; Desire his jewels and this other's house.

Physicians are some of them so conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press not the true cure of the disease; and some other are so regular in proceeding according to art, as they respect not the condition of the patient.

The dismayed matrons and maidens, some in their houses, other some in the churches with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard distress.

The king had all he crav'd, or could compel, And all was done—let others judge how well.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contrary.

There is that controlling worth in goodness, that the will cannot but like and desire it; and on the other side, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itself to the affections of mankind, but under the disguise of the other.

4. Correlative to each.

In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves.

Scotland and thou did each in other live, Nor would'st thou her, nor could she thee survive.

5. Something besides.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can.

6. The next.

Thy air, Thou other gold bound brow, is like the first; A third is like the former.

7. The third part.

Bind my hair up: as 'twas yesterday: No, nor the t'other day.

8. It is sometimes put elliptically for other thing; something different.

I can expect no other from those that judge by single fights and rash measures, than to be thought fond or insolent.

OTHERGATES. adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

OVE

If fir Toby had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did.

OTHERGUISE. adj. [other and guise.] This is often mistaken, and sometimes written otherguist. Of another kind.

OTHERWHERE. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had access to the temple and synagogues, but as Christians they were of necessity forced otherwhere to assemble themselves.

His godlike acts, and his temptations fierce, And former sufferings, otherwhere are found.

OTHERWHILE. adv. [other and while.] At other times.

OTHERWISE. adv. [other and wise.] 1. In an indifferent manner.

They only plead, that whatsoever God revealeth, as necessary for all Christian men to do and believe, the same we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwise, which no man denieth.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the same thing, they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or else otherwise, without any breach of duty at all.

In these good things, what all others should practise, we should scarce know to practise otherwise.

Thy father was a worthy prince, And merited, alas! a better fate; But heaven thought otherwise.

2. By other causes.

Sir John Norris failed in the attempts of Lisbon, and returned with the loss, by sickness and otherwise, of eight thousand men.

3. In other respects.

It is said truly, that the best men otherwise, are not always the best in regard of society.

Men seldom consider God any otherwise than in relation to themselves, and therefore want some extraordinary benefits to excite their attention and engage their love.

OTTER. n. f. [otter, Saxon.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fish.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better swimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine; and in his tail, which is felin, or a long taper: so that he may not be unjustly called putorius aquaticus, or the water pole-cat. He makes himself burrows on the water side, as a beaver; is sometimes tamed and taught, by nimbly surrounding the fishes to drive them into the net.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's skin stuffed with hay.

Would you preserve a numerous finny race? Let your fierce dogs the ravenous otter chase; Th' amphibious monster ranges all the shores, Darts thro' the waves, and every haunt explores.

OVAL. adj. [ovale, Fr. ovum, an egg.] Oblong; resembling the longitudinal section of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itself on both sides in an oval figure of an hundred yards.

Mercurius, nearest to the central fun, Does in an oval orbit, circling run; But rarely is the object of our sight, In solar glory sunk.

OVAL. n. f. A synonymous word, or a mere negation of the contrary; a translation of the word into another tongue, or a grammatical explication of it, is sometimes sufficient; as a triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the shape of an egg.

OVARIOUS. adj. [from ovum.] Consisting of eggs.

Dire clinging gathers his ovarious food.

Ovary. n. f. [ovaire, Fr. ovarium, Latin.] The part of the body in which impregnation is performed.

The ovary or part where the white involveth it, is in the second region of the matrix, which is somewhat long and inverted.

Ovation. n. f. [ovation, Fr. ovatio, Lat.] A lesser triumph among the Romans allowed to those commanders who had won a victory without much blood shed, or defeated some less formidable enemy.

OBVAT. n. f. A sort of caterpillar; an insect.

OUCH. n. f. An ornament of gold or jewels.

OUCH of a boar. The blow given by a boar's tusk.

OVEN. n. f. [open, Saxon.] An arched cavity heated with fire to bake bread.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard, And from his wide devouring oven sent A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard, Him all amaz'd.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of

of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking.

Bats have been found in ovens and other hollow close places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they sleep in the winter, and eat nothing.

OVER hath a double signification in the names of places, according to the different situations of them. If the place be upon or near a river, it comes from the Saxon over, a brink or bank: but if there is in the neighbourhood another of the same name, distinguished by the addition of nether, then over is from the Gothick ufar, above.

OVER. prep. [ufar, Gothick; oppe, Saxon.] 1. Above; with respect to excellence or dignity.

How happy some, o'er other some can be!

Thro' Athens I am thought as fair as she.

Young Pallas shone conspicuous o'er the rest; Gilded his arms, embroider'd was his vest.

High, over all, was your great conduct shown, You fought our safety, but forgot your own.

The commentary which attends this poem, will have one advantage over most commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures.

And it will afford field enough for a divine to enlarge on, by shewing the advantages which the Christian world has over the Heathen.

2. Above, with regard to rule or authority.

The church has over her bishops, able to silence the factious, no less by their preaching than by their authority.

Captain, yourself are the fittest to live and reign not over, but next and immediately under the people.

3. Above in place.

He was more than over shoes in love.

The street should see as the walk over head.

Thrice happy is that humble pair, Beneath the level of all care; Over whole heads those arrows fly, Of sad distrust and jealousy.

4. Across: as, he leaped over the brook.

Certain lakes and pits, such as that of Avennes poison birds which fly over them.

The geese fly o'er the barn, the bees in arms Drive headlong from their waxen cells in swarms.

5. Through.

All the world over, those that received not the commands of Christ and his doctrines of purity and perseverance, were signally destroyed.

6. Upon.

Wife governours have as great a watch over fames, as they have of the actions and designs.

Angelic quires Sing heav'nly anthems of his victory O'er temptation and the tempter proud.

7. Before.

This is only used in over night.

On their intended journey to proceed, And o'er night whatso thereto did need.

OVER. adv. 1. Above the top.

Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running over, shall men give.

2. More than a quantity assigned.

Even here likewise the laws of nature and reason be of necessary use; yet somewhat over and besides there is necessary, namely human and positive law.

And when they had meted it, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack.

The ordinary soldiers having all their pay, and a month's pay over, were sent into their countries.

The eastern people determined their digit by the breadth of barley corns, six making a digit, and twenty-four a hand's breadth: a small matter over or under.

3. From side to side.

The fan of an Indian king, made of the feathers of a peacock's tail, composed into a round form, bound altogether with a circular rim, above a foot over.

4. From one to another.

This golden cluster the herald delivereth to the Tirfan, who delivereth it over to that son that he had formerly chosen.

5. From a country beyond the sea.

It hath a white berry, but is not brought over with the coral.

They brought new customs and new vices o'er; Taught us more arts than honest men require.

6. On the surface.

The first came out red all over, like an hairy garment.

7. Past.

This is rather the sense of an adjective.

Soliman pausing a little upon the matter, the heat of his fury being something over, suffered himself to be intreated.

OVE

Meditate upon the effects of anger; and the best time to do this, is to look back upon anger when the fit is over.

What the garden choicest bears To fit and taste, till this meridian heat

Be over, and the sun more cool decline. The act of stealing was soon over, and cannot be undone.

For it the finner is only answerable to God or his vicegerent.

He will, as soon as his first surprize is over, justly begin to wonder how such a favour came to be bestowed on him.

There youths and nymphs in comfort gay, Shall hail the rising, close the parting day;

With me, alas! with me those joys are o'er, For me the vernal garlands bloom no more.

8. Throughout; completely.

Have you read o'er the letters I sent you? Let them argue over all the topics of divine goodness and human weakness, yet how trifling must be their plea!

9. With repetition; another time.

He o'er and o'er divides him, Twixt his unkindness and his kindness.

Sitting or standing still confin'd to roar, In the same verie, the same rules o'er and o'er.

Longing they look, and gaping at the sight, Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight.

Thou, my Hector, art thyself alone, My parents, brothers, and my lord in one:

O kill not all my kindred o'er again, Nor tempt the dangers of the dusty plain;

But in this tow'r, for our defence, remain. Whenever children forget, or do an action awkwardly, make them do it over and over again, till they are perfect.

If this miracle of Christ's rising from the dead, be not sufficient to convince a resolved libertine, neither would the rising of one now from the dead be sufficient for that purpose; since it would only be the doing that over again which hath been done already.

The most learned will never find occasion to act over again what is fabled of Alexander the Great, that when he had conquered the eastern world, he wept for want of more worlds to conquer.

10. Extraordinary; in a great degree.

The word symbol should not seem to be over difficult.

11. OVER and above. Besides; beyond what was first supposed or immediately intended.

Moses took the redemption money of them that were over and above.

He gathered a great mass of treasure, and gained over and above the good will and esteem of all people wherever he came.

12. OVER against. Opposite; regarding in front.

In Ticinum is a church with windows only from above. It reporteth the voice thirteen times, if you stand by the close end of the wall, over against the door.

I visit his picture, and place myself over against it whole hours together.

Over against this church stands a large hospital, erected by a shoemaker.

13. In composition it has a great variety of significations; it is arbitrarily prefixed to nouns, adjectives, or other parts of speech in a sense equivalent to more than enough; too much.

By many of these trains hath fought to win me Into his pow'r: and modest wisdom plucks me From over-credulous haste.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw a satyr; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or over-boldly affirm.

These over-busy spirits, whose labour is their only reward, hunt a shadow and chafe the wind.

If the ferment of the breast be vigorous, an over-fermentation in the part, produceth a phlegmon.

A gangrene doth arise in phlegmons, through the unreasonable application of over-cold medicaments.

Poets, like lovers, should be bold and dare, They spoil their business with an over-care:

And he who servilely creeps after sense, Is safe, but ne'er will reach an excellence.

Wretched man! o'erfeeds His cramm'd desires, with more than nature needs.

Bending o'er the cup, the tears she shed, Seem'd by the posture to discharge her head,

O'er-fill'd before. Crude humour or phlegm, are produced by over-digestion.

As they are likely to over-flourish their own case, so their flattery is hardest to be discovered: for who would imagine that himself was guilty of putting tricks upon himself?

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability; suitable to that state of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherein to check our over-confidence and presumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made sensible of our shortightedness.

This part of grammar has been much neglected, as some others over-diligently cultivated. It is easy for men to write one after another, of cases and genders.

It is an ill way of establishing this truth, and silencing atheists, to take some men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity; and out of an over-fondness of that darling invention, cashier all other arguments.

A grown person surfeiting with honey, no sooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries sickness and qualms to his stomach: had this happened to him by an over-dose of honey, when a child, all the same effects would have followed, but the cause would have been mistaken, and the antipathy counted natural.

He over-acted his part; his passions, when once let loose, were too impetuous to be managed.

Take care you over-burn not the turf; it is only to be burnt so as may make it break.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby naufrigate and grow tired of a particular subject.

The memory of the learner should not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas, one idea effaces another. An over-greedy grasp does not retain the largest handful.

To OVER-ABOUND. v. n. [over and abound.] To abound more than enough.

Both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'er-abound.

The learned, never over-abounding in transitory coin, should not be discontented.

To OVER-ACT. v. a. [over and act.] To act more than enough.

You over-act, when you should underdo:

A little call yourself again, and think.
Princes courts may over-act their reverence, and make themselves laughed at for their foolishness and extravagant relative worship.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety, by over-acting some things in religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned.

To OVER-ARCH. v. a. [over and reach.] To cover as with an arch.

Where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendent woods.

To OVER-AWE. v. a. [over and awe.] To keep in awe by superior influence.

The king was present in person to overlook the magistrates, and to over-awe these subjects with the terror of his sword.

Her graceful innocence, her every air
Of gesture, or least action, over-aw'd
His malice.

I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever paying you mock reverence, and sounding in your ears, the empty title which inspired you with presumption, and over-awed my daughter to comply.

A thousand fears Still over-awe when she appears.

To OVER-BALANCE. v. a. To weigh down; to preponderate. Not doubting but by the weight of reason I should counterpoise the over-balanings of any factions.

The hundred thousand pounds per annum, wherein we over-balance them in trade, must be paid us in money.

When these important considerations are set before a rational being, acknowledging the truth of every article, should a bare single possibility be of weight enough to over-balance them.

To OVER-BALANCE. n. f. [over and balance.] Something more than equivalent.

Our exported commodities would, by the return, encrease the treasure of this kingdom above what it can ever be by other means, than a mighty over-balance of our exported to our imported commodities.

The mind should be kept in a perfect indifference, not inclining to either side, any further than the over-balance of probability gives it the turn of assent and belief.

To OVER-BATTLE. adj. [Of this word I know not the derivation; batten is to grow fat, and to battle, is at Oxford to feed on trout.] Too fruitful; exuberant.

In the church of God sometimes it cometh to pass, as in over-battle grounds; the fertile disposition whereof is good, yet because it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth abundantly through too much rankness, things less profitable, whereby that which principally it should yield, being either prevented in place or defrauded of nourishment, faileth.

To OVER-BEAR. v. a. [over and bear.] To repress; to subdue; to whelm; to bear down.

What more savage than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws.

All continent impediment would over-bear,
That did oppose my will.

The ocean o'er-peering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head
O'er-bears your officers.

Our counsel, it pleas'd your highness
To over-bear.

Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,
That nor in birth or for authority,
The bishop will be over-borne by thee.

The Turkish commanders, with all their forces, assailed the city, thrusting their men into the breaches by heaps, as if they would, with very multitude, have discouraged or over-born the Christians.

The point of reputation, when news first came of the battle lost, did over-bear the reason of war.

Yet fortune, valour, all is over-born,
By numbers; as the long resisting bank
By the impetuous torrent.

A body may as well be over-born by the violence of a shallow, rapid stream, as swallowed up in the gulph of smooth water.

Crowding on the last the first impel;
Till over-born with weight the Cyprians fell.

The judgment, if swayed by the over-bearing of passion, and stored with lubricious opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, will be erroneous.

Take care that the memory of the learner be not too much crowded with a tumultuous heap; or over-bearing multitude of documents at one time.

The horror or loathsomeness of an object may over-bear the pleasure which results from its greatness, novelty, or beauty.

To OVER-BID. v. a. [over and bid.] To offer more than equivalent.

You have o'er-bid all my past sufferings,
And all my future too.

To OVER-BLOW. v. n. [over and blow.] To be past its violence.

To OVER-BLOW. v. a. [over and blow.] To drive away as clouds before the wind.

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Until the blustering storm is over-blown.

All those tempests being over-blown, there long after arose a new storm which over-run all Spain.

This age fit of fear is over-blown,
An easy talk it is to win our own.

Some angel that beholds her there,
Instruct us to record what she was here;
And when this cloud of sorrow's o'er-blown,
Thro' the wide world we'll make her graces known.

When storms are over-blown,
O'er-board. adv. [over and board.] Off the ship; out of the ship.

The great assembly met again; and now he that was the cause of the tempest being thrown over-board, there were hopes a calm should ensue.

A merchant having a vessel richly fraught at sea in a storm, there is but one certain way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading over-board.

The trembling dotard, to the deck he drew,
And hoisted up and over-board he threw;

This done, he seized the helm.
He obtained liberty to give them only one song before he leaped over-board, which he did, and then plunged into the sea.

Though great ships were commonly bad sea-boats, they had a superior force in a sea engagement: the shock of them being sometimes so violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of lesser ships over-board.

To OVER-BULK. v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppress by bulk.

The feeding pride,
In rank Achilles, must or now be cropt,
Of shedding, breed a nursery of like evils,
To over-bulk us all.

To OVER-BURDEN. v. a. [over and burthen.] To load with too great weight.

If he were not cloyed with his company, and that she thought not the earth over-burthened with him, she would cool his fiery grief.

OVE

To OVER-BUY. v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He, when want requires, is only wise,
Who flights not foreign aids, nor over-buys;
But on our native strength, in time of need, relies.

To OVER-CARRY. v. a. [over and carry.] To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to succeed; by reason whereof his natural affection and duty was less easy to be over-carried by ambition.

To OVER-CAST. v. a. part. [over-cast.] [over and cast.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

The day with clouds was sudden over-cast.

Hie, Robin, over-cast the night;
The flarry welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron.

Our days of age are sad and over-cast, in which we find that of all our vain passions and affections past, the sorrow only abideth.

I of fumes and humid vapours made,
No cloud in so serene a mansion find,
To over-cast her ever-shining mind.

Those clouds that over-cast our morn shall fly,
Dispell'd to farthest corners of the sky.

The dawn is over-cast, the morning lours,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day.

2. To cover. This sense is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is incircled with a thread, over-cast.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the suspicion of an evil intent, the colour where-with it over-casteth itself is always a fair and plausible pretence of seeking to further that which is good.

Their arms abroad with gray moss over-cast,
And their green leaves trembling with every blast.

3. To rate too high in computation.

The king in his accompt of peace and calms, did much over-cast his fortunes, which proved full of broken seas, tides, and tempests.

To OVER-CHARGE. v. a. [over and charge.]

1. To oppress; to cloy; to surcharge.

On air we feed in every instant, and on meats but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppress and over-charge nature, maketh her to sink unawares in the mid-way.

A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating, as wiser by always reading. Too much over-charges nature, and turns more into disease than nourishment.

2. To load; to crowd too much.

Our language is over-charged with consonants,
To burthen.

He whispers to his pillow,
The secrets of his over-charged soul.

3. To rate too high.

Here's Gloster, a foe to citizens,
O'er-charging your free purses with large fines.

4. To fill too full.

Her heart is but o'er-charg'd; she will recover.
The fumes of passion do as really intoxicate, and confound the judging and discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brain of a man over-charged with it.

If they would make distinct abstract ideas of all the varieties in human actions, the number must be infinite, and the memory over-charged to little purpose.

The action of the Iliad and Æneid in themselves exceeding short, are so beautifully extended by the invention of episodes, that they make up an agreeable story sufficient to employ the memory without over-charging it.

5. To load with too great a charge.

They were
As canons over-charg'd with double cracks.

Who in deep mines, for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns o'er-charg'd, breaks, misfires, or recoils.

To OVER-CLOUD. v. a. [over and cloud.] To cover with clouds.

The silver empress of the night
O'er-clouded, glimmers in a fainter light.

To OVER-CLOY. v. a. [over and cloy.] To fill beyond satiety.

A feast of Britons and base lackey peasants,
Whom their o'er-cloyed country vomits forth
To desperate adventures and destruction.

To OVERCOME. v. a. pret. I overcame; part. pass. overcome; anciently overcomen, as in Spenser. [overcomen, Dutch.]

1. To subdue; to conquer; to vanquish.

They overcomen, were deprived
Of their proud beauty, and the one moiety Transformed to filth, for their bold forquedry.

This wretched woman, overcome
Of anguish rather than of crime hath been.

OVE

Of whom a man is overcome, of the fame is he brought in bondage.

Fire by thicker air o'ercome,
And downward forc'd in earth's capacious womb,
Alters its particles; is fire no more.

2. To over-flow; to surcharge.

Th' unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with stores.

3. To come over or upon; to invade suddenly.

Can't such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder?

To OVERCOME. v. n. To gain the superiority.

That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged.

To OVERCOMER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who overcomes.

Do not the Nile and the Niger make yearly inundations in our days, as they have formerly done? and are not the countries countries so over-flown, still situate between the tropicks?

OVE

Sixteen hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was over-flowed and destroyed in a deluge of water, that overpread the face of the whole earth, from pole to pole, and from east to west.

Thus oft by mariners are shewn,
Earl Godwin's castles over-flown.
O'VER-FLOW. n. f. [over and flow.] Inundation; more than fulness; such a quantity as runs over; exuberance.

Did he break out into tears?—
In great measure—
—A kind over-flow of kindness.

Where there are great over-flows in fens, the drowning of them in winter maketh the summer following more fruitful; for that it keepeth the ground warm.

It requires pains to find the coherence of abstruse writings: so that it is not to be wondered, that St. Paul's epistles have, with many, passed rather for disjointed pious discourses, full of warmth and zeal and over-flows of light, rather than for calm, strong, coherent reasonings all through.

After every over-flow of the Nile, there was not always a menuration.

If this softens not the expression, it may be ascribed to an over-flow of gratitude in the general disposition of Ulysses.

O'VER-FLOWING. n. f. [from over-flow.] Exuberance; copiousness.

When men are young, they might vent the over-flowings of their fancy that way.

When the over-flowings of ungodliness make us afraid, the ministers of religion cannot better discharge their duty of opposing it.

O'VER-FLOWINGLY. adv. [from over-flowing.] Exuberantly; in great abundance. A word not elegant nor in use.

Nor was it his indigence that forced him to make the world; but his goodness pressed him to impart the goods which he so over-flowingly abounds with.

To O'VER-FLY. v. a. [over and fly.] To cross by flight.

Can scarce o'er-fly them in a day and night.

By an over-forwardness in courts to give countenance to frivolous exceptions, though they make nothing to the true merit of the cause, it often happens that causes are not determined according to their merits.

To O'VER-FREIGHT. v. a. pret. over-freighted; part. over-fraught. [over and freight.] To load too heavily; to fill with too great quantity.

A boat over-freighted with people, in rowing down the river, was, by the extreme weather, sunk.

Whispers the o'er-fraught heart and bids it break.

This sinking barque, I shall not live to shew
How I abhor my first rash crime.

To O'VER-GET. v. a. [over and get.] To reach; to come up with.

With six hours hard riding, through so wild places, as it was rather the cunning of my horse sometimes, than of myself, so rightly to hit the way, I over-got them a little before night.

To O'VER-GLANCE. v. a. [over and glance.] To look hastily over.

I have, but with a cursory eye,
O'er-glanc'd the articles.

O'VER-GO. v. a. [over and go.] To surpass; to excel.

Thinking it beyond the degree of humanity to have a wit so far over-going his age, and such dreadful terror proceed from so excellent beauty.

Great nature hath laid down at last,
That mighty birth wherewith so long she went,
And over-went the times of ages past,
Here to lie in upon our soft content.

To O'VER-GORGE. v. a. [over and gorge.] To gorge too much.

Art thou grown great,
And, like ambitious Sylla, over-gorg'd.

O'VER-GREAT. adj. [over and great.] Too great.

Though putting the mind unprepared upon an unusual stress ought to be avoided; yet this must not run it, by an over-great thyness of difficulties, into a lazy sauntering about obvious things.

To O'VERGROW. v. a. [over and grow.]

1. To cover with growth.
Roof and floor, and walls were all of gold,
But over-grown with dust and old decay,
And hid in darkness that none could behold
The hue thereof.

OVE

The woods and defant caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'er-grown,
And all their echo's mourn.

To O'VER-GROW. v. n. To grow beyond the fit or natural size.

One part of his army, with incredible labour, cut a way thorough the thick and over-grown woods, and so came to Solyman.

A huge over-grown ox was grazing in a meadow.

His fortune is not over-grown.
O'VER-GROWTH. n. f. [over and growth.] Exuberant growth.

The over-growth of some complexion,
Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason.

The fortune in being the first in an invention, doth cause sometimes a wonderful over-growth in riches.

His weary wain, and now the frosty night
Her mantle black thro' heaven gan over-hale.

To O'VER-HANG. v. a. [over and hang.] To jut over; to impend over.

Lend the eye a terrible aspect,
Let the brow overwhelm it,
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'er-hang and jutting his confounded base.

Hide me ye forests, in your cleft bow'ts,
Where flows the murr'ring brook, inviting dreams,
Where bord'ring hazle over-hangs the streams.

If you drink tea upon a promontory that over-hangs the sea, it is preferable to an assembly.

To O'VER-HANG. v. n. To jut over.

The rest was craggy cliff, that over-hung
Still as it rose, impossible to climb.

To O'VER-HARDEN. v. a. [over and harden.] To make too hard.

By laying it in the air, it has acquired such a hardness, that it was brittle like over-hardened steel.

The bishop, partly astonished and partly over-joyed with these speeches, was struck into a sad silence for a time.

This love-sick virgin, over-joy'd to find
The boy alone; still follow'd him behind.

O'VER-JOY. n. f. Transport; ecstacy.

The mutual conference that my mind hath had,
Makes me the bolder to salute my king
With ruder terms; such as my wit affords,
And over-joy of heart doth minister.

To O'VER-RIPEN. v. a. [over and ripen.] To make too ripe.

OVE

Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn, Hanging the head with Ceres' plenteous load?

To O'VER-RIPE. v. a. [over and labour.] To take too much pains on any thing; to harass with toil.

She without noise will over-see
His children and his family;
And order all things till he come,
Sweaty and over-labour'd home.

To O'VER-RIPE. v. a. [over and ripe.] To over-burthen.

Thus to throng and over-lade a foul
With love, and then to have a room for fear,
That shall all that controul,
What is it but to rear
Our passions and our hopes on high,
That thence they may decay

The noblest way how to despair and die?

O'VER-LARGE. adj. [over and large.] Larger than enough.

Our attainments cannot be over-large, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthriftily.

O'VER-LARGE. n. f. [over and large.] With exaggeration.

A mean word, now obsolete.

Although I be far from their opinion who write too over-lighly, that the Arabian tongue is in use in two third parts of the inhabited world, yet I find that it extendeth where the religion of Mahomet is professed.

To O'VER-LAY. v. a. [over and lay.]

1. To oppress by too much weight or power.

Some commons are barren, the nature is such,
And some over-layeth the commons too much.

Not only that mercy which keepeth from being over-laid and opprest, but mercy which saveth from being touched with grievous miseries.

When any country is over-laid by the multitude which live upon it, there is a natural necessity compelling it to disburthen itself and lay the load upon others.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and over-laid by the other.

Good laws had been antiquated by the course of time, or over-laid by the corruption of manners.

Our fins have over-laid our hopes.

The strong Emetrius came in Arcite's aid,
And Palamon with odds was over-laid.

To O'VER-LAY. v. a. [over and lay.]

2. To smother with too much or too close covering.

Nor then destroys it with too fond a flay,
Like mothers, which their infants over-lay.

To O'VER-LAY. v. a. [over and lay.]

3. To smother; to crush; to overwhelm.

Ships burnt in fight, or forc'd on rocky shores,
The new-born babies by nurses over-laid.

They quickly stifled and over-laid those infant principles, of piety and virtue, sown by God in their hearts; so that they brought a voluntary darkness and stupidity upon their minds.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for Ptolemy:
A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of ashes that o'er-lays your fire.

The stars, no longer over-laid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the masts,
And upward shoot.

Season the passions of a child with devotion, which seldom dies; though it may seem extinguished for a while, it breaks out as soon as misfortunes have brought the man to himself.

The fire may be covered and over-laid, but cannot be entirely quenched and smothered.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust to the fund of their own reasons, advanced but not over-laid by commerce with books.

To O'VER-LAY. v. a. [over and lay.]

4. To cloud; to over-cast.

Phœbus' golden face it did attain,
As when a cloud his beams doth over-lay.

To O'VER-LAY. v. a. [over and lay.]

5. To cover superficially.

The over-laying of their chapters was of silver, and all the pillars were filled with silver.

By his precept a sanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, over-laid with gold.

To O'VER-LAY. v. a. [over and lay.]

6. To join by something laid over.

Thou us impower'd
To fortify thus far, and over-lay,
With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss.

To O'VER-LEAP. v. a. [over and leap.] To pass by a jump.

A step
On which I must fall down or else o'er-leap,
For in my way it lies.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land;
If daring ships and men prophane,
Th' eternal fences over-leap,
And pass at will the boundless deep.

OVE

OVERLEATHER. n. f. [over and leather.] The part of the shoe that covers the foot.

I have sometimes more feet than shoes; or such shoes as my toes look through the over-leather.

OVERLIGHT. n. f. [over and light.] Too strong light.

An over-light maketh the eyes dark, inasmuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness.

To O'VERLIVE. v. a. [over and live.] To live longer than another; to survive; to out-live.

Mufidorus, who shewed a mind not to over-live Pyrocles, prevailed.

He concludes in hearty prayers,
That your attempts may over-live the hazard
And fearful meeting of their opposite.

To O'VERLIVE. v. n. To live too long.

Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
To deathless pain?

To O'VERLIVE. n. f. [from over-live.] Survivor; that which lives longest.

A peace was concluded, to continue for both the kings lives, and the over-liver of them.

To O'VERLOAD. v. a. [over and load.] To burthen with too much.

The memory of youth is charged and over-loaded, and all they learn is meer jargon.

O'VERLONG. adj. [over and long.] Too long.

I have transgressed the laws of oratory, in making my periods and parentheses over-long.

To O'VERLOOK. v. a. [over and look.]

1. To view from a higher place.

The pile o'er-look'd the town, and drew the sight,
Surpris'd at once with reverence and delight.

I will do it with the same respect to him, as if he were alive, and over-looking my paper while I write.

To O'VERLOOK. v. a. [over and look.]

2. To view fully; to peruse.

Wou'd I had o'er-look'd the letter.

To O'VERLOOK. v. a. [over and look.]

3. To superintend; to over-see.

He was present in person to over-look the magistrates, and to over-awe those subjects with the terror of his sword.

In the greater out parishes many of the poor parishioners through neglect do perish, for want of some heedful eye to over-look them.

To O'VERLOOK. v. a. [over and look.]

4. To review.

The time and care that are required,
To over-look and file, and polish well,
Fright poets from that necessary toil.

To O'VERLOOK. v. a. [over and look.]

5. To pass by indulgently.

This part of good-nature which consists in the pardoning and over-looking of faults, is to be exercised only in doing ourselves justice in the ordinary commerce of life.

In vain do we hope that God will over-look such high contradiction of sinners, and pardon offences committed against the plain convictions of conscience.

To O'VERLOOK. v. a. [over and look.]

6. To neglect; to slight.

Of the two relations, Christ over-looked the meaner, and entitled and denominated them solely from the more honourable.

To O'VERLOOK. v. a. [over and look.]

The original word signifies an over-looker, or one who stands higher than his fellows and over-looks them.

O'VERLOOP. n. f. The same with orlop.

In extremity we carry our ordnance better than we were wont, because our nether over-loops are raised commonly from the water; to wit, between the lower part of the port and the sea.

OVERMASTED. adj. [over and mast.] Having too much mast.

Cloanthus better mann'd, purloin'd him fast,
But his o'er-masted gally check'd his haste.

To O'VERMASTER. v. a. [over and master.] To subdue; to govern.

For your desire to know what is between us,
O'er-master it as you may.

OVE

So sleeps a pilot, whose poor bark is preft
With many a merciless o'er-mast'ring wave. Cragshaw.
Over-mast'ring with a score of drunkards, the only soldiery left about them, or else to comply with all rapines and violences. Milton on Education.
To OVERMA'TCH. v. a. [over and match.] To be too powerful; to conquer; to oppress by superior force.
I have seen a swan
With bootless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves. Shakefp.
Sir William Lucy, with me
Set from our o'er-match'd forces forth for aid. Shakefp.
Affixt, lest I who erst
Thought none my equal, now be over-match'd. Par. Reg.
How great soever our curiosity be, our excess is greater, and does not only over-match, but supplant it. Dec. of Piety.
He from that length of time dire omens drew,
Of English over-match'd, and Dutch too strong,
Who never fought three days but to pursue. Dryden.
It moves our wonder, that a foreign guest Should over-match the most, and match the best. Dryden.
OVERMA'TCH. n. f. [over and match.] One of superior powers;
one not to be overcome.
Spain is no over-match for England, by that which leadeth all men; that is, experience and reason. Bacon.
Eve was his over-match, who self-deceiv'd
And rash, before-hand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with or his own. Milton.
In a little time there will scarce be a woman of quality in Great-Britain, who would not be an over-match for an Irish priest. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 89.
OVER-MEASURE. n. f. [over and measure.] Something given over the due measure.
To OVER-MIX. v. a. [over and mix.] To mix with too much.
Those things these parts o'er-rule, no joys shall know,
Or little pleasure over-mixt with woe. Creech.
OVERMOST. adj. [over and most.] Highest; over the rest in authority. Ans.
OVERMUCH. adj. [over and much.] Too much; more than enough.
It was the custom of those former ages, in their over-much gratitude, to advance the first authors of any useful discovery among the number of their gods. Wilkins.
An over-much use of salt, besides that it occasions thirst and over-much drinking, has other ill effects. Locke.
OVERMUCH. adv. In too great a degree.
The fault which we find in them is, that they over-much abridge the church of her power in these things. Whereupon they re-charge us, as if in these things we gave the church a liberty which hath no limits or bounds. Hooker.
Perhaps
I also erred, in over-much admiring
What seem'd in thee so perfect, that I thought
No evil durst attempt thee. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
Deject not then so over-much thyself,
Who hast of sorrow thy full load besides. Milton.
OVERMUCH. n. f. More than enough.
By attributing over-much to things
Lest excellent, as thou thyself perceiv'st. Milton.
With respect to the blessings the world enjoys, even good men may ascribe over-much to themselves. Grew.
OVERMUCHNESS. n. f. [from over-much.] Exuberance; superabundance.
There are words that do as much raise a stile, as others can depress it; superlatives and over-muchness amplifies. It may be above faith, but not above a mean. Ben. Johnson.
OVERNIGHT. n. f. [over and night.] This seems to be used by Shakespeare as a noun, but by Addison more properly, as I have before placed it, as a noun with a preposition.] Night before bed-time.
If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been o'erta'en. Shakespeare.
Will confesses, that for half his life his head ached every morning with reading men over-night. Addison.
To OVERNAME. v. a. [over and name.] To name in a series.
Over-name them; and as thou namest them I will describe them. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.
To OVEROFFICE. v. a. [over and office.] To lord by virtue of an office.
This might be the fate of a politician which this over-office. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
OVEROFFICIOUS. adj. [over and officious.] Too busy; too importunate.
This is an over-officious truth, and is always at a man's heels; so that if he looks about him, he must take notice of
it. Collier on Human Reason.
To OVERPASS. v. a. [over and pass.]
1. To cross.
I flood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'er-pass,

OVE

When on a sudden Torrifmond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er. Dryden.
What have my Scyllas and my Syrtis done,
When these thy o'er-pass, and those they thum? Dryden.
2. To over-look; to pass with disregard.
The complaint about palms and hymns might as well be over-pass'd without any answer, as it is without any cause brought forth. Hooker, b. v. f. 37.
Remember that Pellean conqueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east
He slightly view'd, and slightly over-pass'd. Milton.
3. To omit in a reckoning.
Arithmetical progression demonstrates how fast mankind would increase, over-passing as miraculous, though in manner, that example of the Israelites who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years, from seventy to sixty thousand able men. Raleigh.
4. To omit; not to receive.
If the grace of him which saveth over-passes, so that the prayer of the church for them be not received, this we may leave to the hidden judgments of righteousness. Hooker.
OVERPASS. part. adj. [from over-pass.] Gone; past.
What canst thou swear by now?
—By time to come,
That thou hast wronged in the time o'er-pass'd. Shakefp.
To OVERPAY. v. a. [over and pay.] To reward beyond the price.
Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will over-pay, and pay again. Shakespeare.
When I have found it.
You have yourself, your kindness over-paid,
He ceases to oblige who can upbraid. Dryden.
Wilt thou with pleasure hear thy lover's strains,
And with one heavily smile o'er-pay his pains. Prior.
To OVERPERCH. n. f. [over and perch.] To fly over.
With love's light wings did I o'er-perch these walls.
For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shakefp.
To OVERPEER. v. a. [over and peer.] To over-look; to hover above. It is now out of use.
The ocean over-peering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'er-bears your officers. Shakefp. Hamlet.
Your Argosies with portly sail,
Do over-peer the petty traffickers,
That curtly to them, do them reverence. Shakefp.
Mountainous error would be too highly heapt,
For truth to o'er-peer. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Thus yields the cedar to the ax's edge,
Whose top branch o'er-peer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'ful wind. Shakefp.
They are invincible by reason of the over-peering mountains that back the one, and slender fortifications of the other to land-ward. Sandys's Tourney.
OVERPLUS. n. f. [over and plus.] Surplus; what remains more than sufficient.
Some other sinners there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise. Hooker's Pref.
A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus remained still in the mortar. L'Estrange.
It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman gives away all which is the overplus of a great fortune. Addi.
To OVERPLY. v. a. [over and ply.] To employ too laboriously.
What supports me, dost thou ask?
The conscience, friend, t' have lost them over-plied.
In liberty's defence. Milton's Par. Lost.
To OVERPOSE. v. a. [over and pose.] To outweigh.
Whether cripples who have lost their thighs will float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others over-posed by the hinder legs; we have not made experiment. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. iv.
The scale
O'er-posed by darkness, lets the night prevail;
And day, that lengthen'd in the summer's height,
Shortens till winter, and is lost in night. Creech.
OVERPOSE. n. f. [from the verb.] Preponderant weight.
Horace, in his first and second book of odes, was still rising, but came not to his meridian till the third. After which his judgment was an over-poise to his imagination.
He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he descended in his fourth by slow degrees. Dryden.
Some over-poise of sway, by turns they share,
In peace the people, and the prince in war. Dryden.
To OVERPOWER. v. a. [over and power.] To be predominant over; to oppress by superiority.
Now in danger try'd, now known in arms
Not to be over-powered. Affixt. Par. Lost.
As much light over-powers the eye, so they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with snow, are wont to complain of too much light. Boyle.
Reason allows none to be confident, but him only who governs

OVE

governs the world, who knows all things, and can do all things; and therefore can neither be surpris'd nor over-powered.
South's Sermons.
After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself outwitted by Caesar; he broke with him, over-powered him in the senate, and caused many unjust decrees to pass against him. Dryden's Dedicat. to Æneid.
Inspiration is, when such an over-powering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it. Watts's Logick.
The historian makes these mountains the standards of the rise of the water; which they could never have been, had they not been standing, when it did so rise and over-power the earth. Woodw. Nat. Hist.
To OVERPRESS. v. a. [over and press.] To bear upon with irresistible force; to overwhelm; to crush.
Having an excellent horse under him, when he was over-pressed by some, he avoided them. Sidney.
Michael's arm main promontories flung,
And over-press'd whole legions weak with sin. Rescomm.
When a prince enters on a war, he ought maturely to consider whether his coffers be full, his people rich by a long peace and free trade, not over-pressed with many bur-thenome taxes. Swift.
To OVERPRIZE. v. a. [over and prize.] To value at too high price.
Parents over-prize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection. Watson.
OVERRANK. n. f. [over and rank.] Too rank.
It produces over-rank binds. Mortimer's Husbandry.
OVERRATE. v. a. [over and rate.] To rate at too much.
While vain shows and scenes you over-rate,
'Tis to be fear'd,
That as a fire the former house o'erthrew,
Machines and tempests will destroy the new. Dryden.
To avoid the temptations of poverty, it concerns us not to over-rate the conveniences of our station, and in estimating the proportion fit for us, to fix it rather too low than too high; for our desires will be proportioned to our wants, real or imaginary, and our temptations to our desires.
Regent.
To OVERREACH. v. a. [over and reach.]
1. To rise above.
The mountains of Olympus, Atho and Atlas, over-reach and surmount all winds and clouds. Raleigh.
Sixteen hundred years after the earth was made, it was overflowed in a deluge of water in such excess, that the floods over-reach'd the tops of the highest mountains. Burnet.
2. To deceive; to go beyond; to circumvent. A sagacious man is said to have a long reach.
What more cruel than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws whereunto he should be subject. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.
I have laid my brain in the sun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross over-reaching. Shakefp.
Shame to be overcome, or over-reach'd,
Would utmost vigour raise, and raise'd unite. Milton.
A man who had been matchless held
In cunning, over-reach'd where least he thought,
To save his credit, and for very spite
Still will be tempting him who foils him still. Milton.
There is no pleasanter encounter than a trial of skill betwixt sharpers to over-reach one another. L'Estrange.
Forbidding oppression, defrauding, and over-reaching one another, perfidiousness and treachery. Tillotson.
Such a principle is ambition, or a desire of fame, by which many vicious men are over-reach'd, and engaged contrary to their natural inclinations in a glorious and laudable course of action. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 255.
John had got an impression that Lewis was so deadly cunning a man, that he was afraid to venture himself alone with him; at last he took heart of grace; let him come up, quoth he, it is but sticking to my point, and he can never overreach me. History of J. Bull.
To OVERREACH. v. n. A horse is said to over-reach, when he brings his hinder feet too far forwards; and strikes his toes against his fore shoes. Farr. Dict.
OVERREACHER. n. f. [from over-reach.] A cheat; a deceiver.
To OVERREAD. v. a. [over and read.] To peruse.
The contents of this is the return of the duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure. Shakespeare.
To OVERRED. v. a. [over and red.] To smear with red.
Pick thy face and over-red thy fear,
Thou lilly liver'd boy. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
To OVERROAST. v. a. [over and roast.] To roast too much.
I was burnt and dried away,
And better 'twere, that both of us did fast,
Since of ourselves, ourselves are choleric,
Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh. Shakespeare.

OVE

To OVERRULE. v. a. [over and rule.]
1. To influence with predominant power; to be superior in authority.
Which humour perceiving to over-rule me, I strive against
it. Sidney.
That which the church by her ecclesiastical authority shall probably think and desire to be true or good, must in con-gruity of reason over-rule all other inferior arguments whatsoever. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.
Except our own private, and but probable resolutions, be by the law of publick determinations over-ruled, we take away all possibility of sociable life in the world. Hooker.
What if they be such as will be over-ruled with some one, whom they dare not displease. Whitgift.
So much his passion and animosity over-ruled his conscience.
Clarendon, b. viii.
A wise man shall over-rule his stars, and have a greater influence upon his own content, than all the constellations and planets of the firmament. Taylor.
He is acted by a passion which absolutely over-rules him;
and so can no more recover himself, than a bowl rolling down an hill stop itself in the midst of its career. South.
'Tis temerity for men to venture their lives upon unequal encounters; unless where they are obliged by an over-ruling impulse of conscience and duty. L'Estrange.
A man may, by the influence of an over-ruling planet, be inclined to lust, and yet by the force of reason overcome that bad influence. Swift.
2. To govern with high authority; to superintend.
Wherefore does he not now come forth and openly overrule, as in other matters he is accustomed? Hayward.
3. To supercede: as in law to over-rule a plea is to reject it as incompetent.
Thirty acres make a farthing land, nine farthings a Cornith acre, and four Cornith acres a knights fee. But this rule is over-ruled to a greater or lesser quantity, according to the fruitfulness or barrenness of the soil. Carew.
To OVERRUN. v. a. [over and run.]
1. To harrafs by incursions; to ravage; to rove over in a hostile manner.
Those barbarous nations that over-ran the world, possessed those dominions, whereof they are now so called. Spenser.
Till the tears the shed,
Like envious floods o'er-ran her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature in the world. Shakefp.
They err, who count it glorious to subdue
By conquest far and wide, to over-run
Large countries, and in field great battles win, Great cities by assault. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The nine
Their fainting foes to shameful flight compell'd,
And with resistless force o'er-ran the field. Dryden.
Gustavus Adolphus could not enter this part of the empire after having over-run most of the rest. Addison.
A commonwealth may be over-run by a powerful neighbour, which may produce bad consequences upon your trade and liberty. Swift's Miscel.
2. To out-run.
Pyrocles being come to sixteen, over-run his age in growth, strength, and all things following it, that not Mufidorus could perform any action on horse or foot more strongly, or deliver that strength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuously. Sidney, b. ii.
We may out-run
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by over-running. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Ahimaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cush.
2 Sam. xviii. 23.
Galileus noteth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faster than the water can follow, the water ga-thereth upon an heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he suppoeth, holding confidently the motion of the earth to be the cause of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean; because the earth over-runneeth the water.
Bacon's Nat. History.
3. To overspread; to cover all over.
With an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nab. i. 8.
This disposition of the elements and the parts of the earth, shews us the footsteps of some kind of ruin which happened in such a way, that at the same time a general flood of waters would necessarily over-run the whole earth.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. To mischief by great numbers; to pester.
To flatter foolish men into a hope of life where there is none, is much the same with betraying people into an opinion, that they are in a virtuous and happy state, when they are over-run with passion and drowned in their lusts. L'Estrange.
Were it not for the incessant labours of this industrious animal, Egypt would be over-run with crocodiles. Addison.
Such provision made, that a country should not want springs as

as were convenient for it; nor be over-run with them, and afford little or nothing else; but a supply every where suitable to the necessities of each climate and region of the globe. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

5. To injure by treading down.
His tears defac'd the surface of the well,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'er-run with wrinkles and deform'd with tears. Addison.

6. Among printers, to be obliged to change the disposition of the lines and words in correcting, by reason of the insertions.
To OVERRUN. v. n. To overflow; to be more than full.
Though you have left me,
Yet still my soul o'er-runs with fondness towards you. Smith.
Cattle in inclosures shall always have fresh pasture, that now is all trampled and over-run. Spenser.

To OVERSEE. v. a. [over and see.]
1. To superintend; to overlook.
And tutors nouriture to oversee. Fairy Queen.
She without noise will oversee
His children and his family. Dryden.

2. To overlook; to pass by unheeded; to omit.
I who resolve to oversee
No lucky opportunity,
Will go to council to advise
Which way t' encounter, or surprise. Hud. p. iii.

OVERSEEN. part. [from oversee.] Mistaken; deceived.
A common received error is never utterly overthrown, till such times as we go from signs unto causes, and shew some manifest root or fountain thereof common unto all, whereby it may clearly appear how it hath come to pass that so many have been overseen. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

They rather observed what he had done, and suffered for the king and for his country, without farther enquiring what he had omitted to do, or been overseen in doing. Clarend.

OVERSEER. n. f. [from oversee.]
1. One who overlooks; a superintendent.
There are in the world certain voluntary overseers of all books, whose censure, in this respect, would fall sharp on us. Hooker, b. v. f. 31.

Jehiel and Azariah were overseers under Cononiah. 2 Chron. xxxi. 13.

To entertain a guest, with what a care
Wou'd he his household ornaments prepare;
Harras his servants, and as overseer stand,
To keep them working with a threatening wand.
Clean all my plate, he cries. Dryden.

2. An officer who has the care of the parochial provision for the poor.
The church-wardens and overseers of the poor might find it possible to discharge their duties, whereas now in the greater out-parishes many of the poorer parishioners, through neglect, do perish for want of some heedful eye to overlook them. Graunt's Bills of Mort.

To OVERSET. v. a. [over and set.]
1. To turn the bottom upwards; to throw off the basis.
The tempests met,
The sailors master'd, and the ship o'er-set. Dryden.
It is forced through the hiatus's at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible perturbation, even when there is not the least breath of wind; over-setting ships in the harbours, and sinking them. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

Would the confederacy exert itself, as much to annoy the enemy, as they do for their defence, we might bear them down with the weight of our armies, and over-set the whole power of France. Addison on the War.

2. To throw out of regularity.
His action against Catiline ruined the consul, when it saved the city; for it so swelled his soul, that ever afterwards it was apt to be over-set with vanity. Dryden.

To OVERSET. v. n. To fall off the basis.
Part of the weight will be under the axle-tree, which will so far counterpoise what is above it, that it will very much prevent the over-setting. Mortimer's Husb.

To OVERSHADE. v. a. [over and shade.] To cover with any thing that causes darkness.
Black night o'er-shade thy day, and death thy life. Shakespeare.
Dark cloudy death o'er-shades his beams of life, Shakespeare.
And he nor sees, nor hears us. Shakespeare.
No great and mighty subject might eclipse or over-shade the imperial power. Bacon.

If a wood of leaves o'er-shade the tree,
In vain the hind shall vex the threshing floor,
For empty chaff and straw will be thy store. Dryden.
Should we mix our friendly talk,
O'er-shaded in that favourite walk;
Both pleas'd with all we thought we wanted. Prior.

To OVERSHADOW. v. a. [over and shadow.]
1. To throw a shadow over any thing.
Weeds choke and over-shadow the corn, and bear it down, or starve and deprive it of nourishment. Bacon.

OVE

Death,
Let the damps of thy dull breath
Over-shadow even the shade,
And make darkness self afraid. Crashaw.

Darkness must over-shadow all his bounds,
Palpable darkness, and blot out three days. Milton.

2. To shelter; to protect; to cover with superiour influence.
My over-shadowing spirit and might, with thee
I send along: ride forth and bid the deep Within appointed bounds. Milton's Par. Lost.

On her should come
The holy ghost, and the power of the highest O'er shadow her. Paradise Regain'd, b. i.

To OVERSHOOT. v. n. [over and shoot.] To fly beyond the mark.
Often it drops, or over-shoots by the disproportions of distance or application. Collier on Human Reason.

To OVERSHOOT. v. a.
1. To shoot beyond the mark.
Every inordinate appetite defeats its own satisfaction, by over-shooting the mark it aims at. Tilleyson.

2. [With the reciprocal pronoun.] To venture too far; to assert too much.
Leave it to themselves to consider, whether they have in this point or not over-shot themselves; which God doth know is quickly done, even when our meaning is most sincere. Hooker, b. ii. f. 8.

In finding fault with the laws I doubt me, you shall much over-shoot yourself, and make me the more dislike your other dislikes of that government. Spenser on Ireland.

For any thing that I can learn of them, you have over-shot yourself in reckoning. Whitgift.

OVERSIGHT. n. f. [from over and sight.]
1. Superintendence.
They gave the money, being told unto them that had the over-sight of the house. 2 Kings xii. 11.

Feed the flock of God, taking the over-sight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly. 1 Pet. v. 2.

2. Mistake; error.
Amongst so many huge volumes, as the infinite pains of St. Augustine have brought forth, what one hath gotten greater love, commendation, and honour, than the book wherein he carefully owns his over-sights and sincerely condemneth them. Hooker's Pref.

His son mark'd this over-sight,
And then mistook reverse of wrong for right. Pope.

To OVERSIZE. v. a. [over and size.]
1. To surpass in bulk.
Those bred in a mountainous country, over-size those that dwell on low levels. Sandy's Journey.

2. [over and size, a compoist with which masons cover walls.] To plaster over.
He thus o'er-siz'd with coagulate gore, Old grandfire Priam seeks. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

To OVERSKIP. v. a. [over and skip.]
1. To pass by leaping.
Presume not ye that are sheep, to make yourselves guides of them that should guide you; neither seek ye to over-skip the fold, which they about you have pitched. Hooker.

2. To pass over.
Mark if to get them she o'er-skip the rest,
Mark if she read them twice, or kifs the name. Donne.

3. To escape.
When that hour o'er-skips me in the day,
Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy fake;
The next ensuing hour some foul mischance Torment me. Shakespeare. Two Gent. of Verona.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i'th' mind;
But then the mind much sufferance does o'er-skip,
When grief hath mates and bearing fellowship. Shakespeare.

To OVERSLEEP. v. a. [over and sleep.] To sleep too long.
To OVERSLIP. v. a. [over and slip.] To pass undone, unnoticed, or unused; to neglect.
The carelessness of the justices in imposing this rate, or the negligence of the constables in collecting it, or the backwardness of the inhabitants in paying the same, over-slipped the time. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

It were injurious to over-slip a noble act in the duke during this employment, which I must celebrate above all his expences. Watson.

To OVERSHOW. v. a. [over and show.] To cover with snow.
These I wielded while my bloom was warm,
Ere age unstrung my nerves, or time o'er-show'd my head. Dryden's Æneis.

OVERSOLD. part. [from oversel.] Sold at too high a price.
Life with ease I can disclaim, Dryden.

OVERSOWN. adv. [over and sown.] Too soon.
The lad may prove well enough, if he over-sown think not too well of himself, and will bear away that he heareth of his elders. Sidney, b. ii.

OVE

OVERSPENT. part. [over and spend.] Wearied; harrassed; forepent. The verb overspend is not used.
Thestylis, wild thyme, and garlick beats,
For harvest-hinds, o'erspent with toil and heats. Dryden.

To OVERSPREAD. v. a. [over and spread.] To cover over; to fill; to scatter over.
Whether they were Spaniards, Gauls, Africans, Gothes,
Some other which did overspread all christendom, it is impossible to affirm. Spenser.

Of the three sons of Noah was the whole earth overspread. Gen. ix. 19.

Darkness Europe's face did overspread,
From lazy cells, where superstition bred. Denham.
Not a deluge that only over-run some particular region; but that overspread the face of the whole earth from pole to pole, and from east to west. Burnet.

To OVERSTAND. v. a. [over and stand.] To stand too much upon conditions.
Her's they shall be, since you refuse the price;
What madman would o'erstand his market twice. Dryd.

To OVERSTARE. v. a. [over and stare.] To stare wildly.
Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buffkin, or an overstaring frowned head. Aischa.

To OVERSTOCK. v. a. [over and stock.] To fill too full; to crowd.
If raiillery had entered the old Roman coins, we should have been overstocked with medals of this nature. Addison.

Some bishop, not overstocked with relations, or attached to favourites, bestows some inconsiderable benefice. Swift.

Since we are so bent upon enlarging our flocks, it may be worth enquiring what we shall do with our wool, in case Barnstable should be ever overstocked. Swift.

To OVERSTOCK. v. a. [over and stock.] To store with too much.
Fishes are more numerous than beasts or birds, as appears by their numerous spawn; and if all these should come to maturity, even the ocean itself would have been long since overstocked with fish. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To OVERSTRAIN. v. n. [over and strain.] To make too violent efforts.
Craffus lost himself, his equipage, and his army, by over-straining for the Parthian gold. Collier.

He wished all painters would imprint this lesson deeply in their memory, that with overstraining and earnestness of finishing their pieces, they often did them more harm than good. Dryden's Dufresney.

To OVERSTRAIN. v. a. To stretch too far.
Confessors were apt to overstrain their privileges, in which St. Cyprian made a notable stand against them. Ayliffe.

To OVERSWAY. v. a. [over and sway.] To over-rule; to bear down.
When they are the major part of a general assembly, then their voices being more in number, must over-sway their judgments who are fewer. Hooker.

Great command o'er-sways our order. Shakespeare.

To OVERSWELL. v. a. [over and swell.] To rise above.
Fill, Lucius, fill the wine o'er-swells the cup;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. Shakespeare.

When his banks the prince of rivers, Po,
Doth o'er-swells, he breaks with hideous fall. Fairfax.

OVERT. adj. [overt, Fr.] Open; publick; apparent.
To vouch this, is no proof,
Without more certain and more overt test,
Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods. Shakespeare.

Overt and apparent virtues bring forth praise; but there be secret and hidden virtues that bring forth fortune; certain deliveries of a man's self.
My repulse at Hull, was the first overt essay to be made how patiently I could bear the loss of my kingdoms. K. Charles.

The design of their destruction may have been projected in the dark; but when all was ripe, their enemies proceeded to so many overt acts in the face of the nation, that it was obvious to the meanest. Swift.

Whereas human laws can reach no farther than to restrain the overt action, religion extends to the secret motions of the soul. Rogers, Sermon. 17.

OVERTLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Openly.
To OVERTAKE. v. a. [over and take.]
1. To catch any thingy pursuit; to come up to something going before.
We durst not continue longer so near her confines, lest her plagues might suddenly overtake us before we did cease to be partakers with her sins. Hooker.

If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been overtaken; and yet she writes Pursuit would be but vain. Shakespeare.

I shall see
The winged vengeance overtake such children. Shakespeare.

The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil. Ex. xv. 9.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will out-strip hers, as bullets down before
A later bullet may overtake, the powder being more. Donne.

OVE

To thy wishes move a speedy pace,
Or death will soon overtake thee in the chace. Dryden.

How must he tremble for fear vengeance should overtake him, before he has made his peace with God? Rogers.

2. To take by surprize.
If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness. Gal. vi. 1.

To OVERTAKE. v. a. [over and take.] To burthen with too heavy duties or injunctions.
That office is performed by the parts with difficulty, because they were overtaken. Harvey on Consumptions.

To OVERTAKE. v. a. [over and take.] To tax too heavily.
To OVERTHROW. v. a. [over and throw; preter. over-threw; part. overthrown.]
1. To turn upside down.
Pittacus was a wife and valiant man; but his wife over-threw the table when he had invited his friends. Taylor.

2. To throw down; to ruin; to demolish.
When the walls of Thebes he overthrew,
His fatal hand my royal father slew. Dryden.

3. To defeat; to conquer; to vanquish.
Our endeavour is not so much to overthrow them with whom we contend, as to yield them just and reasonable causes. Hooker, b. v. f. 1.

To Sujah next, your conquering army drew,
Him they surpris'd, and easily o'erthrew. Dryden.

4. To destroy; to mischief; to bring to nothing.
She found means to have us accused to the king, as though we went about some practice to overthrow him in his own estate. Sidney, b. ii.

Here's Glo'ster
O'er-charging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to o'erthrow religion. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.

Thou walkest in peril of thy overthrowing. Ecc. xiii. 13.

God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness. Prov. xxi. 12.

OVERTHROW. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The state of being turned upside down.
2. Ruin; destruction.
Of those christian oratories, the overthrow and ruin is desired, not by infidels, pagans, or Turks, but by a special refined sect of christian believers. Hooker, b. v. f. 17.

They return again into Florida, to the murder and overthrow of their own countrymen. Abbott.

I serve my mortal foe,
The man who caus'd my country's overthrow. Dryden.

3. Defeat; discomfiture.
From without came to mine eyes the blow,
Whereto mine inward thoughts did faintly yield;
Both these conspir'd poor reason's overthrow; Sidney.
False in myself, thus have I lost the field.

Quiet soul, depart;
For I have seen our enemies overthrown. Shakespeare.

From these divers Scots feared more harm by victory than they found among their enemies by their overthrow. Hayw.

Poor Hannibal is maul'd,
The theme is giv'n, and frait the council's call'd,
Whether he should to Rome directly go,
To reap the fruit of the dire overthrow. Dryden.

4. Degradation.
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not 'till then he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little. Shakespeare.

OVERTHROWER. n. f. [from overthrow.] He who overthrows.
OVERTHWART. adj. [over and thwart.]
1. Opposite; being over against.
We whisper, for fear our overthwart neighbours should hear us, and betray us to the government. Dryd.

2. Crossing any thing perpendicularly.
3. Perverse; adverse; contradictory.
Two or three acts disposed them to cross and oppose any proposition; and that overthwart humour was discovered to rule in the breasts of many. Clarendon.

OVERTHWARTLY. adv. [from overthwart.]
1. Across; transversely.
The brawn of the thigh shall appear, by drawing small hair strokes from the hip to the knee, shadowed again overthwartly. Peacham on Drawing.

2. Pervicaciously; perversely.
OVERTHWARTNESS. n. f. [from overthwart.] Pervicacity; perverseness.

OVERTOOK. pret. and part. pass. of overtake.
To OVERTOO. v. a. [over and top.]
1. To rise above; to raise the head above.
Pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
T' o'er-top old Pelion or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

In the dance the graceful goddess leads
The quire of nymphs, and overtops their heads. Dryd.

2. To excel; to surpass.
Who ever yet
Have flood to charity, and display'd th' effects

Of disposition gentle and of wisdom,
O'eropping woman's power. Shakeſp. Hen. VIII.
 As far as the foul o'erſeeps the body, ſo far its pains, or rather mournful ſenſations, exceed thoſe of the carcaſe. Harv.
 3. To obſcure; to make of leſs importance by ſuperior excellence.
 Whereas he had been heretofore an arbiter of Europe, he ſhould now grow leſs, and be over-topped by ſo great a conjunction. Bacon's Henry VII.
 One whom you love,
 Had champion kill'd, or trophy won,
 Rather than thus be overtopp'd,
 Wou'd you not wiſh his laurels cropt? Swift.
 To OVERTRIP. v. a. [over and trip.] To trip over; to walk lightly over.
 In ſuch a night,
 Did Thiſbe fearfully o'ertrip the dew,
 And ſaw the lion's ſhadow ere himſelf,
 And ran diſmay'd away. Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.
OVERTURE. n. f. [ouverture, French.]
 1. Opening; diſcloſure; diſcovery.
 You had only in your ſilent judgment try'd it, Without more overture. Shakeſp. Win. Tale.
 2. Propoſal; ſomething offered to conſideration.
 Mac Murugh moved Henry to invade Ireland, and made an overture unto him for obtaining of the ſovereign lordſhip thereof. Davies on Ireland.
 All theſe fair overtures, made by men well eſteem'd for honeſt dealing, could not take place. Hayward.
 We with open breaſt
 Stand ready to receive them, if they like
 Our overture, and turn not back perverse. Milton.
 The earl of Pembroke, who abhorred the war, promoted all overtures towards accommodation with great importunity. Clarendon.
 If a convenient ſupply offers itſelf to be ſeiſed by force or gain'd by fraud, human nature perſuades us to hearken to the inviting overture. Rogers, Sermon 2.
 Suppoſe five hundred men propoſing, debating, and voting, according to their own little or much reaſon, abundance of indigeſted and abortive, many pernicious and fooliſh overtures would ariſe. Swift.
 To OVERTURN. v. a. [over and turn.]
 1. To throw down; to topple down; to ſubvert; to ruin.
 He is wiſe in heart and mighty in ſtrength—which removeth the mountains, and overturneth them in his anger. Job ix. 5.
 Theſe will ſometimes overturn, and ſometimes ſwallow up towns, and make a general confuſion in nature. Burnet.
 This he obviates, by ſaying we ſee all the ideas in God; which is an anſwer to this objection, but ſuch an one as overturns his whole hypotheſis, and renders it uſeleſs and as unintelligible, as any of thoſe he has laid aſide. Locke.
 If we will not encourage publick works of beneſcence, till we are ſecure that no form ſhall overturn what we help to build; there is no room left for charity. Atterbury.
 A monument of deathleſs fame,
 A woman's hand overturns. Rowe.
 2. To over-power; to conquer.
 Pain exceſſive overturns all patience. Milton.
OVERTURNER. n. f. [from overturn.] Subverter.
 I have brought before you a robber of the publick treaſure, an overturner of law and juſtice, and the deſtruction of the Sicilian province. Swift.
 To OVERVALUE. v. a. [over and value.] To rate at too high a price.
 We have juſt cauſe to ſtand in ſome fear, leaſt by thus overvaluing their ſermons they make the price and eſtimation of ſcripture, otherwiſe notified, to fall. Hooker.
 To OVERVEIL. v. a. [over and veil.] To cover;
 The day begins to break, and night is fled;
 Whoſe pitchy mantle overveil'd the earth. Shakeſp.
 To OVERVOTE. v. a. [over and vote.] To conquer by plurality of votes.
 The lords and commons might be content to be overvoted by the major part of both houſes, when they had uſed each their own freedom. King Charles.
 To OVERWATCH. v. n. [over and watch.] To ſubdue with long want of reſt.
 Morpheus is diſpatch'd;
 Which done, the lazy monarch overwatch'd,
 Down from his propping elbow drops his head,
 Diſſolv'd in ſleep, and ſhrinks within his bed. Dryden.
OVERWATCHED. adj. Tired with too much watching.
 While the dog hunted in the river, he had withdrawn himſelf to paſſy with ſleep his over-watched eyes. Sidney.
OVERWEAK. adj. [over and weak.] Too weak; too feeble.
 Paternal perſuaſions, after mankind began to forget the original giver of life, became in all overweak to reſiſt the fiſt inclination of evil; or after, when it became habitual, to conſtrain it. Raleigh's Hiſt. of the World.

OVE

 To OVERWEARY. adj. [over and weary.] To ſubdue with fatigue.
 Might not Palinurus fall aſleep and drop into the ſea, having been over-weary'd with watching. Dryden.
 To OVERWEATHER. v. a. [over and weather.] To batter by violence of weather.
 How like a younker or a prodigal,
 The ſcarfed bark puts from her native bays,
 Hugg'd and embraced by the ſtrumpet wind!
 How like the prodigal doth ſhe return,
 With over-weather'd ribs and ragged ſails,
 Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the ſtrumpet wind. Shakeſp.
 To OVERWHEEN. v. n. [over and ween.] To think too highly;
 to think with arrogance.
 To reach beyond the truth of any thing in thought;
 eſpecially in the opinion of a man's ſelf. Hammer.
 Oft have I ſeen a hot o'erveen cur,
 Run back and bite, becauſe he was with-held. Shakeſp.
 My maſter hath ſent for me, to whoſe feeling ſorrows I might be ſome allay, or I o'erween to think ſo. Shakeſp.
 Laſt hence theſe overweening rags of France,
 Theſe famiſh'd beggars, weary of their lives. Shakeſp.
 My eye's too quick, my heart o'erween too much,
 Unleſs my hand and ſtrength could equal them. Shakeſp.
 Take heed of overweening, and compare
 Thy peacock's feet with thy gay peacock's train;
 Study the beſt and higheſt things that are,
 But of thyſelf an humble thought retain. Davies.
 They that overween,
 And at thy growing virtues fret their ſpleen,
 No anger find in thee. Milton.
 He might have learnt
 Leſs overweening, ſince he fail'd in Job,
 Whoſe conſtant perfeverance overcame
 What'er his cruel malice could invent. Par. Reg.
 No man is ſo bold, raſh, and overweening of his own works, as an ill painter and a bad poet. Dryden.
 Enthuſiaſm, though founded neither on reaſon nor revelation, but riſing from the conceits of a warmed or overweening brain, works more powerfully on the perſuaſions and actions of men, than either or both together. Locke.
 Men of fair minds and not given up to the overweening of ſelf-flattery, are frequently guilty of it: and, in many caſes, one with amazement hears the arguments, and is aſtoniſh'd at the obſtinacy of a worthy man who yields not to the evidence of reaſon. Locke.
 Now enters overweening pride,
 And ſcandal ever gaping wide. Swift.
OVERWEENINGLY. adv. [from overween.] With too much arrogance; with too high an opinion.
 To OVERWEIGH. v. a. [over and weigh.] To preponderate.
 Sharp and ſubtle diſcourſes of wit, procure many times very great applauſe, but being laid in the balance with that which the habit of ſound experience delivereth, they are over-weighed. Hooker, b. v. f. 7.
 My unſoil'd name, the auſtereneſs of my life,
 Will ſo your accusation overweigh,
 That you ſhall ſtifle in your own report. Shakeſp.
OVERWEIGHT. n. f. [over and weight.] Preponderance.
 Sinking into water is but an overweight of the body, in reſpect of the water. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.
 To OVERWHELM. v. a. [over and overwhelm.]
 1. To cruſh underneath ſomething violent and weighty.
 What age is this, where honeſt men,
 Plac'd at the helm,
 A ſea of ſome foul mouth or pen,
 Shall overwhelm? Ben. Jonſon.
 Back do I toſs theſe treaſons to thy head,
 With the hell hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Shakeſp.
 How trifling an apprehenſion is the ſhame of being laugh'd at by fools, when compar'd with that everlaſting ſhame and aſtoniſhment which ſhall overwhelm the ſinner, when he ſhall appear before the tribunal of Chriſt. Rogers.
 Blind they rejoice, though now even now they fall;
 Death haſtes again; one hour o'erwhelms them all. Pope.
 2. To overlook gloomily.
 Let the brow o'erwhelm it,
 As fearfully as doth a galled rock
 O'erhang and jutty his confounded baſe. Shakeſp.
 An apothecary late I noted,
 In tatter'd weeds with overwhelming brows, Culling of ſimples. Shakeſp. Rom. and Juliet.
OVERWHELMINGLY. adv. [from overwhelm.] In ſuch a manner as to overwhelm.
 Men ſhould not tolerate themſelves one minute in any known ſin, nor impudently betray their ſouls to ruin for that which they call light and trivial; which is ſo indeed in reſpect

OUN

reſpect of the acquieſt, but overwhelmingly ponderous in regard of the pernicious conſequents. Decay of Piety.
OVERWISE. v. a. [over and wiſe.] Wiſe to affectation.
 Make not thyſelf overwiſe. Ecl. vii. 16.
OVERWROUGHT. part. [over and wrought.]
 1. Labour'd too much.
 Apelles ſaid of Protegenes, that he knew not when to give over. A work may be overwrought, as well as underwrought: too much labour often takes away the ſpirit, by adding to the poliſhing; ſo that there remains nothing but a dull correctneſs, a piece without any conſiderable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden's Duſſyſay.
 2. Worked all over.
 Of Gothic ſtructure was the northern ſide,
O'erwrought with ornaments of barbarous pride. Pope.
 3. It has in Shakeſpeare a ſenſe which I know not well how to reconcile to the original meaning of the word, and therefore conclude it miſprinted for overwrought; that is, overreached or cheated.
 By ſome device or other,
 The villain is o'erwrought of all my money:
 They ſay this town is full of cozenage. Shakeſp.
OVERWORN. part. [over and worn.]
 1. Worn out; ſubdued by toil.
 With watching overworn, with cares oppreſt,
 Unhappy I had laid me down to reſt. Dryden.
 2. Spoiled by time.
 The jealous o'erworn widow and herſelf,
 Are mighty goſſips in this monarchy. Shakeſp.
OVERYEARED. adj. [over and year.] Too old.
 Among them dwelt
 A maid, whoſe fruit was ripe, not overyeared. Fairfax.
OVERZEALOUS. adj. [over and zealous.] Too zealous.
 It is not of ſuch weighty neceſſity to determine one way or the other, as ſome overzealous for or againſt the imma-teriality of the ſoul, have been forward to make the world believe. Locke.
OUGHT. n. f. [aphre, that is, a whit, Saxon. This word is therefore more properly written ought. See AUGHT.] Any thing; not nothing.
 For ought that I can underſtand, there is no part but the bare Engliſh pale, in which the Iriſh have not the greateſt footing. Spencer on Ireland.
 He aſked him if he ſaw ought.
 To do ought good never will be our taſk;
 But ever to do ill our ſole delight. Milton's Par. Loſt.
 Univerſal Lord! be bounteous ſtill
 To give us only good; and if the night
 Have gather'd ought of evil, or conceal'd, Diſperſe it, as now light diſpels the dark. Milton.
OUGHT. verb imperf. [This word the etymologiſts make the preterite of owe, but it has often a preſent ſignification.]
 1. [Preterite of owe.] Owed; was bound to pay; have been indebted.
 Apprehending the occaſion, I will add a continuance to that happy motion, and beſides give you ſome tribute of the love and duty I long have ought you. Spelman.
 This blood which men by treaſon ſought,
 That follow'd, fir, which to myſelf I ought. Dryden.
 2. To be oblig'd by duty.
 Judges ought to remember, that their office is to interpret law, and not to make or give law.
 Morals critics ought to ſhow. Pope.
 She acts juſt as the ought,
 But never, never reach'd one generous thought. Pope.
 3. To be fit; to be neceſſary.
 If grammar ought to be taught, it muſt be to one that can ſpeak the language already. Locke.
OVIFORM. adj. [ovum and forma, Lat.] Having the ſhape of an egg.
 This notion of the mundane egg, or that the world was oviform, hath been the ſenſe and language of all antiquity. Burn.
OVIPAROUS. adj. [ovum and pario, Latin.] Bringing forth eggs; not viviparous.
 That fiſhes and birds ſhould be oviparous, is a plain ſign of providence.
 Birds and oviparous creatures have eggs enough at firſt conceiv'd in them to ſerve them for many years laying. Ray.
OUNCE. n. f. [once, Fr. uncia, Latin.] A name of weight of different value in different denominations of weight. In troy weight, an ounce is twenty penny-weight; a penny-weight, twenty-four grains.
 The blood he hath loſt,
 Which I dare vouch is more than that he hath
 By many an ounce, he dropt it for his country. Shakeſp.
 A ſponge dry weighteth one ounce twenty-fix grains; the ſame ſponge being wet, weighteth fourteen ounces fix drams and three quarters. Bacon.
OUNCE. n. f. [once, French; anza, Spaniſh.] A lynx; a panther.

OUT

The ounce,
 The libbard, and the tiger, as the mole
 Riſing, the crumbled earth above them threw In hillocks. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. vii.
OUTPHE. n. f. [auſſ, Teutonic.] A fairy; a goblin.
 Nan Page and my little ſon, we'll drefs
 Like urchins, outphes, and fairies, green and white. Shak.
OUTPHEN. n. f. [from outph.] Elfiſh.
 Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,
 Ye moon ſhine revellers and ſhades of night,
 You outphen heirs of fixed deſtiny,
 Attend your office. Shakeſpeare.
OUR. pron. poſſ. [unc, Saxon.]
 1. Pertaining to us; belonging to us.
 You ſhall Lead our firſt battle, brave Macduff, and we Shall take upon us what elſe remains. Shakeſpeare.
 Our wit is given almighty God to know;
 Our will is given to love him being known;
 But God could not be known to us below,
 But by his works which through the ſenſe are ſhown.
 So in our little world this ſoul of ours
 Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
 Doth uſe on divers objects divers powers,
 And ſo are her effects diversify'd. Davies.
 2. When the ſubſtantive goes before, it is written ours.
 Edmund, whoſe virtue in this inſtance,
 So much commands itſelf, you ſhall be ours. Shakeſp.
 Thou that haſt faſhion'd twice this ſoul of ours,
 So that the is by double title thine,
 Be ours, who e'er thou art, Davies.
 Forget the Greeks. Denham.
 Taxallan, ſhook by Montezuma's powers,
 Has, to reſiſt his forces, call'd in ours. Dryden.
 Reading furniſhes the mind only with materials of knowledge, it is thinking makes what we read ours: it is not enough to cram ourſelves with a great load of collections, unleſs we chew them over again, they will not give us ſtrength. Locke.
 Their organs are better diſpoſed than ours, for receiving grateful impreſſions from ſenſible objects. Atterbury.
OURSELVES. reciprocal pronoun. [the plural of myſelf.]
 1. We; not others.
 We ourſelves might diſtinctly number in words a great deal farther than we uſually do, would we find out but ſome fit denominations to ſignify them by. Locke.
 2. Us; not others, in the oblique caſes.
 Safe in ourſelves, while on ourſelves we ſtand,
 The ſea is ours, and that defends the land. Dryden.
OURSELF is uſed in the regal ſtile.
 To make ſociety
 The ſweeter welcome, we will keep ourſelf Till ſupper-time alone. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
 We ourſelf will follow
 In the main battle. Shakeſpeare.
 Not ſo much as a treaty can be obtained, unleſs we would denude ourſelf of all force to defend us. Clarendon.
OUSE. n. f. Tanners bark.
OUSEL. n. f. [orle, Saxon.] A blackbird.
 The merry lark her mattins ſings aloft,
 The thruſh replies, the mavis deſcant plays,
 The ouſel thrills, the ruddock warbles ſoft;
 So goodly all agree, with ſweet conſent,
 To this day's merriment. Spencer.
 The ouſel cock ſo black of hue,
 With orange tawney bill. Shakeſpeare.
 Thrufhes and ouſels, or blackbirds, were commonly ſold for three pence a-piece. Hakewill on Providence.
 To OUST. v. a. [ouſter, oter, French.] To vacate; to take away.
 Multiplication of actions upon the caſe were rare formerly, and thereby wager of law ouſted, which diſcouraged many ſuits. Hale.
OUR. adv. [ur, Saxon; ut, Dutch.]
 1. Not within.
 The gown with ſtiff embroid'ry ſhining,
 Looks charming with a lighter lining;
 The our, if Indian figures ſtain,
 The inſide muſt be rich and plain. Prior.
 2. It is generally oppoſed to in.
 That blind rationally boy, that abuſes every one's eyes becauſe his own are our, let him be judge how deep I am in love. Shakeſp.
 3. In a ſtate of diſcloſure.
 Fruits and grains are half a year in concocting; whereas leaves are our and perfect in a month. Bacon.
 4. Not in confinement or concealment.
 Nature her cuſtom holds,
 Let flame ſay what it will; when theſe are gone,
 The woman will be our. Shakeſpeare.
 5. From

OUT

5. From the place or house.
Out with the dog, says one; what cur is that? says another: whip him out, says the third. Shaksp.
6. From the inner part.
This is the place where the priests shall boil the trespass offering; that they bear it not out into the utter court, to sanctify the people. Ezek. xlv. 20.
7. Not at home.
In a state of extinction.
8. In a state of extinction.
It was great ignorance, Gloster's eyes being out,
To let him live; where he arrives he moves
All hearts. Shaksp. King Lear.
This candle burns not clear; 'tis I must snuff it,
Then out it goes. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
Bid thy ceremony give thee cure!
Thinkst thou the fire will go out
With titles blown from adulation. Shaksp. Hen. V.
Her candle goeth not out by night. Prov. xxxi. 18.
9. In a state of being exhausted.
When the butt is out we will drink water, not a drop before;
bear up and board them. Shaksp. Tempst.
Large coals are properest for dressing meat; and when they are out, if you happen to miscarry in any dish, lay the fault upon want of coals. Swift.
10. Not in an affair.
So we'll live and hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shak.
The knave will stick by thee: he will not out, he is true bred. Shaksp. Henry IV. p. ii.
I am not so as I should be;
But I'll ne'er out. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.
11. To the end.
Hear me out;
He reap'd no fruit of conquest, but these blessings. Dryd.
You have still your happiness in doubt,
Or else 'tis past, and you have dream'd it out. Dryden.
The tale is long, nor have I heard it out;
Thy father knows it all. Addison's Cato.
12. Loudly; without restraint.
At all I laugh, he laughs no doubt;
The only difference is, I dare laugh out. Pope.
13. Not in the hands of the owner.

OUT

3. A public sale; an auction.
OUTDARE. v. a. [out and dare.] To venture beyond.
 Myself, my brother, and his son,
 That brought you home, and boldly did outdare
 The dangers of the time.
OUTDATE. v. a. [out and date.] To antedate.
 Works and deeds of the law, in those places, signify legal obedience, or circumcision, and the like judaical outdated ceremonies; faith, the evangelical grace of giving up the whole heart to Christ, without any such judaical observances.
OUTDO. v. a. [out and do.] To excel; to surpass; to perform beyond another.
 He hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly.
 What brave commander is not proud to see Thy brave Melantius in his gallantry?
 Our greatest ladies love to see their scorn
 Outdone by thine, in what themselves have worn.
 Heav'nly love shall outdo hellish hate,
 Giving to death, and dying to redeem,
 So dearly to redeem what hellish hate
 So easily destroy'd.
 Here let these who boast in mortal things,
 Learn how their greatest monuments of fame,
 And strength, and art, are easily outdone
 By spirits reprobate.
 An impostor outdoes the original.
 Now all the gods reward and bless my son;
 Thou hast this day thy father's youth outdone.
 I must confess the encounter of that day
 Warm'd me indeed, but quite another way;
 Not with the fire of youth, but generous rage,
 To see the glories of my youthful age
 So far outdone.
 The boy's mother desisted for not having read a system of logick, outdoes him in it.
 I grieve to be outdone by Gay,
 In my own humorous biting way.
OUTDWEIL. v. a. [out and dwell.] To stay beyond.
 He outdwell his hour,
 For lovers ever run before the clock.
OUTER. adj. [from out.] That which is without; opposed to inner.
 The kidney is a conglomerated gland only in the outer part: for the inner part, whereof the papillae are composed, is muscular.
OUTERLY. adv. [from outer.] Towards the outside.
 In the lower jaw, two twigs like those of a boar, standing outerly, an inch behind the cutters.
OUTERMOST. adj. [superlative, from outer.] Remotest from the middle.
 Try if three bells were made one within another, and air betwixt each; and the outermost bell were chimed with a hammer, how the sound would differ from a single bell.
 The outermost corpuscles of a white body, have their various little surfaces of a specular nature.
OUTFACE. v. a. [out and face.] To brave; to bear down by show of magnanimity; to bear down with impudence.
 We shall have old swearing
 That they did give the rings away to men;
 But we'll outface them and out-swear them too.
 Dost thou come hither
 To outface me with leaping in her grave?
 Be buried quick with her, and so will I.
 Be fire with fire;
 Threaten the threaten; and outface the brow
 Of bragging horror.
